Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to spend $482,000, and they want to reappropriate $77,000, and appropriate $405,000 to provide a continuance of this exhibit. Now, this is the first time in my recollection—and I am getting old—that an exhibit has been held over. This is a hold-over to the second year. It does seem as if we should show a little sense in the House of Representatives and vote down this rule and stop such things as this coming up. It will cost the country practically a half million dollars. It was a nice exhibit. It did good work, but it has been done, and we should not encourage the expenditure of more money any longer.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. By voting down this rule now we will save reappropriating $77,000, and we will save $2,500 for the limousine, and also we will save $405,000 more?

Mr. TABER. Practically a half million dollars, but we may have a deficit to look after next year.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us vote down the rule and stop the matter now, and save this $484,500.

Mr. TABER. Is it not time we did something in the nature of economy and stop spending money?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Did the gentleman say a hold-over or a hold-up?

Mr. TABER. A hold-over; maybe you might say a hang-over. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. What were the exhibits of the Department of Agriculture which cost some $80,000?

Mr. TABER. They were exhibits telling how certain things were not fit for human consumption or were not proper medicines, although it was demonstrated in some cases that they were.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman from New York that if they would send the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture to the fair and exhibit them there I would vote for this expenditure.

Mr. TABER. If they would take them there and keep them there I would vote for the appropriation; but I would not vote for it unless the bill absolutely provided that they should be taken there and kept there where folks could look at them. I do not think that they ought to be turned loose anywhere else.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, the debate on the pending rule has been conducted in a spirit of jest. Obviously, $405,000 is not going to bankrupt the American people. If they are not already bankrupted by governmental expenditures, another $405,000 will not finish the job. But this is beside the question. The principle of right and wrong is involved, and right and wrong are not to be measured by amounts of money.

Four hundred thousand dollars represents $950 for each congressional district. Now, reaching down into the pockets of the people of your district for $950 will not, of course, impoverish them, but have you and I any moral right here to vote to take $950 away from our respective constituencies and give it to this fair at Chicago?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I should like to ask how much that is per person?

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

We had the fair for 1 year. Why is it being held over for another year? Obviously because it was a paying proposition and Chicago wants to hold it over again. I say that if Chicago wants to hold the fair over let the city go ahead and take care of the expense of this Government exhibit or not have it, just as they like. Chicago is a fine town. I am glad to see her hotels prosper and I am glad to see them getting out of bankruptcy, but I can see no occasion for you and I voting today to take $950 away from our respective constituencies to carry on this fair for another year.

There is no merit involved in it. If there were some real merit for this appropriation, they would itemize what it was to be spent for; but here is the report, and all it carries is the recommendation that the bill do pass. Not one item for which this money is to be spent is itemized, none at all.

Mr. SABATH. A Senate report accompanies the bill; this is a Senate bill.

Mr. McGUGIN. I am talking about the House report. When we get right down to it there is just one reason for you on the Democratic side to pass this bill, and that is because you want to do a little political favor for your colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]; and there is but one reason which would justify Members on the minority side in voting for this bill, and that is because they want to do a little political favor for their colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. We have, however, no business carrying on that kind of log-rolling and pork-barrelling with the people's money.

If we are going to make this appropriation today, then there can be no objection to any appropriation that could come before this House. If this appropriation is justified, then the Congress would be justified in making an appropriation of $5,000 to every county fair, pumpkin show, cotton carnival, and rodeo in the United States which will be held this year.

This fair is being held the second year primarily for the commercial benefit of Chicago. Why should they not pay the cost of this exhibit out of the gate receipts instead of asking the taxpayers of this country to pay for it? The principle is not right; and the wrong in taking $950 from our respective constituencies is just as great as if we took $950,000 away from each of them.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this debate I had not intended to participate in it, because my section of the country has no particular interest.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not proceed until the House is in order. Once already today a speaker left the floor of the House because the Members did not maintain order. I have no disposition to do that, because I have only a few words to say with reference to this matter, but I do want to say in passing, Mr. Speaker, that I regard it as a matter of supreme importance when matters are being debated upon the floor of the House that we should have such a show of attention and order in the Chamber that a man may be heard.

Now, getting back to this proposition, as I say, I have no personal interest in it. My section of the country is not interested in it, although a great many people from my district visited the fair and reported that they had a very enjoyable, a very instructive visit. I do not, however, want this issue before the House at this time to be beclouded by triviality and the introduction of humorous remarks. I regard this as a serious proposition.

The Chicago fair is not only a matter of national interest to our people but it is a great international exposition. Our Government invited our neighbors from abroad to participate in it. It is a matter that has involved the expenditure of tremendous sums of money to prepare, to inaugurate and run. I am informed that it met with great success during the period last year when it was running.

Here is a proposition that is presented to the House today. The Rules Committee has brought in this resolution to consider the bill. The gentleman from Texas asks you to vote down the rule and dispose of the matter, but I do not believe that it is going to be the disposition of this House to take that sort of summary action on a matter of this importance. I may say that primarily I have no personal or sectional interest in the continuation of this fair, and the reason that I voted to bring out this rule is because the President of the United States, and I presume he acted advisedly in making this recommendation to the Congress of the United States after a full consideration of all the factors involved in the continuation of this fair, has earnestly and seriously recommended to this Congress that the Government continue its exhibits there. The fair is going to be opened shortly. May I say to the proponents of this proposition that in my opinion they are asking for too large a sum of money.

Mr. BLANTON. Since the gentleman mentioned me, will he yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the appropriation of $405,000 a legislative function or an executive function of government?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That question answers itself.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a legislative function. It is for us to decide, not for the President to decide.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely; but I think the gentleman from Texas, under the circumstances, should be willing to trust the legislative judgment upon the merits of the bill itself. This is a matter of great interest to a number of Members on the floor of the House. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I am going to support his amendment to cut this appropriation in half.

Mr. BLANTON. If it could be assured that that would be done I think it would have quite an effect on the action of a great many Members here, for that would save over $200,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot say how this appeals to other gentlemen. I am simply expressing my own views.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood from the gentleman from Illinois that that was going to be done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Personally, I trust that it will be done. I particularly appeal to my associates upon the Democratic side of the House, in view of the way in which this matter has been presented, coming here at the direct request of the President of the United States, who is interested, not personally but on behalf of all the people of this country, in this great educational exhibition. Surely the Members can vote for the rule and then give the Committee of the Whole an opportunity to pass judgment upon the amount involved or defeat the bill entirely.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This is not an appropriation. It is only an authorization for an appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This goes to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And we will subsequently have to pass on whether or not we will appropriate the money.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. In the Commissioner's office last year they spent $493,618.05. For the Commissioner's office this year they are asking $172,954. Can the gentleman imagine what the Commissioner wants that amount of money for in the conduct of his office?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I could imagine what they want it for, but I have not been to the exposition. I went to the great World's Fair in 1893, a gawky, green, country boy at that time. I saw enough there then to last me a lifetime, so I have not been back to this exposition.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I prepared an amendment cutting this down to $200,000, but, with the amount that was left over from last year, perhaps the amendment does not go far enough.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think, when we get into the committee, we can thrash that whole matter out, but I do appeal to the Members to adopt this rule and give the House an opportunity to consider this matter on its merits. If you decide it is not worthy of your support, you can then vote against the bill.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It has come to our attention over here that the gentleman from Illinois has stated that this might be cut down to $200,000. From what I hear over here we might be inclined to support such a move.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not want to put the gentleman from Illinois in the arbitrary attitude now of answering the question, but, as far as I am concerned, I shall endeavor to reduce the appropriation to the figure suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for a question only.

Mr. TRUAX. Something was mentioned about the fact that our State fairs get no assistance from the Government. Having been connected with the State fair of my State for 6 years, may I say that each year we had Government exhibits, and the State of Ohio had to pay all the expenses in connection with those exhibits, including transportation and insurance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman now ask a question?

Mr. TRUAX. Does not the gentleman think if we adopt this as a sort of a permanent policy that our State fairs, of which there is a great one in the gentleman's own State, ought to be likewise helped?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot agree with the gentleman's conclusion at all, because it presents an entirely different proposition. This is a great national enterprise in which we have already participated.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the House to the fact that many foreign nations have their exhibits at Chicago?

I understand they are going to continue them this year, and I want to ask the House in what attitude it would put the Government of the United States if we failed to continue our exhibit at Chicago during this summer. Other nations will be represented there with exhibits, and yet the great Government of the United States, which asked these nations to bring their exhibits here and take part in this exposition, it is stated, should decline to make an appropriation sufficient to take care of an exhibit of its own.

Of course, this going to take some money. I think the attitude of the House is such that it will possibly feel inclined to cut this authorization, and I will favor it. This is not an appropriation but an authorization, simply permitting the Committee on Appropriations to recommend to the House whatever sum is needed for the maintenance of the Government exhibit at Chicago.

I think it would be humiliating, if I may use that word, for the United States Government, which invited the other nations to send their exhibits here to take part in this great exhibit, if our own Government failed, under such circumstances, to make the necessary appropriation to maintain its own exhibits. [Applause.]

I may say, further, in addition to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has said, that I received a communication from the State Department this morning evidently actuated by the same reasons which I have expressed here, in which the earnest hope was expressed that Congress would make this authorization now in the interest of our own country.

I trust the House will adopt this rule and consider and pass the bill and let the Committee on Appropriations, after proper hearings, determine what amount it will recommend to this House by way of an appropriation for the purposes indicated; and then let me say to my friend from Pennsylvania and other gentlemen who have raised the question, the amount that may be used by the Commissioner or the amount that may be spent for this purpose or that purpose, can properly come before the House after due and proper hearings with the facts before us.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The State Department has only requested $6,000, while various other Departments have made requests as high as $172,000. It seems to me the request of the State Department is quite nominal and probably there would not be much objection to that item, but we gave this fair of the people of Chicago $1,000,000 last year and we thought the fair was over. Why should we tax our people again for another show out there? It is wrong.

Mr. BYRNS. The Secretary of State was not speaking with reference to the small sum that will be needed by his Department. He was speaking of the entire amount that will be needed by every department of this Government, and I may say to my friend from Pennsylvania that certainly the gentleman does not want this Government to be placed in the attitude of failing to maintain an exhibit at Chicago, such as it maintained there last year, in view of the fact that other nations will doubtless have their exhibits again.

Mr. RICH. There might be some merit in continuing this exhibit on account of asking foreign governments to do so, but for the life of me I cannot see why they want so much money to continue this matter when everything is already out there.

Mr. BYRNS. I have just stated to the House that that is a matter for future consideration. This bill does not appropriate one dollar out of the Treasury. It simply authorizes the Committee on Appropriations to have a hearing and investigation, and then the gentleman and other gentlemen will have the right to pass upon the amount of the appropriation. As has been stated, the Congress gave Philadelphia for the Sesquicentennial $3,000,000, while it has only appropriated $1,000,000 for Chicago.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON), there were—ayes 80, noes 29.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, if adjournment is taken now, will this bill be the order of business tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. It will.

CORINNE BLACKBURN GALE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, House bill no. 1870, entitled "An act for the relief of Corinne Blackburn Gale."

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Corrine Blackburn Gale, widow of William Holt Gale, late American Foreign Service officer, retired, the sum of $8,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband at the rate of pay received by him at the time of his retirement in 1929.

This bill is objectionable because it provides for the payment of a gratuity to the widow of a retired Foreign Service officer who, after his retirement and until his death in April 1932, received retirement pay at the rate of $3,596.77 yearly from the Government. While Congress has in some instances authorized payment to the widow of a Foreign Service officer who died while in active service of 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, no payment of this kind has been authorized to the widow of a Foreign Service officer who died after being retired, and I deem it inadvisable to establish a precedent of approving payments of this character.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 9, 1934.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN THOMAS SIMPKIN

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

I return herewith, without approval, House bill no. 507, entitled "An act for the relief of John Thomas Simpkin."

The bill provides that Simpkin shall hereafter be held and considered to have received a full, honorable discharge from the naval service of the United States on February 14, 1921, the purpose being to give him, as to the future, the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred by any law upon honorably discharged soldiers.

The records of the Navy Department show that this man was enrolled in the Naval Reserve for a period of 4 years on May 10, 1918, and served until November 26, 1919, when he was transferred to the regular Navy. On March 15, 1920, he was tried and convicted by general courtmartial of "absence from station and duty after leave had expired" and was sentenced to 6 months' confinement and to be dishonorably discharged from the naval service. The period of confinement was mitigated to restriction to ship and station, and the dishonorable discharge was remitted on condition that he maintain a conduct satisfactory to his commanding officer for a period of 6 months. On September 28, 1920, Simpkin was again tried and convicted by general courtmartial for a similar offense and in accordance with the sentence of the court was dishonorably discharged from the naval service on February 14, 1921.

Simply because the man, nearly 5 years after his dishonorable discharge, developed mental incompetency which caused his commitment to a State hospital for the insane for a period of some 17 months, it is now proposed that he be viewed as having been mentally incompetent at the time of the committing of the offense which caused his dishonorable discharge. It is solely on this presumptive ground that this bill proposes now to change the character of his service from dishonorable to honorable. To this I cannot agree.

Where a man violates the obligations of his enlistment and thereby debars himself from the rights belonging to those who faithfully and honorably served their country according to the terms of their enlistment, I feel that something more definite than the presumption of mental incompetency shown in this case is demanded to support a change in the record.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 9, 1934.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

GENERAL PULASKI, A MARTYR IN THE CAUSE OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I have noted the appropriateness of our colleague Hon. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON's address in the House on Monday, May 7, with reference to the resolution now before us, to authorize the President of the United States to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11 next, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies commemorating the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski, a Polish patriot, who fought and died in the cause of American independence.

Truly there has been amazing evidence that the people of the United States realize to the full it was General Pulaski who saved his unhappy fatherland; it was he who redeemed the glorious name of Poland and restored her moral forces; he suffered his glorious martyrdom in the defense of Savannah, which brought to a dramatic close a career matchless in its sincerity and zeal in the cause of human liberty.

In observance and commemoration of the death of Casimer Pulaski, the distinguished representative of Poland, Mr. Wladyslaw Sokolowski, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of Poland during the absence of His Excellency, Mr. Tytus Filipowicz, Ambassador of Poland, delivered a radio address over the National Broadcasting System.

The program was given in Washington, D.C., October 11, 1932. It was broadcast by short wave to Europe, and part of the address was delivered in the native language of the Polish people. He said in part:

> Poland unites today with America in giving honor to the hero of these two great nations. Millions of our people in America take part in paying tribute to the memory of Pulaski. Even though it is the anniversary of his death, it is a blessed one because both causes for which Pulaski lived, fought and died, conquered and triumphed.
> Sacrificing the life of Pulaski on the American soil brought the honor of the sons of Poland to the heights to which the sons of nations reach, having such spirit and tradition like Poland. We received from her a priceless gem, and to you, the sons of Poland—Americans today—the guarding of this gem is given.
> The long-standing ties between Poland and America can be tightened only by the love and care for the good name of Poland from which you come.

Well, may we say, in the words of Mr. Wladyslaw Sokolowski, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim, that General Pulaski has gone to his reward:

> Worshipping him as her own hero, Poland is proud that Pulaski gave his life for the independence of America. We rejoice that in the glorious edifice of the American Republic there are stones laid by Polish hands and cemented by Polish blood. As a hero of two nations, as an outstanding example of patriotism and noble efforts in both countries, Pulaski has always been and will always remain a symbol of Polish-American friendship.

An examination of the pages of history readily establishes that all of the world's difficult problems have not been crowded into our own times. We have heard on many occasions of the difficulties and vicissitudes encountered by Washington in his earlier years, which did not cease even after he was unanimously elected as our first President.

Washington's hopes were based on the loyalty of his collaborators and on his confidence in his fellow citizens, in whose future he believed, and in this belief he was rewarded by witnessing some measure of realization during the closing years of his life.

In those troublesome times there came to America several gallant gentlemen to assist his country in its struggles, and among those were two gallant Polish gentlemen, who, with their fellow countrymen, earned the gratitude of the United States Government for the loyal assistance rendered in the Revolutionary War.

Kosciusko arrived in America in 1776 with a letter of recommendation from Benjamin Franklin, then at Paris. Washington asked him what he wished, believing that like many other foreigners he had come to ask for some favor. Kosciusko replied that the had come to fight as a soldier for American independence. He was commissioned a colonel of engineers, and the facts of his distinguished career and the building of the West Point fortifications, now the site of the United States Military Academy, are very well known. There is an increasing appreciation of the worth-while service performed by this brave and courageous soldier for liberty and freedom.

But, Mr. Speaker, we may search the pages of history in vain for a more heroic, adventurous, and patriotic spirit than that of Casimir Pulaski, whose memory we desire to honor by the approval of this resolution.

This great Polish hero, glowing with enthusiasm for liberty, came from his own distressed land to fight upon our shores for those ideals of freedom that, for the time being, were crushed in his beloved Poland.

Many brave and colorful foreign soldiers were enlisted under the banner of George Washington. Also, many of these were inspired with a passion for the ideals for which the Colonists fought. Some of these men of foreign birth contributed important services to our cause and helped to mold out of the untrained, undisciplined, but determined men of George Washington's army a fighting force which carried on a struggle that was the admiration of the world.

Against the very pick of Great Britain's veteran troops and veteran German mercenaries these men of America were fitted to contend on grounds of equality, and it was due in large measure to the experienced military experts from other European countries that George Washington was enabled to marshal his forces with effectiveness.

Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski was a dashing and romantic soldier, who had already achieved a reputation for patriotism, heroism, and strategy that made him an outstanding figure in Europe. After having seen his father and his brothers treacherously made victims of that conspiracy of Russia, Austria, and Prussia to crush and dismember Poland, Pulaski fought upon his native soil, until, having exhausted the last remnant of his strength, he was forced to flee, as Poland lay helpless at the feet of the three conspiring sovereigns.

It was not surprising that the noble Pulaski should be fired with new enthusiasm for freedom in a nation that symbolized something of Poland's heroic struggle. And so he came to us and immediately his devotion of the cause of the Colonies, his reckless heroism, his superb horsemanship, and his magnetic personality appealed to the imagination of our own America. Time does not permit a review of the important services which he performed under Washington's leadership. That is all a matter of history.

He was not a soldier of fortune. His love of liberty alone kindled his devotion. He saw in the struggle for American independence an opportunity to pursue that bright vision which had so animated him in his career as a Polish patriot, and he transferred to Washington's service those remarkable qualities of military genius which everywhere aroused admiration and confidence.

Pulaski joined the Revolutionary Army as a volunteer in the summer of 1777. From that time on he progressively demonstrated his value and became one of the outstanding commanders of our forces.

Trusted by George Washington, admired by him, and inspiring a devotion that only the comradeship of war can bring about, Pulaski went to his death, dauntless and unafraid. Under direction of Congress, he was sent to Charleston, S.C., where the British had taken a sudden and defensive position. The arrival of Pulaski baffled the British. The governor and the council of Charleston had already agreed upon terms of capitulation, but General Pulaski went to the council chamber to protest against this measure, declaring that as a Continental officer he would defend the city for the United States.

Accordingly, the defense of the city fell upon Pulaski, and so effective was that defense that the British forces retreated from their attempt to capture Charleston and retired to Savannah. Pulaski pursued the enemy with relentless courage. In the ill-fated assault on that city, October 9, 1779, Pulaski was wounded in the thigh by a grapeshot when trying to arrest the retreat of French soldiers. Two days later, October 11, 1779, after more than 2 years of service under our flag, Pulaski died on board the ship Wasp, where he had been taken after being wounded. His body was buried at sea with simple but impressive ceremony, and his death was lamented universally by the patriots of the Revolution.

He has gone to that world of which he carried in his own breast so rich an earnest pledge, to a world of peace. But he is not wholly gone; not gone in heart, for we are sure that a better world has heightened, not extinguished, his affection for his race; and not gone in influence, for his memory is laid up as a sacred treasure in many minds. A spirit so beautiful ought to multiply itself in those to whom it is made known. May we all be incited by it to a more grateful, cheerful love of God, and a serener, gentler, and nobler love of our fellow creatures, and may future generations be reminded of the debt which they owe to those that came before them.

DIRECT LOANS TO INDUSTRY—A BILLION-DOLLAR MONOPOLY—CHISELING AMENDMENTS—UNCLE SAM PAYS INTEREST ON OWN CREDIT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on direct loans to industry and to insert a letter I have received upon that subject from former Senator Robert L. Owen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, an investigation has disclosed that there is a need of $650,000,000 in credit to be extended to industry at this time. Who is going to supply this credit? The banks have plenty of reserves to supply it. The Federal Reserve banks have plenty of power and authority to support their member banks in the extension of this credit. That is nothing new. They have been in an excellent condition the past 12 months to supply this credit; but the fact remains the credit is not extended, the circulating medium continues contracted to that amount, tens of thousands of employees remain without a job, and many idle factories are rusting and deteriorating on account of the failure of the credit machinery of the banks to properly function.

WHO HAS CREDIT MACHINERY IN CHARGE?

The Constitution of the United States, article 1, section 8, paragraph 5, says, "Congress shall coin money and regulate its value." Congress has farmed that great privilege out to private banks and the private bankers have not even agreed to supply a sufficient circulating media of exchange for the people. In truth and in fact it has been manipulated in the interest of a few to the detriment of the many.

The banks of the country are loaded to the brim with Government bonds. They are not paying interest on their demand deposits, which are used to purchase Government bonds, and the banks get the interest on the bonds. They are not functioning as banks should function. They are retarding the whole recovery program, and if something is not done to compel action by them in the direction of extending loans to commerce, industry, and agriculture there is danger of the program being completely destroyed. The small bankers say they are not responsible, the large bankers say they are not responsible, the Federal Reserve Board says the Federal Reserve banks are not responsible. The fact remains credit is not being extended and regardless of who is responsible something must be done.

UNCLE SAM PAYS INTEREST ON OWN CREDIT

The Federal Reserve banks are loaded down with Government bonds purchased on Government credit. If I were to give someone $2,500 to pay the remainder due on the mortgage on my home and that person paid the $2,500, kept the mortgage and at the end of the year should come to me and ask that I pay interest on the $2,500 mortgage the same as if I had never furnished him the money to pay it, I would think that he was foolish. That is what the Federal Reserve banks do every day. They buy Uncle Sam's bonds with Uncle Sam's credit, get the bonds transferred to them, and continue to collect interest from Uncle Sam on the bonds. They collected $10,000,000 more this way last year than the total cost of their operating expenses, dividends, losses, and so forth. They pay high salaries to their officers and employees; it would shock you to know the high salaries they pay. The Government is in effect furnishing the money and they are spending it. Congress has no control over their activities. Congress has heretofore farmed out the great privilege of issuing money and credit to the 12 Federal Reserve banks. If Congress allows them to keep that privilege, Congress is to be blamed. A Member of the House has no right to blame the Senate, the judiciary, or the President. Congress is to be blamed, because the Constitution imposes upon it the duty of issuing money and regulating its value, and every Member of Congress takes an oath that he will support the Constitution.

CHISELING AMENDMENTS FOR THE FEDERAL RESERVE

No private corporation on earth and no corporation owned by corporations on earth has ever had so many chiseling amendments adopted in its favor as the Federal Reserve banks of this country have. They were first intended to supply credit to commerce, industry, and agriculture; they were not supposed to make a profit; if they did make a profit over 6 percent on their capital stock, they were supposed to pay that profit into the Treasury of the United States, because they were using the credit of the Nation free and all excess profits should go into the Treasury for the benefit of the people; they were not supposed to issue money on gold or Government securities; they were supposed to furnish an elastic currency in the interest of the people. One so-called "perfecting amendment" after another has completely changed the whole set-up. Not only have they become profit-making institutions, but legislation in their favor has been so manipulated that they can make and keep all the profits they make; the sky is the limit; they pay no taxes, except the very small amount on the real estate they own. They have a nontaxable monopoly on the use of the Government's credit; they have so far arranged to use the people's credit, which they use without charge, in the interest of the private banks that own them. They have an exclusive franchise that is worth billions of dollars. Congress has given it to them; Congress is allowing them to keep it.

A NEW BONUS FOR THE FEDERAL RESERVE

When the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation bill was enacted last year Congress appropriated about $140,000,000 of the people's money from the reserve funds of the Federal Reserve banks to the insurance fund. These banks did not like that; they wanted to keep that money. Now it is proposed to give this money to these banks if they will promise to consider loans to industry to that amount. It is nothing but a grab; I have heard about raids on the Treasury; this is one of the worst I have ever known. It is also proposed to let these banks build a new million-dollar building here in Washington for the Federal Reserve Board. It looks like an effort to get away from the Government entirely; they do not even want their officials housed in Government buildings. However, they insist on keeping the privilege of issuing money on the credit of the Nation, which is a mortgage on your home, my home, all the property and incomes of all the people, and not pay one penny on earth for it, and, in addition, have their transactions exempt for the payment of taxes to the Federal Government, the State governments, the county governments, the city governments, or any other kind of a government as they are now.

THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION BILL

I much prefer the Reconstruction Finance Corporation proposal for direct loans to industry. Three quarters of a billion dollars should be provided for that purpose. Whatever is done, the $140,000,000 bonus and bribe to Federal Reserve banks should be stopped. It should not get a single vote in the House.

THE BEST PLAN OF ALL

The best way to get credit extended to commerce, industry, and agriculture is for the Government to immediately take over and operate the 12 Federal Reserve banks. Then credit can be extended to all banks—not just the member banks—to all industries, and for every purpose for which credit is needed.

FRAMER OF FEDERAL RESERVE LAW ADMITS GOVERNMENT SHOULD NOW TAKE THEM OVER

The Honorable Robert L. Owen, ex-United States Senator from Oklahoma and framer of the Federal Reserve Act, has become disgusted with the way it has been operated against the public interest. He has written an interesting letter to me in support of the proposal that these banks should be taken over by the Government and operated in the interest of the people. Permission having been granted, it is inserted herewith:

SOUTHERN BUILDING,
Washington, D.C., May 5, 1934.

Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. PATMAN: Answering your request as to my views on the suggestion that the United States should acquire the stock of the Federal Reserve banks, I respectfully reply.

On May 18, 1920, when the representatives of the Reserve banks met in Washington with certain members of the Reserve Board and declared in favor of contracting bank credit and currency (see S.Doc. No. 310, February 1923), I denounced this policy on the floor of the United States Senate and stated that in my opinion if the Federal Reserve banks were used against the public interests to contract credit and currency and cause depression, they should not be surprised if the people of the United States should take over these banks and make them strictly public banks. The Federal Reserve banks were intended to operate in the public interest. But in 1921 they deliberately caused drastic contraction of bank credit and United States currency, resulting immediately in a loss of national production of $15,000,000,000. It caused the unemployment of 5,000,000 people and bankrupted 5,000 banks. They led the way in contracting credit in 1929. It was the contraction of bank credit, bank loans, bank deposits, and bank-deposit check money, beginning October 1929, which resulted finally in the bank holiday of March 1933, when every bank in the United States suspended for a brief period. This second panic caused a loss of $41,000,000,000 of national production in 1932, and 13,000,000 people were thrown out of employment and a much larger number were put on short time and cut wages.

The second depression bankrupted 10,000 banks and caused a shrinkage of market value in stocks and bonds of over $100,000,000,000 and a shrinkage in other property values of $100,000,000,000 more. It caused a shrinkage of the market value of the stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange from $89,000,000,000 in September 1929 to $15,000,000,000 in June 1932. It bankrupted millions of men, and others are still going through bankruptcy. Such unwise management of the banking system of the United States is indefensible, and no man has attempted to defend it.

Twenty or thirty explanations have been given by orthodox economists which were entirely unsound. There is but one adequate cause of this depression, and it stands up as clearly visible as the Washington Monument from the White House. It is the same cause which produced the depression of 1921, the contraction of bank credit and currency. No man can deny that the Republican platform of June 10, 1920, deliberately proposed as a policy the contraction of credit and currency for the purpose of lowering the value of commodities (the products of human labor) and to raise correspondingly the purchasing power of money. The platform said so. Mr. Harding in his speech of acceptance in July 1920 emphasized the declaration of this policy, and when he was elected bank credits were immediately contracted $6,000,000,000 and United States currency was contracted $1,500,000,000. The immediate result was that the dollar index rose from 60 to 107 in June 1921, an increase of nearly 80 percent, and the commodity index fell from 166 to 93. No honest, informed man can deny these facts or that the immediate depression of 1921 was caused by the deliberate contraction of credit and currency in a crusade led by the Reserve banks and certain conservative members of the Federal Reserve Board. In 1924 the Democratic National Convention in New York denounced this action of the Harding administration in creating a depression by contracting bank credit and United States currency.

The national convention of the Democratic Party in Chicago recited as a cause for depression of 1929–32 was the uncontrolled expansion and contraction of credit for private profit at public expense and the Republican platform stated the case still more clearly.

Of course, the only thing which can contract the market values of all forms of property in terms of dollars is the contraction of the supply of dollars with which to buy such property.

It is a sound monetary axiom that the value of money depends upon the supply of money in relation to the demand for money. The value of anything depends upon the law of supply and demand. You can raise the value of pigs by diminishing the supply without affecting the general value of money. The value of anything in terms of dollars depends upon the supply of and demand for the thing bought and the supply of and demand for dollars or money.

WHAT IS MONEY?

Money is the medium of exchange and consists of anything which is generally acceptable as a means of payment for other things. In the United States the money consists of subsidiary coin and paper money, which is used both for a medium of exchange and for hoarding money for future use. This United States currency comprises in normal times about one tenth of the money of the country. Bank deposits on which checks are drawn comprise more than nine tenths of the money of the country, and bank checks as money transacts over nine tenths of our national business. In 1929 the bank deposits, including interbank deposits, amounted to about $55,000,000,000, while the United States currency amounted to about $5,000,000,000. The actual turn-over of check money in 1929 was $1,200,000,000,000, while the turn-over of currency was about $100,000,000,000.

In 1927–29 there was inflation of bank loans and consequent bank deposits and consequent check money for the purpose of operations on the stock exchanges. The brokers' loans rose to a total of $11,000,000,000 and as a consequence the value of money in terms of stocks went down, and the value of stocks in terms of money went up, so that stocks had an inflated value on the New York Stock Exchange alone of probably $23,000,000,000. In October and November 1929, $6,000,000,000 of these loans were called or paid out, resulting in an avalanche of stocks held on margin being thrown on a comparatively undefended market. There was an immediate loss in market value of stocks and the market loss on such stocks listed on the various exchanges of approximately $30,000,000,000. The inflated values of stocks were wiped out with colossal losses to people who bought on the higher market.

These losses of $30,000,000,000 were distributed among 20,000,000 shareholders, over three fourths of whom probably were not speculators at all. Within 90 days there was a loss in consumption, production, and employment, and building contracts of about 25 percent, establishing a vicious spiral downward which did not cease until 13,000,000 people were out of employment, 10,000 banks failed, and the complete collapse of our credit structure had taken place. During 1931 and 1932 the great liquidation took place, when it became obvious that the Hoover administration would not take the steps to end contraction by the remedy of expansion. The values of the stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange fell from $89,000,000,000 in 1929 to $15,000,000,000 in June 1932 and our national production fell from $89,000,000,000 to $48,000,000,000 in terms of the 1926 dollar, and to a smaller amount measured in the value of dollars of 1932.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF THE RESERVE BANKS

Under these terrible results of unguided mismanagement of our national banking system, your proposal for the Government of the United States to buy the stock of the Federal Reserve bank, I should think would appeal to thoughtful men everywhere, especially to those who engage in investment banking and in commercial banking on legitimate lines. It may not appeal to those who make their money by gambling on the gamblers in bull markets and on distressed debtors in bear markets.

ADVANTAGES OF PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

The first great advantage would be to put the financial powers of the United States fully and completely behind the Reserve banks. This would enable these banks to be conducted strictly in the public interest for the advancement of industry, commerce, transportation, and sound banking. It would enable the Government through these banks to help any solvent bank anywhere through a temporary difficulty. It would put a complete end to the violent fluctuation of investments and property values of all kinds. It would prevent depressions; it would prevent unemployment; it would make the savings of the people secure. Every thoughtful banker should approve Government ownership of the Reserve banks.

Second, all the Government would have to do would be to give a credit on the books of the Reserve banks for the book value of the stock owned by member banks with interest to date and perhaps a small bonus, if that be deemed necessary and just.

Third, when this should have been done these banks could be and should be directed by the Reserve Board to buy United States bonds, especially the 4-percent bonds, giving credit for the value thereof on the books of the Reserve banks. This would establish deposits against Government bonds which when transferred to others would become comparatively permanent deposits subject to check and thus provide a reservoir of check money to replace the deposits which have been canceled by the liquidation of private loans due the banks.

It should be remembered that under this depression over $20,000,000,000 of debts to the banks were liquidated by checks drawn on deposits in such banks, thus retiring about $20,000,000,000 of check-money deposits. The effect of such cancelation of deposits is demonstrated by the figures of the Reserve Board which show that there was $1,200,000,000,000 of checks cashed by all the banks in 1929 and less than $400,000,000,000 in 1933, a clean loss of about $800,000,000,000 of annual check-money turnover. In other words, two thirds of our check money vanished because of the cancelation of these deposits on which check money is drawn.

There is only $14,000,000,000 of demand deposits remaining and of this 60 percent consists of accounts of $10,000 or more which are owned by eight tenths of 1 percent of the depositors.

If the Government, therefore, were to immediately begin buying these Government bonds on a large scale, the bank deposits subject to check would immediately rise in like degree. Credit would begin to expand and would be comparatively liquid in form. Such bank deposits would have a great advantage over bank deposits based on private debts due the bank on paper of 30 to 90 days. The new deposits based on Government bonds would have stability and could not be suddenly contracted.

The banks would have the same and better advantages of accommodation than they have now. Their deposits would rise in proportion to these purchases, and rise on a permanent basis. They would be thus enabled to extend short-time and long-time loans with no fear of such deposits being retired from the banking system.

This public policy of the United States would mean that property values were going to rise because of a rising volume of check money on deposits subject to Government control. The manufacturers, merchants, and bankers would also respond because they would all visualize a rising market in commodities, in inventories, in property, and a certain increase in income.

The most important feature is that the Government would thus be able to expand credit to whatever extent necessary on grounds of absolute safety; to stop expanding when the ends were accomplished; and to contract such deposits if the commodity index went above par or, what is precisely the same thing, if the dollar index fell below par. All the Government would have to do to stop the rise in commodity values would be to sell its bonds and withdraw deposits of a like amount into the Federal Reserve banks or into the Treasury.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL DUTY OF CONGRESS

The Constitution, article I, section 8, paragraph 5, authorizes Congress to coin money and regulate the value thereof. Under this authority and obligation Congress has authorized subsidiary coin and paper money in an amount of $5,500,000,000, of which $500,000,000 is abroad or lost. Of this currency, about two fifths is estimated to be in hoarding, but this money is only one tenth of the national requirement, because the total money of the country in normal times is 10 times the United States currency. The check money system was made compulsory by the failure of the United States to furnish currency in an adequate amount. As a consequence, citizens established banks and issued loans and established deposits 10 times the amount of the currency they could command.

The checking system has substantial advantages in many ways, preserving a record of the people's business, and safeguarding their operations against theft and robbery of currency. But by the public ownership of Reserve banks, the Government can increase the deposits of banks to the extent required to furnish check money and can diminish it when necessary to prevent inflation. Only in this way can the Congress of the United States discharge this constitutional duty. The value of money depends on supply and demand, and the Government must be able to control and regulate the supply of money, and the plan you have proposed will accomplish it.

When money in adequate amount is furnished, the value of farm property and farm products and the products of all unorganized business will receive the benefits immediately. I remind you that the census of the Agricultural Department showed a shrinkage of the property of the farms and ranches from $79,000,000,000 to $58,500,000,000, a loss of over $20,000,000,000 due to the contraction of 1921. It is far worse now. I think the attempt to advance the farmers' interest by killing pigs would be disappointing. That remedy is based on the theory of overproduction of pigs. There can be no overproduction of 784 commodities, representing all the products of human labor. When the manufacturer spends his money to manufacture a product, the money he pays for salaries, wages, rent, maintenance, interest, etc., creates a buying power exactly equal to the cost. He may not make profit; he may suffer loss of capital; but he cannot create goods without creating coincidentally the purchasing power to buy such goods. Our difficulty is underconsumption, underproduction, and unemployment. Under Woodrow Wilson's administration and an expansion of credit and currency the country reached a high degree of prosperity, bank failures fell to zero, and we were not distressed by the cry of overproduction or unemployment. Highly organized industries can fix and regulate their prices as United States Steel does. Farmers cannot do so. When money is abundant the farm products will rise, and the balance between them and steel workers will tend to balance.

When the present administration declared the object of restoring the commodity index to normal (which is precisely the same thing as reducing the purchasing power of money to normal) and Congress passed the Thomas amendment, the commodity index by July 15 went from 60 to 71, and the value of stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange rose from $19,900,000,000 to $36,300,000,000, and when it was announced that the administration would delay expanding credit and currency, the rise of stock-market values and of the general commodity index immediately stopped and it made no substantial increase since. Of course not.

I believe the plan proposed would be of the most far-reaching importance, and would have the happy effect of overcoming the complaints and difficulties of the administration's program for restoring employment and improving the conditions of industry.

I regret that I cannot help believe that the President is being advised by those who do not fully grasp the importance of regulating the value of money. Under this depression we have seen the value of money rise even in terms of the necessaries of life to 66 percent above normal, and in terms of stocks 600 percent, and in terms of some stocks 1,000 percent.

I think the administration has the greatest opportunity for human service in the recorded annals of man. It would be most deplorable if the fullest advantage were not taken of it.

Yours very respectfully,

ROBERT L. OWEN.

LOAN EQUIPMENT FOR SIXTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 9123) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use of the Sixteenth National Convention of the American Legion at Miami, Fla., during the month of October 1934, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the American Legion 1934 Convention Corporation, for use at the Sixteenth National Convention of the American Legion to be held at Miami, Fla., in the month of October 1934, such tents, cots, blankets, and mattresses or bed sacks and other available stock out of the Army and National Guard supplies as such corporation may require to house properly Legionnaires attending such convention: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of such convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the American Legion 1934 Convention Corporation, through the executive vice president of such corporation, Charles A. Mills: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering such property, shall take from such corporation a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of such property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this the usual bill that provides for the loan of equipment?

Mr. SEARS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the bill comes with the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. SEARS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

UNITED STATES BOTANIC GARDEN

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 327, authorizing the appointment of a planning committee in connection with the United States Botanic Garden, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, is this the proposal that looks to transferring the Botanical Garden to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. KELLER. No. There has been a wrangle about this thing for about 20 years and we are asking for the appointment of a commission to study it and report back to the next Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. I am so unalterably opposed to transferring the Botanic Garden to the Department of Agriculture that I object to this bill, because I am afraid that such a transfer is its underlying purpose.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KNUTSON, for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. BURKE of California, for 2 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROOKS, for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. CADY, for 3 days, on account of important business.

LAWS RELATING TO INDIANS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the Senate:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the engrossed bill of the Senate (S. 2671) repealing certain sections of the Revised Code of Laws of the United States relating to the Indians.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sections of title 25 of the Revised Code of Laws of the United States be, and they are hereby, repealed: Sections 171, 172, 173, 186, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, and 226.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HOWARD: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That sections 2111, 2112, 2113, 2120, 2134, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, and 2153 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 25, secs. 171, 172, 173, 186, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, and 226), are hereby repealed."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Nebraska make a brief statement as to the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, the bill we reported the other day was erroneously reported. We reported the code sections instead of the sections of the statute.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A BIG ISSUE FOR RELIGION; ABOLITION OF WAR

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and insert excerpts from an address by Dr. Stoddard Lane, of Des Moines, before the annual meeting of the Congregational Christian Conference of Iowa at Cedar Rapids a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include excerpts from an address by Dr. Stoddard Lane, of Des Moines, before the annual meeting of the Congregational-Christian Conference of Iowa at Cedar Rapids a few days ago. Dr. Lane states in an able manner the duty of Christian churches and of professing Christians to devote themselves seriously and zealously to the prevention of war and to the promotion of enduring peace:

A BIG ISSUE FOR RELIGION; ABOLITION OF WAR

All of us recognize the fact that religion has to do with international relations. However you define religion, it must be concerned with the question of war and peace. The abolishment of war and the creation of peace is, to my mind, the main religious issue of the day.

Dr. Fosdick has said that "the essence of the Christian religion is reverence for human personality." There is nothing that degrades human personality so deeply and destroys human personality so effectually as war. It kills not only the bodies but the souls of men. War is the arch enemy of religion. It denies all that religion stands for.

MUST CARE ABOUT WAR

The Christian church must take this thing in earnest. If we care about the future of religion, or the future of the church, or the future of humanity, we have to care about war. How much in earnest are we in this matter? The recent questionnaire sent out by Kirby Page, to which 20,870 Protestant ministers and Jewish rabbis replied, clearly shows that there is a large group of clergymen in this Nation who are taking this issue in earnest.

Nearly 13,000 declared their determination not to sanction or participate in any future war. About 14,000 declared that the churches should now go on record as refusing to sanction or support any future war. About 16,000 favor substantial reduction in armaments even if the United States is forced to take the initiative and make proportionately greater reduction than other nations are willing to do. This is a significant expression of opinion and shows a large body of ministers who are vitally concerned with these issues.

WHERE DO LAYMEN STAND

But what about the laymen? What about the Congregational-Christian laymen of Iowa? The recent referendum on international affairs sent out to all Congregational-Christian churches of Iowa brought in some very interesting returns. The main trouble with these returns was their numerical inadequacy.

There are 181 Congregational-Christian churches in Iowa with active ministers. Only about 30 churches took action on the referendum with only about 1,200 people voting. I know that this is not a real index of the interest of Iowa Congregationalists in these vital questions.

I have been trying to analyze the replies and to see the trend of our thinking in these matters. We seem to be surest on the question of war materials. By a vote of 1,138 to 108, we believe that the greed of armament makers for private profit has much to do with the production of war scares and with the starting and continuation of armament races.

WOULD NATIONALIZE MUNITIONS

It is significant that by a vote of 1,065 to 98 we also believe that war-material industries of all kinds should be nationalized. This means that we are waking up to the power and peril of private munition makers.

The next point on which we are most nearly agreed is that of military training. By a vote of 878 to 342, we are opposed to compulsory military training in tax-supported schools. We are, however, not nearly so sure that our churches should urge the boys to refuse to take military training. By a small majority of 622 to 522 we are in favor of this move. I presume that with some the issue of military training is not a moral issue at all; they regard it simply as a waste of time. Probably with some others, the idea is that we must not encourage the boys in disobedience of the law. There is no State or Federal law making military training compulsory. It is simply a university ruling or a regulation laid down by a board of education. But apparently there are some who feel that in any case it must be obeyed.

AGAINST A BIG NAVY

We are against the big-navy policy by a vote of 830 to 369. We do not believe that you get peace by preparing for war. We are convinced that armaments are a primary cause of war and that they had much to do with producing the world catastrophe in 1914. We are doing today just what Europe was doing then. The world is spending $4,500,000,000 a year on armaments, with the United States leading the way. And now we have our Vinson bill making possible the building of $1,000,000,000 worth of ships. And so another armament race is on, and armament races always wind up in war.

The last two questions of the referendum had to do with acts of good will. With a comparatively small vote we are in favor of the repeal of the Platt amendment. Much to my surprise, we voted against the repeal of the Japanese Exclusion Act by a vote of 595 to 505. I am convinced that some of this voting is due to a misunderstanding. I am sure that many people do not realize that the admission of the Japanese to the United States on a quota basis on a par with European nations would mean the admission of not more than 200 Japanese a year. Perhaps also they do not realize what a thorn in Japanese flesh this Exclusion Act has been.

A DIFFERENT BASIS USED

We have excluded orientals on a different basis from anybody else, on a basis solely of race, which has been a sore blow to Japanese pride. Perhaps some of this vote is an expression of resentment. Doubtless some people feel resentful against the Japanese because of their disregard for treaty obligations in Manchuria and their recent pronouncement of a "hands-off policy." They may feel that Japan is an outlaw nation which deserves no consideration. My own feeling is that you cannot promote good will through resentment.

The results of the referendum convince me that there is a large number of people who are taking these questions in earnest and trying to think them through on a Christian basis. We must keep on thinking and we must keep on devising ways of constructive action. We must find ways of strengthening the peace machinery of the world; we must find ways of dramatizing the peace movement; we must find ways of capturing patriotism for peace; we must be definite and positive.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1934

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O God, the King of Glory, who, though enshrined in mystery, dost ever reveal Thyself in the wondrous sacrament of love: Vouchsafe unto us at this morning hour a glimpse of the invisible which hovers like a consecration over the gross world of sense, touching its homely nature with the unearthly gleam of a divine beauty, that our work may be transfigured as we pursue the quest of Thy eternal purpose.

Implant in us the spirit of reverence for that order whereby past is knit to present, and give us each day a deeper sense of fellowship, that we may become a united people, a holy nation crowned with righteousness and courage, and march breast forward to the city of our God. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TENDENCIES OF ADMINISTRATION POLICIES

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a resolution signed by a regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, a commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and members of other patriotic organizations based upon an editorial in the Los Angeles Times entitled "The Trek to Moscow."

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Apr. 20, 1934]

THE TREK TO MOSCOW

As was significantly predicted in advance by those in control of it, the "investigation" of the Wirt charges of communistic tendencies in the United States Government has been ended with a shrug of contempt for the honest if inept effort of the Gary educator to throw the spotlight on as dangerous a condition as has ever existed in this country.

The Wirt inquiry has been a farce, but not in the sense in which Speaker RAINEY and the well-named BULWINKLE so referred to it.

In spite of the best efforts of the committee minority to bring out the really significant facts, the BULWINKLE majority steamrollered everything but the superficialities which everyone knew beforehand to be of no real importance.

The real issue for determination by the inquiry was whether or not the American Government, in its policies and in the character of its administration advisers, is headed toward the left—what the press of Europe refers to as the "Yankee trek to Moscow"—on the road of radicalism, socialism, and finally communism. Not a syllable of evidence pertinent to that issue was allowed to go into the record. Not a word of the admitted socialistic and communistic sympathies, associations, writings, and beliefs of the dozen or more principals among the President's professariat of advisers—sometimes miscalled the "brain trust." Not a word of the fact that, under the guidance of these radicals, the Democratic Party's own program as set forth in its 1932 platform and pledges has been junked and that of the Socialist Party substituted and executed. Not a word of the contemptuous sneer of Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell, "brain truster" in chief and champion of communism, for Americans who still believe in the United States Constitution—a faith which Professor Tugwell designates as "unreasoning hysteria." Not a word of the picture of a communistic United States drawn in the writings of Prof. A. A. Berle, Jr., another of the "kitchen cabinet." Not a word of the membership in the American Civil Liberties Union and other radical organizations and groups of Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; Prof. Leo Wolman, Labor Strike Board; Prof. Paul H. Douglas of the N.R.A.; Prof. Albert Taussig, N.R.A.; Jerome Frank, general counsel for the A.A.A.; James M. Landis, Federal Trade Commission; Dr. Frederic C. Howe, A.A.A.; Clarence Darrow, N.R.A. board chairman; Henry T. Hunt, former Socialist mayor, now of the P.W.A.; Nathan R. Margold, Interior Department; Sidney Hillman, Labor Advisory Board; Robert Marshall, Bureau of Indian Affairs; William E. Dodd, Ambassador to Germany; Rose Schneiderman, noted New York radical, now of the N.R.A.; and others. Not a word of the millionaire Communist and Lenin messenger, William C. Bullitt, who engineered the recognition of Soviet Russia and is now our Ambassador to that country. Not a word of the pro-Soviet Mordecai Ezekiel, Tugwell's second-in-command. Not a word of Bullitt's sponsorship in the State Department by Prof. Raymond Moley, one of the President's nearest advisers. Not a word of the socialistic policies and dictatorship forced upon the country by these men and their associates, as radical a group as is to be found outside of Moscow.

It is high time for this country to take account of stock, to balance its ledgers, to inventory the alarming drift toward the left, which increasingly characterizes our affairs, governmental, financial, and social, under the influence of this group.

Unless remedial steps are quickly taken to control a menace more real than many understand, we will soon have traveled so far in that direction that the way back will be lost in a crazy patchwork of tangled paths.

In California we have ample evidence of the activities of a group of well-paid, well-organized agitators, fed and supported by the United States Government, at the height of their subversive efforts to destroy our agricultural and industrial systems by means of strikes and sabotage. These can be dealt with by direct force when necessity supersedes all other methods, but in Washington there has insidiously crept into camp an enemy whose operations strike far deeper and which may not be so simply rooted out because it has made itself the motive force of the very Government.

This is not a political question. The issue is not one between Republicans and Democrats or between the "ins" and the "outs." It is one of Americanism versus communism—or whatever other name the powers of radicalism see fit to give it.

A distinguished southern Democrat, prominent in the counsels of his party since 1886 and an enthusiastic supporter of the Roosevelt candidacy, was invited recently to become a member of the American Alliance, an anti-Communist organization. His reply to this invitation, not written for publication, is fairly indicative of the state of mind to which conservative members of the party and honest believers in the Roosevelt platform now find themselves.

"If the Democratic Party", says this man, "had declared for the things that our party is now doing in Washington, how many States do you suppose it would have carried? Suppose the platform had declared for the killing of pigs, the plowing under of cotton, the plowing under of wheat, the deliberate debasing of our currency, the teaching that the way to have a return to prosperity is to work as little as possible, spend more than we have, and borrow what we cannot repay; the recognition of Russia, the proposed reduction of the foreign debt, the running of all private business by various commissions and bureaus in Washington, the enormous increase in the public debt, etc., etc. It probably would not have carried one State.

"So what is the use of having any more organizations protesting against the spread of communism in the United States? Communism is not much worse than what is now being done in Washington."

The mandates upon which the President and his party were swept into power by an unprecedented vote have not only been ignored and repudiated but the very reverse of what was promised is coming to pass.

Consider briefly a few of the things that have been done during the momentous period since the present administration came into being:

A concerted plan to set up an industrial dictatorship and to break down amicable relations between employer and employee has been established. Wherever and whenever possible capital has been penalized, initiative rebuked, and private business brought under Government control. The liberty of the individual to conduct his own affairs and to direct his own finances has been arbitrarily curtailed. Currency has been destabilized, the gold standard abandoned, unlimited inflation threatened. Merchants are told what prices they may charge, how long they may keep their shops open, and upon what terms they may employ help. Farmers are told how much they may plant and of what. Private investments have been ruthlessly wiped out, private property confiscated, and private rights violated, as witness the wrecking, overnight, of the world's finest airway system of transportation, without due process of law, and with penalties provided for seeking court redress. Confidence has been undermined and the credit structure brought under Government control to such an extent that many a small business man has been wiped out. The fundamental guaranties of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights have been infringed. Economic ruin through the boycott of any business man presuming to resist universal Government regimentation is urged by the Government itself. More than $2,000,000,000 of private savings have been confiscated by the Government through the seizure of gold and the subsequent devaluation of the dollar. A system of taxation avowedly based on the socialistic theory of the redistribution of wealth has been enacted into law.

Public ownership of utilities and natural resources is being pushed as rapidly as possible. A large percentage of the people have been made directly dependent upon the Government. Nationalization has already gone far. Pension rolls are increased until they are little more than dole rolls. A great and growing debt, with its concomitant of almost confiscatory taxation, rests like a wet blanket over the country. With the recognition of Russia, Communist propaganda flooded the United States. Los Angeles is alive with it. Socialization of banks has been all but achieved. Railroads, communications, and other of our great industries upon which the wealth and prosperity of the country are largely based are earmarked for early Government control. "Controlled public opinion" is aimed at through increasing Government censorship of news.

Without realizing its danger to the full the United States today is facing the greatest emergency in all her history. We have been led very far along the road to real communism. American institutions, based upon the well-tried foundation of self-government, each standing upon its own feet, subject to the immutable law of supply and demand and going on to success or failure by reason of merit or lack of it, are in danger. It is high time to be up and doing or the coterie of little men, the professors now sitting at the right hand of the throne in Washington, will spread their red vaccine of death and destruction to all forms of national and individual progress.

It is no longer a question of partisan politics with which the people of this country are confronted; no longer a matter between Republicans and Democrats, or even among Republicans, Democrats, and Socialists. It is one to which the whole body of Americans must give their sober thought followed by concerted action so clear cut and definite in its presentation that the word will penetrate even the solid walls of class hatred which the minions of destruction have been so energetically rearing.

[Resolution]

Whereas it is evident to well-informed and thoughtful people that the present administration is tending toward radicalism in its most concrete forms and is being led by advisors having for their object fundamental changes in our constitutional form of government, and that such leadership, if continued, will result in the destruction of the Government under which our people have enjoyed freedom and prosperity for upwards of 150 years; and

Whereas the most insidious propaganda directed by advisors of the administration is permeating our educational institutions and influencing the youth of our land, inciting them to acts subversive of patriotism and the welfare of our country; and

Whereas nothing has been done by the Government of the United States to carry out the recommendations of the Fish congressional committee, unanimously adopted by the House of Representatives more than 3 years ago, but that instead encouragement appears to have been given to revolutionary activities by the recognition of the Soviet Government and the sympathetic attitude of many of our officials occupying high positions in Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we commend the efforts of all groups and individuals who sound a warning of danger following such radical changes in our Government and institutions, and we especially commend the editorial in the Los Angeles Times of April 20, 1934, entitled, "The Trek to Moscow", and request our Representative in Congress to read said editorial upon the floor of the House of Representatives and have the same incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and we respectfully urge him to introduce at once, and endeavor to secure the passage of, legislation directed toward the carrying out of the recommendations of the said Fish report.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Hon. GEORGE BURNHAM, our Representative in Congress.

POLICIES OF THE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a very able editorial entitled "Righteousness at Washington", appearing in the Springfield (Mo.) Leader, an independent newspaper in southern Missouri, dated May 5, 1934.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Springfield Leader, May 5, 1934]

RIGHTEOUSNESS AT WASHINGTON

President Roosevelt, hearing that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States was preparing a resolution criticizing certain policies of his administration, hurriedly dispatched a message to the chamber's executive declaring "It is time to stop crying 'wolf' and to cooperate in working for recovery and for the continued elimination of evil conditions of the past."

This attitude of the administration, so forcefully expressed in the President's note to the chamber of commerce, has been the cause of wide-spread resentment. Mr. Roosevelt very clearly says that to criticize him or any of his policies is treason and a deliberate attempt to hamper recovery. He draws about himself the cloak of righteousness, and proclaims that anyone who does not agree with him is wrong. He is to be permitted to lead us where he may, to any end he may wish, and we may not suggest we prefer to travel another road to another destiny without being accused of endeavoring to plunge the country into darkness.

It might have been said truthfully, when Mr. Roosevelt began his tenure of office, that to maliciously hamper him was unpatriotic. He was entitled to a fair start. But no one is going to concede that a President may pursue his 4-year term promulgating policies that constituted felonies a few months ago, turning our constitutional government upside down, without those who disagree being permitted to lift their voices in protest.

We do not deny Mr. Roosevelt's self-confessed righteousness, but we do deny that righteousness always makes right. Righteousness is a man's estimation of himself and the statement from him that he is infallible does not make him so. The simple fact that Mr. Roosevelt is endeavoring to show us the way out of a depression, as many other Presidents have been called upon to do, does not give to him the privilege of denouncing all those who do not agree with him as traitors. Invariably the issue upon which a President is chosen and upon which he retains his office is one of economics. Throughout our history it has been good times versus hard times. It is of such stuff that political campaigns are made; whether it be the tariff, farm relief, free silver, railroad or banking legislation as we have known them down the years, the essence of every political action has been the improvement of the economic conditions of the people.

It illy becomes Mr. Roosevelt or his party to upbraid their critics. Looking back a few years we find that they did not choose to remain silent when one Herbert Hoover sought to relieve a depression descending upon us and, if we remember aright, a Congress that might have given aid withheld it.

We think it wicked for any political organization to assail another's policies or to hamper recovery purely for the sake of political expediency. And we think it equally wicked for anyone to remain silent when he believes men in authority are leading our Nation toward some dark abyss. We place no halo upon the brow of Mr. Roosevelt or his "brain trusters", nor do we agree with them in their self-satisfaction that they can do no wrong. To the contrary, we feel that many of their policies will prove destructive and that it is our duty, the duty of the chamber of commerce, and of all others who believe as we do to plainly say so. The President should not seek to stifle such criticism, but he should receive it gladly and weigh it carefully. There is a possibility that he and Rexford and the rest are wrong, and that those whom he charges with crying "wolf" are right.

It might be noted that the chamber of commerce respectfully heard the President's message read and promptly adopted the resolutions prepared.

LICENSING OF REAL-ESTATE BROKERS IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 867) to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers and real-estate salesmen; to create a Real Estate Commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there have been brought to the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia many alleged abuses on the part of vendors of real estate, or at least those pretending to represent them. It was claimed that as a result of such representations, and too often misrepresentations, by persons who were real-estate agents or claimed to be real-estate agents, many innocent persons were seriously injured, if not defrauded. The matter was fully considered by the Commissioners and by reputable real-estate brokers and dealers. The bill was prepared by the Commissioners and the corporation counsel, considered by the committee, and unanimously reported. It merely provides for licensing of real-estate dealers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What fee are the dealers required to pay?

Mr. KING. As I recall, the fee is $15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, in section 5, on page 10, line 24, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$5,000"; in line 25, to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$2,000"; and on page 11, after line 22, to insert the following:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to impose upon the surety on any such bond a greater liability than the total amount thereof or the amount remaining unextinguished by any prior recovery or recoveries as the case may be.

No suit or action against the surety on any such bond shall be brought later than 1 year from the accrual of the cause of action thereon. The surety may terminate its liability under such bond by giving 30 days' written notice thereof, served either personally or by registered mail, to the principal and to the Commission; and upon giving such notice the surety shall be discharged from all liability under such bond for any act or omission of the principal occurring after the expiration of 30 days from the date of service of such notice. Unless on or before the expiration of such period the principal shall duly file a new bond in like amount and conditioned as the original in substitution of the bond so terminated, the license of the principal shall likewise terminate upon the expiration of such period. Upon making any payment on account of its bond, the surety shall immediately notify the Commission.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc.,

ENACTMENT AND PROHIBITION CLAUSE

SECTION 1. That on and after 90 days from the date of enactment of this act it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation to act as a real-estate broker or real-estate salesman, or to advertise or assume to act as such, without a license issued by the Real Estate Commission of the District of Columbia.

Persons employed by a licensed real-estate broker in a clerical capacity, as collectors, or in similar subordinate and administrative positions shall not be required to obtain licenses. The Real Estate Commission created under this act shall have power to make rules and regulations governing this exemption.

One act for a compensation or valuable consideration of buying or selling real estate for or of another, or offering for another to buy, sell, or exchange real estate, or leasing, renting, or offering to lease or rent real estate, except as herein specifically excepted, shall constitute the person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation performing, or offering or attempting to perform any of the acts enumerated herein, a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman within the meaning of this act.

The license of each real-estate salesman shall be delivered or mailed to the real-estate broker by whom such real-estate salesman is employed and shall be kept in the custody and control of such broker. It shall be the duty of each real-estate broker to conspicuously display his license in his place of business.

At any time within 6 months, but not thereafter, after the issuance of an original license the Commission may, upon its own motion, and shall, upon the verified complaint, in writing, of any person, provided such complaint, or such complaint together with evidence, documentary or otherwise, presented therewith, shall make out a prima facie case that the licensee is unworthy to hold such license, notify the licensee, in writing, that the question of his honesty, competency, truthfulness, and integrity will be reopened and determined de novo. Such written notice may be served by delivery thereof personally to the licensee or by mailing same by registered mail to the last known business address of the licensee. Thereupon the Commission may require and procure further proof of the licensee's trustworthiness and competency, and if such proof shall not be satisfactory such license shall be recalled and shall thereafter be null and void. Upon the recall of any such license it shall be the duty of the licensee to surrender to the Commission such license.

The fee for an original real-estate broker's license and every renewal thereof shall be $15.

No fee shall be charged for any original license or renewal thereof issued to any firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation all of whose members or officers actively participating in the brokerage business thereof have been issued a broker's license.

The fee for an original real-estate salesman's license and every annual renewal thereof shall be $5.

Every license shall expire on the 1st day of July of each year except that the original or initial licenses, first issued under the provisions of this act, shall expire on the 1st day of July 1933, subject, however, to revocation as hereinbefore provided.

The Commission shall issue a new license for each ensuing year, in the absence of any reason or condition which might warrant the refusal of the granting of a license, upon receipt of the written request of the applicant and the annual fee therefor, as herein required. The revocation of a broker's license shall automatically suspend every real-estate salesman's license granted to any person by virtue of his employment by the broker whose license has been revoked, pending a change of employer and the issuance of a new license. Such new license shall be issued without charge, if granted during the same license year in which the original license is granted.

No person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman within the District of Columbia shall bring or maintain any action in the courts of the District of Columbia for the collection of compensation for any services performed as a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman or enforcement of any contract relating to real estate without alleging and proving that such person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation was a duly licensed real-estate broker or real-estate salesman at the time the alleged cause of action arose.

Every real-estate broker shall maintain a place of business in the District of Columbia. If a real-estate broker maintains more than one place of business within the District of Columbia, a duplicate license shall be issued to such broker for each branch office maintained; and there shall be no fee charged for any such duplicate license.

Notice in writing shall be given to the Commission by each licensee of any change of principal business location, whereupon the Commission shall issue a new license for the unexpired period without charge. The change of business location without notification to the Commission shall automatically cancel the license theretofore issued.

When any real-estate salesman shall be discharged or shall terminate his employment with the real-estate broker by whom he is employed, it shall be the duty of such real-estate broker to immediately deliver or mail by registered mail to the Commission such real-estate salesman's license. The real-estate broker shall, at the time of delivering or mailing such real-estate salesman's license to the Commission, address a communication by registered mail to the last known residence address of such real-estate salesman, which communication shall advise such real-estate salesman that his license has been delivered or mailed to the Commission. A copy of such communication to the real-estate salesman shall accompany the license when mailed or delivered to the Commission. It shall be unlawful for any real-estate salesman to perform any of the acts contemplated by this act, either directly or indirectly, under authority of said license from and after 3 days following such delivery or mailing of the said license by said broker to the Commission.

There shall be no additional fee for the reissuance of a salesman's license necessitated by the change of employers, nor shall such change work a revocation or require a renewal of the salesman's bond.

SUSPENSION OR REVOCATION OF LICENSE FOR CAUSES ENUMERATED

SEC. 8. The Commission may, upon its own motion, and shall, upon the verified complaint in writing of any person, provided such complaint or such complaint together with evidence, documentary or otherwise, presented in connection therewith, make out a prima facie case, investigate the conduct of any real-estate broker or real-estate salesman, or any person who shall assume to act in either such capacity within the District of Columbia, and shall have the power to suspend or to revoke any license issued under the provisions of this act, at any time where the licensee has by false or fraudulent representation obtained a license; or where the licensee, in performing or attempting to perform any of the acts mentioned herein, has—

(a) Made any substantial misrepresentation;

(b) Made any false promises of a character likely to influence, persuade, or induce;

(c) Pursued a continued and flagrant course of misrepresentation, or making of false promises through agents or salesmen, or advertising or otherwise;

(d) Acted for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge of all parties for whom he acts;

(e) Accepted a commission or valuable consideration as a real-estate salesman for the performance of any of the acts specified in this act from any person, except an employer who is a licensed real-estate broker;

(f) Represented or attempted to represent a real-estate broker other than the employer without the express knowledge and consent of the employer;

(g) Failed, within a reasonable time, to account for or to remit any money, valuable documents, or other property coming into his possession which belong to others;

(h) Demonstrated such unworthiness or incompetency to act as a real-estate broker or salesman as to endanger the interests of the public;

(i) Paid or offered to pay a commission or valuable consideration to any person for acts or services in violation of this act, with knowledge of such violation or where reasonable diligence has not been exercised to acquire such knowledge; or

(j) Been guilty of any other conduct, whether of the same or a different character from that hereinbefore specified, which constitutes fraudulent or dishonest dealing.

PROVISION FOR HEARING BEFORE APPLICATION IS REFUSED OR LICENSE SUSPENDED OR REVOKED

SEC. 9. The Commission shall, before denying an application for license, or before suspending or revoking any license, set the matter down for a public hearing, and at least 10 days prior to the date set for the hearing it shall notify the applicant or licensee in writing of any charges made and shall afford said applicant or licensee an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel in reference thereto. Such written notice may be served by delivery of same personally to the applicant or licensee or by mailing same by registered mail to the last-known business address of such applicant or licensee. If said applicant or licensee be a salesman, the Commission shall also notify the broker employing him, or whose employ he is about to enter, by mailing notice by registered mail to the broker's last-known address. The hearing on such charges shall be at such time and place as the Commission shall prescribe. The Commission shall have the power to subpena and bring before it any person in the District of Columbia, or take testimony of any such person by deposition in the same manner and with the same fees and mileage as prescribed by law in judicial procedure in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in civil cases. It shall also have the power to require the production of books, records, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise. Any party to any hearing before the Commission shall have the right to the attendance of witnesses in his behalf at such hearing upon making request therefor to the Commission and designating the person or persons sought to be subpenaed. If the Commission shall determine that any applicant is not qualified to receive a license, a license shall not be granted to said applicant; and if the Commission shall determine that any licensee is guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, his or its licenses shall be suspended or revoked. All evidence before and findings of fact made by the Commission and questions of law involved in any final decision or determination of the Commission shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia upon a writ of certiorari, mandamus, or by any other method permissible under the rules and practices of said court or the laws of the District of Columbia, and the said court may make such further orders with respect thereto as justice may require: Provided, however, That application is made by the aggrieved party to the court within 30 days after any determination by the Commission or within 60 days after formal request shall be made upon it for action. Such application shall operate as a stay of any action or finding of the Commission revoking or suspending a license, and until final decision by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia such licensee shall have the right to continue in business.

An appeal may be taken from the judgment of the said court on any such appeal on the same terms and conditions as an appeal is taken in civil actions.

NONRESIDENT BROKERS AND SALESMEN

SEC. 10. A nonresident of the District of Columbia may become a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman in the District of Columbia by conforming to all of the conditions of this act, except that the application of such person for a license need not be accompanied by the recommendation of real-estate owners in the District of Columbia prescribed in paragraph 2 of section 5 of this act, but in lieu thereof the Commission shall require the filing of like recommendations by similarly qualified real-estate owners of property in the State, Territory, or county of such applicant's residence.

(2) The Commission may recognize, in lieu of the recommendation and statements otherwise required by this act to accompany an application for a license, the valid and existing license issued to a nonresident to act as a real-estate broker or salesman by any State having a law for the licensing of such brokers and salesmen similar to this act upon payment of the license fee prescribed by this act and the filing by the applicant with the Commission of a duly authenticated copy of applicant's license issued by such State: Provided, however, That every nonresident applicant shall file an irrevocable consent that suits and actions may be commenced against such applicant in the proper courts of the District of Columbia by the service of any process or pleadings authorized by the laws of the United States applying to the District of Columbia on the secretary of the Commission, said consent stipulating and agreeing that such service of such process or pleadings on said secretary shall be taken and held in all courts to be as valid and binding as if due or personal service had been made upon said applicant in the District of Columbia. Said instrument containing such consent shall be duly acknowledged and if made by a corporation shall be authenticated by the seal thereof. All such applications, except from individuals, shall be accompanied by a duly certified copy of the resolution of the proper officers or managing board authorizing the proper officer to execute the same. In case any process or pleadings mentioned in the act are served upon the secretary of the Commission, it shall be by duplicate copies, one of which shall be filed in the office of the Commission and the other immediately forwarded by registered mail to the residence address given by the applicant against which said process or pleadings are directed: And provided further, That every nonresident of the District of Columbia shall file a bond in form and contents the same as is required of applicants under section 5 of this act.

POWER TO OBTAIN EVIDENCE

SEC. 11. Each member of the Commission and its duly authorized representatives may administer oaths to witnesses.

In case of the refusal of any person to comply with any subpena issued hereunder or to testify to any matter regarding which he may lawfully be interrogated, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or any judge thereof, on application of any member of the Commission, shall issue an order requiring such person to comply with such subpena and to testify or either, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

OTHERS EXEMPT

SEC. 12. It shall not be necessary for any trustee or auctioneer acting under authority of a power of sale in a mortgage, deed of trust, or similar instrument securing the payment of a bona fide debt, nor any bank, trust company, building-and-loan association, or any land-mortgage or farm-loan association, organized under the laws of the United States, when engaged in the transaction of business within the scope of its corporate powers and provided by law, to obtain a license under this act.

CONVICTION OF CRIME

SEC. 15. Where during the term of any license issued by the Commission the licensee shall be convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction in the District of Columbia or any State (including Federal courts) of forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud, or other like offense or offenses and a duly certified or exemplified copy of the record in such proceedings shall be filed with the Commission, the Commission shall revoke forthwith the license by it theretofore issued to the licensee so convicted.

In the event that any licensee shall be indicted in the District of Columbia or any State or Territory (including Federal courts) for forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud, or other like offense and a certified copy of the indictment be filed with the Commission, or other proper evidence thereof be to it given, the Commission shall have authority, in its discretion, to suspend the license issued to such licensee pending trial upon such indictment.

No license shall be issued by the Commission to any person known by it to have been, within 5 years theretofore, convicted of forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion criminal conspiracy to defraud, or other like offense or offenses, or to any copartnership of which such person is a member, or to any association or corporation of which said person is an officer, director, or employee, or in which as a stockholder such person has or exercises a controlling interest either directly or indirectly. In the event of the revocation or suspension of the license issued to any member of a copartnership, or to any officer of an association or corporation, the license issued to such copartnership, association, or corporation, shall be revoked by the Commission, unless, within a time fixed by the Commission, where a copartnership, the connection therewith of the member whose license has been revoked shall be severed and his interest in the copartnership and his share in its activities brought to an end, or where an association or corporation, the offending officer shall be discharged and shall have no further participation in its activity.

PENALTIES

SEC. 16. Any person or corporation violating any provision of this act shall upon conviction thereof, if a person, be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment for a term not to exceed 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court; and, if a corporation, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000. The Congress of the United States hereby declares that it would have passed this act, and each section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, and requirement thereof irrespective of the fact that any one or more sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, phrases, or requirements be declared unconstitutional or invalid.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 29) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the popular election of President and Vice President of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Owing to the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and at his request, I desire to object to the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 29, and the next succeeding measure, the bill (S. 2359) to provide for the disposition of unclaimed deposits in national banks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the joint resolution and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2500) to aid in relieving the existing national emergency through the free distribution to the needy of cotton and cotton products was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. FESS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2018) relative to Members of Congress acting as attorneys in matters where the United States has an interest was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILSON G. BINGHAM

The bill (H.R. 2632) for the relief of Wilson G. Bingham was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I asked that it go over.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill has been on the calendar for some time. The House passed a bill authorizing the War Department to assemble a board to consider the case of this officer and report as to whether he should be reinstated. The War Department recommended against his reinstatement, but did state that he was entitled to consideration. The bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs is in accordance with recommendation of the War Department itself, or at least it suggested the form of bill and said it would have no objection to it. We followed that recommendation.

If the Senator from New Hampshire desires the passage of the House bill without the Senate committee amendments, I have no objection to it, and I do not think the committee will have any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senate should reject the amendments reported by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, then the bill would be passed in the form in which it passed the House.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I have no objection to the rejection of the Senate committee amendments and the passage of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah objects, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice. There are certain amendments being considered by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PREVENTION OF USE OF FEDERAL PATRONAGE IN ELECTIONS

SEC. 2. Violations of section 1 hereof shall be punishable by a fine not more than $1,000 and by loss of the official position of such person committing such violation.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL CREDIT UNION SYSTEM

The bill (S. 1639) to establish a Federal Credit Union System, to establish a further market for securities of the United States, and to make more available to people of small means credit for provident purposes through a national system of cooperative credit, thereby helping to stabilize the credit structure of the United States, was considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All amendments to the bill have been heretofore agreed to. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Applications for loans shall be made on forms prepared by such committee, which shall set forth the purpose for which the loan is desired, the security, if any, and such other data as may be required.

(e) Supervisory committee.—The supervisory committee shall make an examination of the affairs of the Federal Credit Union at least quarterly, including an audit of its books, shall make an annual audit and a report to be submitted at the annual meeting of the corporation; by a unanimous vote may suspend any officer of the corporation, or any member of the credit committee or of the board of directors until the next members' meeting, which said meeting shall, however, be held within 7 days of said suspension, at which meeting said suspension shall be acted upon by the members; and, by a majority vote, may call a special meeting of the shareholders to consider any violation of this act or of the bylaws, or any practice of the corporation deemed by the committee to be unsafe and unauthorized. The said committee shall fill vacancies in its own membership until successors to be elected at the next annual meeting have qualified: Provided, however, That before the treasurer shall enter upon his duties he shall give bond with good and sufficient security, in an amount and character to be determined from time to time by the board of directors conditioned upon the faithful performance of his trust, and approved by the governor of the Federal Reserve bank within the district in which the credit union operates. The supervisory committee shall cause to be verified from time to time, and not less frequently than once every 2 years, the passbooks of the members with the records of the treasurer.

RESERVES

SEC. 12. All entrance fees and fines provided by the bylaws and, before the declaration of any dividend, 20 percent of the net earnings of each year shall be set aside as a reserve fund against possible bad loans, which funds shall be kept liquid and intact and not distributed except in case of liquidation.

DIVIDENDS

SEC. 13. At the annual meeting a dividend may be declared from net earnings on recommendation of the board of directors, which dividend shall be paid on all paid-up shares outstanding at the end of the preceding fiscal year. Shares which became fully paid up during such year shall be entitled to a proportional part of said dividend calculated from the 1st day of the month following such payment in full.

EXPULSION AND WITHDRAWAL

SEC. 14. A member may be expelled by a two-thirds vote of the members of a Federal Credit Union present at a special meeting called for such purpose, but only after an opportunity has been given him to be heard. The Federal Credit Union may require 60 days' notice of intention to withdraw shares and 30 days' notice of intention to withdraw deposits, which period of notice may be extended if in the opinion of the board of directors the best interests of the Federal Credit Union require and for such longer time as the said governor of the Federal Reserve bank in the district in which the Federal Credit Union operates may permit. Expulsion or withdrawal shall not operate to relieve a member from any liability to the Federal Credit Union. All amounts paid in on shares or deposits by expelled or withdrawing members prior to their expulsion or withdrawal shall be paid to them in order of their withdrawal or expulsion, but only as funds become available and after deducting any amounts due from such members to the Federal Credit Union.

MINORS

SEC. 15. Shares may be issued and deposits received in the name of a minor or in trust in such manner as the bylaws may provide. The name of the beneficiary shall be disclosed to the Federal Credit Union.

RESTRICTION ON THE USE OF THE WORDS "FEDERAL CREDIT UNION"

SEC. 16. It shall be unlawful for any individual, partnership, association, or corporation, except corporations organized in accordance with the provisions of this act, to transact business under any name or title containing the words in combination "Federal Credit Union" or "Federal Central Credit Union", or other words indicating that the business is transacted pursuant to the authority of this act of Congress. This section shall not, however, apply to credit unions organized and operating in accordance with the terms of State credit union laws. Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10 for each day during which the violation continues.

The said board of directors shall, within 30 days of the receipt thereof, approve it or disapprove it, and shall notify the subscribers to the certificate of its decision. During the month of January in each year thereafter following the completion of the first full fiscal year of the said Federal Central Credit Union, a similar fee of $100 shall be paid to the said bank for cooperatives for deposit by it in the Treasury to the credit of the United States. Federal Central Credit Unions shall be examined at least once annually by the Comptroller of the Currency and shall pay the actual cost of said examination. (8) To pay interest on deposits from member credit unions at a rate which shall not exceed 5 percent per annum and to pay dividends on its shares at a rate which shall not exceed 6 percent per annum.

(12) To impress a lien upon the shares and dividends and deposits and deposit interest of any member to the extent of any loan made it and any dues and fines payable by it.

BYLAWS

SEC. 20. At the time of presenting the organization certificate the incorporators shall submit to the board of directors of the bank for cooperatives in the Federal Reserve district in which said Federal Central Credit Union is to be located proposed bylaws which shall be prepared on a standard form as approved for Federal Central Credit Unions operating in accordance with this act by the said board of directors of said bank for cooperatives. In order to simplify the organization of Federal Central Credit Unions the said board of directors of said bank for cooperatives shall, upon the passage of this act, cause to be prepared a form of organization certificate and a form of bylaws consistent with this act which they shall supply to credit unions for their guidance in the organization of Federal Central Credit Unions.

MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 21. Membership in a Federal Central Credit Union shall consist of the credit unions within the State within which it operates which are eligible to membership and comply with the conditions of membership as herein set forth. All Federal Credit Unions in any State in which a Federal Central Credit Union is in process of organization or has been organized may join it upon compliance with the terms of this act, as may all credit unions organized in accordance with State laws in said State if said State laws permit said membership in a Federal Central Credit Union and the said State credit union has the approval of the board of directors of the bank for cooperatives in the Federal Reserve district within which it operates after said board of directors shall have determined on examination that said State credit union is in satisfactory condition.

MEMBERS' MEETINGS

SEC. 22. The fiscal year of all Federal Central Credit Unions shall end December 31 of each year. The annual meeting of the said Federal Central Credit Union shall be held at such time during the month of the following January and at such place as the bylaws shall prescribe. Special meetings shall be held in the manner indicated in the bylaws. No member credit union shall have more than one vote, which shall be cast at meetings by a delegate duly authorized by said member credit union as its representative, and there shall be no proxy voting. All offices of a Federal Central Credit Union shall be located in the State within which it is organized.

MANAGEMENT

SEC. 23. The business affairs of a Federal Central Credit Union shall be managed by a board of not less than 11 directors and a supervisory committee of 3 members, to be elected at the annual meeting and to hold office for such terms respectively as the bylaws may provide and until successors qualify, except that the subscribers to the organization certificate shall elect from the membership of the credit unions which they represent the first board which shall serve until the first annual meeting following said organization meeting. No credit union may have more than one of its members on the board of directors at any one time. Two months prior to the annual meeting in each year the clerk of the board of directors of a Federal Central Credit Union shall notify each member credit union of the date, hour, and place of the next annual meeting as determined by the board of directors and the number of vacancies to be filled, if any, on the board of directors and the supervisory committee, requesting each credit union to nominate one of its members to a vacancy on said board or committee if no one of its members is a member of said board or committee whose term does not expire at said annual meeting. Elections at the annual meetings shall be by ballot and shall be confined to nominees named in the way and manner above indicated: Provided, however, That if there is not a sufficient number of such nominees to fill existing vacancies, nominations completing the necessary number may be made from the floor. A record of the names and addresses of the members of the board and of the supervisory committee elected shall be filed with the bank for cooperatives in the Federal Reserve district within which said Federal Central Credit Union has its principal office within 10 days after said election. No member of said board or of said committee shall as such be compensated, but the actual expenses of a member of said board of directors or of said supervisory committee incurred in attending meetings may be refunded to said member.

The board of directors shall have the general direction of the affairs of the association, including the matter of determining loans. They shall fix the amount of the surety bond which they shall require of any officer or employee having custody of funds; recommend the declaration of dividends within the limit herein contained; determine the interest rates on loans to members and the interest rate to be paid on deposits, both within the limits herein indicated; fill vacancies in the board until successors to be elected at the next annual meeting have qualified; elect from their own number the officers; have charge of all investments within the limitations herein set forth; determine from time to time the maximum amount which may be loaned to any one member which loans shall be made on an application form prepared by said board of directors which application shall set forth the purpose of the loan, the terms and security offered, together with a certified copy of the vote of the board of directors of the borrowing credit union authorizing acceptance of said loan and the authority required by any State law or this act as a condition precedent to the right of a credit union to borrow in the way and manner provided, together with a statement that the total amount owed by the borrowing credit union including the proposed loan does not exceed the borrowing limit of the credit union as established by State law or by this act.

At their first meeting, which shall be held within not less than 10 days after the annual meeting of the membership, the directors shall elect from their own number a president, a vice president, a clerk, and a treasurer, who shall be the executive officers of the said Federal Central Credit Union, who shall hold office for the terms indicated in the bylaws and until successors are elected and qualify. The duties of the officers shall be as provided by the bylaws, except that the treasurer shall be general manager. The officers may be compensated in such amounts as the directors may from time to time determine within the limits set each year by the members at their annual meeting. The supervisory committee shall make or cause to be made an examination of the affairs of the Federal Central Credit Union at least quarterly, including an audit of its books; shall make an annual audit and a report to be submitted at the annual meeting of the corporation; may by a unanimous vote suspend any officer of the corporation or any member of the board of directors until the next members' meeting, which said meeting shall, however, be held within 15 days of said suspension, at which meeting said suspension shall be acted upon by the members; and, by a majority vote, may call a special meeting of the members to consider any violation of this act or of the bylaws, or any practice of the corporation deemed by the committee to be unsafe or unauthorized. The said committee shall fill vacancies in its own membership until successors to be elected at the next annual meeting have qualified: Provided, however, That before the treasurer shall enter upon his duties he shall give a surety bond in an amount and character to be determined from time to time by the board of directors, conditioned upon the faithful performance of his trust and approved by the board of directors of the bank for cooperatives within the Federal Reserve district in which the Federal Central Credit Union operates.

REPORTS

SEC. 24. The Federal Central Credit Union shall make such reports from time to time as may be required by the Comptroller of the Treasury or by the board of directors of the bank for cooperatives in the Federal Reserve district within which it operates.

RESERVES

SEC. 25. Each credit union on joining a Federal Central Credit Union shall pay an entrance fee of $10. The entrance fees, together with all fines and, before the declaration of a dividend each year as hereinafter provided, 20 percent of the net earnings of each year, shall be set aside as a reserve fund against possible bad loans, which fund shall be kept liquid and intact and not distributed except in case of liquidation. To this fund shall also be added at the end of each fiscal year all undivided earnings.

DIVIDENDS

SEC. 26. At the annual meeting of the membership a dividend may be declared out of net earnings within the limits hereinbefore indicated. Said dividends shall be paid on all paid-up shares outstanding at the end of the preceding fiscal year. Shares which became fully paid up during such year shall be entitled to a proportional part of said dividend calculated from the 1st day of the month following such payment in full.

EXPULSION AND WITHDRAWAL

SEC. 27. A member of a Federal Central Credit Union may be expelled by a two-thirds vote of the members of the Federal Central Credit Union at a special meeting called for such purpose, but only after an opportunity has been given to be heard. The Federal Central Credit Union may require 60 days' notice of the intention of a member credit union to withdraw shares, which withdrawal may be permitted to a minimum of 10 shares per member and may require 30 days' notice of the intention of a member credit union to withdraw deposits. The period of withdrawal notice may in either case be extended by said board of directors if in their opinion the best interests of the Federal Central Credit Union require and for such longer time as the board of directors of the bank for cooperatives in the Federal Reserve district in which the said Federal Central Credit Union has its principal office may permit. Expulsion or withdrawal shall not operate to relieve a member credit union from any liability to the Federal Central Credit Union. All amounts paid in on such shares or deposits by expelled or withdrawing member credit unions prior to their expulsion or withdrawal shall be paid to them in order of their withdrawal or expulsion, but only as funds become available and after deducting any amounts due from such member credit unions to the Federal Central Credit Union.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO ALTER

SEC. 28. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act or any part thereof, or any charter or certificate of incorporation issued pursuant to the provisions of this act.

MURIEL CRICHTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3264) for the relief of Muriel Crichton, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Muriel Crichton, of Washington, D.C., the sum of $10,000, in full and final settlement of all claims for hospitalization and medical and other charges and expenses, and for pain, suffering, and damage to her person, resulting from an injury suffered by her as the result of being knocked down by an employee of the Senate at or near the east door of the Senate Chamber on March 28, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH T. CLOUD

The bill (H.R. 190) for the relief of Elizabeth T. Cloud was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SNARE & TRIEST CO.

The bill (S. 1760) for the relief of the Snare & Triest Co., now Frederick Snare Corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of this bill. It carries an appropriation of $88,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will look at the long paragraph at the top of page 2 of the report on this bill, he will find a very full explanation of the bill. The plans of a breakwater, for which there was an estimated contract price of $1,705,000, exceeded the amount actually appropriated in the act, which was $1,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, did the Department recommend the bill?

Mr. COPELAND (reading):

> The Navy Department will interpose no objections to the enactment of the bill—
> The Senator will find that statement on page 11—
> should the Congress see fit to authorize the readjudication of the case as proposed.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that this does not seem to be a readjudication. It is a direct appropriation, as I understand.

Mr. COPELAND. There is an amendment at the end of the bill, as the Senator will see if he will read it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that this is a readjudication. It is a direct appropriation. I have no objection to an amendment that will send the matter to the Court of Claims, or, if necessary, set up a special commission; but a direct appropriation after the bill has been adversely reported upon by the Department, or, at any rate, has not been recommended, does not seem to me proper.

Mr. COUZENS. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HAROLD SORENSON

The bill (S. 1822) for the relief of Harold Sorenson was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont explain the bill?

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, Harold Sorenson, the claimant, was a major in the Construction Department of the United States Army. He had to do with letting contracts for the construction of some work in connection with Camp Grafton, in North Dakota. The work was carried out, but it was claimed that he exceeded the time limit stated in his instructions. The War Department reports that—

> Notwithstanding the apparent lack of care in the observance of applicable regulations on Major Sorenson's part, it is believed that his action was taken in good faith; and it is deemed certain that the additional work performed at his direction, without proper authority, would have had to be carried out long since, at Federal expense, in any event.
> Favorable consideration of the bill for Major Sorenson's relief is therefore recommended.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I note in the communication of the Comptroller General the following statement:

> There being no showing of any authority from the Militia Bureau, War Department, for the expenditure, nor any authority in the adjutant general of the State of North Dakota to expend Federal funds by requiring this work to be done at Camp Grafton, situated upon State land, this office disallowed credit in the settlement of the account of Disbursing Officer Sorenson for the $1,518.91 paid by him to the contractor.
> For the United States to pay this bill for $1,518.91 for improvements made on State land at the instance of the adjutant general of the State may establish a precedent for similar unauthorized and illegal transactions. Disbursing Officer Sorenson, who made the payment of the $1,518.91 to the contractor, and is now responsible therefor to the United States under his bond, could have protected himself by submitting to this office the voucher in advance of payment, for a decision as to its legality. In lieu of doing so he elected to make the payment and assume responsibility therefor.
> The price paid for the work appears to have been reasonable. Other than as indicated no objection is offered.

Under that report from the Comptroller General I do not believe this bill ought to be passed with the limited consideration that can now be given. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. NYE subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 1822, Order of Business 888. The Senator from Arkansas has consented to withdraw his objection to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have examined the report, and find that the payment is unqualifiedly recommended by the Secretary of War. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Harold Sorenson, major,

United States property and disbursing officer, North Dakota National Guard, in the amount of $1,518.91, representing the credit disallowed in such accounts by reason of the payment of such sum by such Harold Sorenson during the year 1926, out of funds of the United States, for certain work in connection with the construction of a water-supply system near Camp Grafton, N.Dak., pursuant to obligations incurred after the termination of the authority for such obligations.

DEPOSITS OF MONEYS OF PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT

The bill (S. 3439) relating to deposits in the United States of public moneys of the government of the Philippine Islands was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept, upon such terms and conditions as he may from time to time prescribe, deposits of public moneys of the government of the Philippine Islands and to pay out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated interest on any or all of such deposits other than demand deposits, at such rate or rates, not in excess of 2 percent per annum, as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe.

JOE G. M'INERNEY

The bill (H.R. 5542) for the relief of Joe G. McInerney was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] explain the bill? I find a report from the Secretary of the Treasury against the passage of the bill. I read from the report:

In view of the nature of the discharge of Jos. McInerney I do not feel that I can give my approval to the bill under notice.

That is signed by the Secretary of the Treasury. I am wondering why the bill was reported.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, it is true that the language read by the Senator from Tennessee was used by the Secretary of the Treasury; but there are no records available that show the cause of this discharge. Statements were made by persons who were in service with this particular man, and they gave him a very high recommendation, stating that he had been for many years a good citizen.

I recall that this little incident was brought to my notice: On one occasion 2 years ago it became necessary to reduce the personnel 30 percent, and the men were relieved from service and dishonorably discharged. There was not a thing in the world in their records to justify such action. I took up the matter with the proper department and was informed as to the reason for the discharge of this part of the personnel, and it was stated that there was nothing adverse to the records of the men. Just why that course was pursued I do not know; but one of the men interested in this particular matter stated that after this man had been discharged he had a conversation with his superior officer, who spoke of him in the highest terms. There was nothing to indicate that he had ever been charged with anything which might be regarded as dishonorable conduct.

This matter was discussed at some length in the committee, and the whole case was gone into; and after the discussion it was determined by the vote of every member present that a favorable report should be made, despite the objection of the Secretary.

So far as I am concerned, I feel that this man's record should be changed. The bill does not carry any back pay, pension, allowances, or anything of the kind. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] wrote a letter in regard to the matter. I see him in the Chamber now. He states in the letter that he does not have any facts other than those set out in the House of Representatives. However, a statement under oath has been made by this man. I think there is no doubt that this is a proper bill.

I have nothing further to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROMLINE CREEK, N.Y.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3408) to provide for a preliminary examination of Cromline Creek in the State of New York, with a view to the control of its floods, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "the cost thereof to be paid from the annual appropriation of the War Department" and to insert "in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes', approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of Cromline Creek in the State of New York, with a view to control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARLO DE LUCA

The bill (S. 2806) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Carlo de Luca was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] whether this alleged breach of contract, if it was a breach, occurred immediately after the war?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, this case is a rather peculiar one. This man De Luca was treated differently from everyone else who had contracts with the Government at the time. The Government requisitioned his contracts under an agreement that they should pay him the amount he had actually expended in carrying out the contracts, and also that they should make fair and just compensation for incidental expenses which were mentioned. Under the plan the War Department had in effect, they paid whatever expenses the contractors had been out, and then paid 75 percent of the additional expenses claimed, and allowed them to litigate the balance. But they were very arbitrary with this claimant. He was an Italian subject, was not in this country, and for that reason he was unable to collect, or have a hearing on his claim for incidental expenses. They offered him $20,000 on each boat, arbitrarily, and told him to take that or nothing. They were about to sue him on his primary obligation for the money he used in reconditioning the boats, so he accepted. Now he simply asks to be allowed to go into the Court of Claims.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was about to ask if this bill merely proposes to let him go to the Court of Claims?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; to litigate his claim.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and it is hereby, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of Carlo de Luca, and to award him just compensation for losses and damages, if any, which he may have suffered through action of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation in commandeering or requisitioning two certain contracts dated June 25, 1917, which the said Carlo de Luca owned and which he had with the Standard Shipbuilding Corporation of New York for the construction and delivery of two certain ships designated as "hulls 12 and 13"; and to enter decree or judgment against the United States for such just compensation, if any, notwithstanding the bars or defenses of any alleged settlement or adjustment heretofore made or of res judicata, lapse of time, laches, or any statute of limitation: Provided, however, That the United States shall be given credit for any sum heretofore paid the said Carlo de Luca by reason of said action of the United States Shipping Board and/or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

SEC. 2. Such claim may, under section 1 of this act, be instituted at any time within 4 months from the approval of this act. Proceedings in any suit brought in the Court of Claims under this act, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

MORSE DRYDOCK & REPAIR CO.

The bill (S. 3280) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the claim of the Morse Drydock & Repair Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we must have an explanation of this bill. A very large amount of money is called for.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, let the bill go over temporarily. I have just come into the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. WAGNER subsequently said: Mr. President, may we return to Senate bill 3280, Order of Business 895, to which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] objected? He has consented to withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent to return to Senate bill 3280. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to returning to the bill. I find that while the sum is a large one, the amount involved in the bill has already been authorized by the Court of Claims. Under those circumstances, of course the bill should be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $331,879.25, as reimbursement for repairing and reconditioning the steamships Princess Matoika, Pocahontas, Susquehanna, Potomac, America, and George Washington, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, second session.

MARIE LOUISE BELANGER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2872) for the relief of Marie Louise Belanger, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims of Marie Louise Belanger against the Government on account of the death of her husband, Alfred Belanger, caused by an explosion in the meter house of the Federal Hospital for Defective Delinquents, at Springfield, Mo., on September 15, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand the liability that is being recognized in this bill grows out of an explosion which occurred under the responsibility of the Government. Is that correct?

Mr. GIBSON. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report of the Assistant Attorney General states:

Under these circumstances, it appears there would be little doubt as to the Government's liability if it could be held answerable in tort for the acts of its agents.

I see no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STELLA D. WICKERSHAM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2873) for the relief of Stella D. Wickersham, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims of Stella D. Wickersham against the Government on account of the death of her husband, Robert L. Wickersham, caused by an explosion in the meter house of the Federal Hospital for Defective Delinquents, at Springfield, Mo., on September 15, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDEMNITY BONDS FOR NATIONAL BANKS

The bill (S. 2915) requiring national banks to obtain indemnity bonds from State qualified bonding companies, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NcNARY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] desires to be present when this bill is presented to the Senate, and, in his absence, I ask that it go over.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, if objection is made, the bill must go over.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask the Senator from Oregon to withdraw his objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the rule would not permit such a motion anyway. We are considering unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. KING. The motion would be resisted.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it could be done by unanimous consent. This is a matter in which the Committee on Banking and Currency is very much interested, and I think by unanimous consent the bill should be referred to that committee. We can do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. But not by motion.

Mr. COUZENS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken from the calendar and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I vigorously object. This bill is similar to one that has long been buried in the Committee on Banking and Currency. The pending measure was, without any suggestion on my part, properly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. A subcommittee of that committee held hearings on the bill. The printed record of those hearings has been available to the Members of the Senate for more than a week. The bill is on the calendar and should be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say a word about this matter. I think it will be universally conceded in the Senate that this is an unprecedented performance. The bill, as appears on the face of it, belongs within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency and not in any sense within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary. Not only that, but the Banking and Currency subcommittee, of which I happen to be chairman, held preliminary hearings on the bill, and while they were engaged in its consideration a similar bill was introduced and referred to a committee which has no jurisdiction whatsoever of matters of this kind.

I did not know that had been done. We had scores of telegrams from banks all over the country protesting against the bill, and letters pointing out in detail the very severe injustice that would be done if the bill, in the form in which it is now presented, should be enacted into law. We assured the protestants that formal hearings would be held by the Committee on Banking and Currency if it should appear that the bill needed any modification.

Not only that, but a member of the subcommittee, the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], made a personal investigation, and reported to the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency that, in the form in which the bill is now presented, it was doubtful whether there were more than two or three insurance companies in the United States sufficiently solvent to insure the losses from mismanagement or otherwise of national banks.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the committee itself, to which this bill was referred, and where it is now, feel under obligation, if the bill is to be considered right away, to invite these gentlemen here, as we promised to do, in order that they may make their formal and detailed protests against the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me or anyone else to defend the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. Each member thereof is able to defend himself. My learned friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] laments that the bill now being discussed was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

If any other Senator had used the word "performance" as it was employed by the Senator from Virginia, I should have passed it by, but the Senator from Virginia, being a master of language, is able by one word to attach an epithet when he chooses. By his ripe and rare scholarship he is able to stigmatize a matter with a word, and I do not particularly like the way he used the word "performance." [Laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. Very well, Mr. President; I ask to have the word obliterated from my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. That would result in the obliteration of my remarks, so I would have to object. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the last thing the Senate Committee on the Judiciary desires is more jurisdiction. I hold in my hand our committee calendar. We are not more assiduous and more industrious than the members of other committees, but I lay it down that I, as a healthy man, and members of my committee, as healthy gentlemen, are working to the point of pain and heavy pressure on the Committee on the Judiciary.

I want it understood, therefore, that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary did not seek jurisdiction of this bill. It was introduced in the regular way, openly, by the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. In accordance with our rule—I suppose the rule is a hundred years old—the bill was referred to a subcommittee, with instructions to that subcommittee to employ a stenographer and to hear all persons who wished to be heard.

The record shows that there were hearings. The subcommittee consisted of Senators NEELY, VAN NUYS, and ROBINSON of Indiana. The hearings were printed. After the subcommittee made its report on the bill, there was an able discussion on it in the main committee. Therefore, with due deference to my able friend, he is not justified in catapulting over the country the idea that some "performance" took place respecting this bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment and I will yield. I want the country and the Senate to know that the Judiciary Committee treated this bill in the regular way, discussed it at length, and held hearings. If jurisdiction should not have been lodged with us in the first instance, the move should have been made promptly to have the bill referred to another committee.

Moreover, only last Monday a suggestion was made in the Judiciary Committee that we did not have jurisdiction of a claims bill, and, by unanimous vote, we sent the bill to the Committee on Claims, indicating that we are not seeking jurisdiction.

Last year a certain bill was introduced which went to the Judiciary Committee. It related, we thought, to foreign affairs, and we sent the bill back for reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. However, we could see no reason why the Senate Committee on the Judiciary should not take cognizance of the bill now under discussion.

I beg my worthy friend from Virginia to believe me when I say again that if any other Senator had used the word "performance" I should not have risen, because no other Senator is capable of that remarkable use of language which can attach to one word the meaning and the import that my learned friend from Virginia can attach to a word.

Mr. GLASS. I appeal to the distinguished Senator from Arizona, who so far exceeds me in the ability to use words, to tell me just what word he has in his remarkable vocabulary to describe an activity of that sort. Suppose a bill relating——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas demands the regular order. Objection has been heard, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before we pass to the next bill on the calendar, permit me to make a brief statement in connection with this matter which I think I should make now.

I introduced in the Senate a bill of similar import to the one now being discussed, and it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. We have a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency dealing with national banks and legislation pertaining to national banks, of which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is chairman. The bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and by that committee referred to the subcommittee I have mentioned. Afterward the bill now under discussion was introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That was clearly a mistake. It should never have been done.

If the Banking and Currency Committee has any jurisdiction at all, it has jurisdiction of such matters as contained in this bill. The bill which I originally introduced is still before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. I have no personal interest in the present personalities of explanations and desire to take no part in the discussion other than to show the history of the bill. Undoubtedly a mistake was made when the bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee. Now the question is whether the bill should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency as suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]. However, the bill has gone over. I simply wanted to make the explanation for the RECORD.

SALE OF REAL ESTATE UNDER COURT ORDER

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] asked that House bill 1567 go over in order that I have an opportunity to read the report. I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 1567) amending section 1 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat.L. 751), providing for the method of selling real estate under an order or decree of any United States court.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the change which the bill makes in existing law?

Mr. STEPHENS. The change is simply to permit real estate to be sold at private sale. The sale is safeguarded by the first provision, which requires the court to appoint three appraisers, and provides that the price agreed upon shall not be less than two thirds of the appraised value. It is stated in the report by several judges, and known to be a fact, I am sure, by many of us, that very frequently when property is put up at public sale it brings a very small price, and yet the sale is confirmed unless some person offers more, and unless that happens, of course, the owner of the property obtains a very small sum for his property.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is not what the bill proposes in violation of the custom which at present prevails in every jurisdiction, both State and national?

Mr. STEPHENS. It is stated in a letter from a judge:

> This authority has for many years been vested in the judges of the State court.

I have not run down the statutes of the various States. I took it for granted that this judge was correct in his statement.

The bill has the approval of the Attorney General, and has passed the House. It seems to me that it might be quite helpful in many cases for negotiations to be made with reference to a private sale, and that in many instances perhaps more will be received for the real estate than if the property is offered at public sale.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the law of the State of Mississippi permit such sale? The law of the State of Tennessee does not. Of course, I am not familiar with the laws of all States, but I know of no State in which such a practice is permitted.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not at all sure that it is permitted in the State of Mississippi, but I was accepting the view of the Attorney General, and I was accepting the statement of the judge I referred to, Judge F. P. Shoonmaker, of Pittsburgh, Pa., one of the Federal judges. There are letters also from two other Federal judges favoring the bill.

I have no personal interest in the bill, and I care nothing about it, but in view of the fact that the Attorney General favored it, that the House favored it, and that the arguments presented for the bill had merit, it seemed to me it might be well to pass it.

Mr. DILL. Is it proposed to give such authority to any United States court anywhere in the country?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; the bill relates to any Federal court.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask when the Attorney General made the report? Has the bill gone to the present Attorney General for consideration?

Mr. STEPHENS. This language is contained in the House report:

> The bill has the approval of the Attorney General.

I have not seen that report. I took it for granted, of course, that the House committee made a correct statement about the approval of the Attorney General. It is probable, however, I will say, since I have looked at the dates of the letters from the judges that it might have been the former Attorney General who made the report—Attorney General Mitchell.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President personally, I should prefer to have the bill go over so as to get the views of the present Attorney General.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this bill seems to have stirred up considerable controversy which is delaying the orderly procedure. I ask that it go over.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will pardon me, I will say to him that I was going to accede to the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] that the bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. My suggestion is that if there shall be further debate with reference to the bill, I shall ask for the regular order.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not ask for further debate. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL FACILITIES FOR YAKIMA RESERVATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2506) to provide funds for cooperation with White Swan School District No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the words "to be", to strike out the words "expended, from any moneys now available for construction under provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933" and to insert in lieu thereof "appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of cooperating with White Swan School District, No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension and improvement of public-school buildings: Provided, That the expenditure of any moneys so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all Indian children of the district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS REAL ESTATE OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT

The bill (S. 3457) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell or dispose of certain surplus real estate of the War Department was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That in accordance with, and under the applicable provisions and conditions of, an act entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes", approved March 12, 1926 (44 Stat. 203), except that the net proceeds derived from any sales made under the authority contained in this act shall be covered into the Treasury as "miscellaneous receipts", the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to dispose of the several tracts or parcels of real property hereinafter designated, or portions thereof, upon determination by him that said tracts or parcels, or portions thereof, are no longer needed for military purposes:
> Confederate lot, Greenlawn Cemetery, Indianapolis, Ind.; tract designated no. 2 of Confederate Cemetery, Point Lookout, Md.; Balls Bluff National Cemetery, Va.; Soldiers' lot, Camp Dennison, Ohio.
> SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to discontinue the national cemetery at Balls Bluff, Va., established under the provisions of section 18 of the act of Congress, approved June 17, 1862 (12 Stat. 596), and the Secretary of War is further authorized to disinter and remove to the nearest national cemetery the remains of the soldiers buried in said cemetery.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is not in the Chamber at the moment, and I think the bill should go over until he is here. I ask that the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DONATION OF LAND TO THE TOWN OF BOURNE, MASS.

The bill (H.R. 503) to authorize the donation of certain land to the town of Bourne, Mass., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK J. SULLIVAN

The bill (S. 522) for the relief of Patrick J. Sullivan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that on examining the report submitted by Brigadier General McKinley I find that the soldier was charged with a number of offenses and was tried by courts martial.

After due consideration of the case by the court, including the consideration of evidence of five previous convictions by summary courts martial for absence without leave and drunkenness—

He was found guilty and was sentenced to be dishonorably discharged for the offense, and also to be confined at hard labor for 3 months.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, Mr. Sullivan served one term of 3 years in the military service very acceptably, and was honorably discharged with character very good. Within a week he again joined the military service and served for another 3 years. Within a few days after the expiration of that enlistment he reenlisted and served in another organization of the military service for something like 2 years and 10 months. In all he was in the military service for something over 8 years and 10 months. He became involved in some trifling difficulties with the commanding officer two or three times in connection with small matters that did not seem to amount to much. I had a long letter which he sent me in which he classified these little difficulties. For instance, he was told to do a certain thing by one officer and then another officer came along and told him to do another thing. He stated that he thought he ought to go by the directions given him by the last officer. There were little things such as that.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator consider that the findings of courts martial upon five occasions of offenses such as absence without leave and drunkenness are small matters? Those may be trifling matters in the Army, but I am just calling attention to the findings of the courts martial.

Mr. COOLIDGE. The committee took this matter up. They have rather ruled, generally speaking, that if a man was in the service and was honorably discharged and later got into some difficulty such as in this case——

Mr. KING. And then was dishonorably discharged.

Mr. COOLIDGE. They would give him an honorable discharge. In connection with this bill, for which the committee voted unanimously, there was added a proviso, as follows:

And provided further, That the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred upon Patrick J. Sullivan by reason of the enactment of this act shall be limited to admission to a soldier's home under the regulations governing such admissions.

Mr. KING. If it is limited to that purpose, I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the word "act", to insert an additional proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Patrick J. Sullivan, who was a member of Battery A, Third Regiment United States Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 13th day of November, 1910: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred upon Patrick J. Sullivan by reason of the enactment of this act shall be limited to admission to a soldiers' home under the regulations governing such admissions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY L. REAVES

The bill (S. 2938) for the relief of Harry L. Reaves was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Utah that this bill merely gives this officer the right to make application for benefit under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928. He had a claim pending with the Veterans' Administration and thought that claim covered the matter of benefits under the emergency officers' retirement act, and did not make his application under that act until after the prescribed time had expired. He has a splendid war record, and the committee feeling that he was not responsible for having delayed his application, felt that he should be given the right to make it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to extend the benefits of the act entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War", approved May 24, 1928, to Harry L. Reaves, former captain, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry. The application of the said Harry L. Reaves for the benefits of such act of May 24, 1928, shall be filed with the Veterans' Administration within 6 months from the date of the approval of this act.

PREVENTION OF USURY IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 587) to amend section 1180 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia with respect to usury, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah state what the bill proposes to do?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, many complaints were brought to the Commissioners and by the Commissioners and citizens to the Senate District Committee concerning the usurious charges made by the lenders of money to residents of the District of Columbia, the interest charge, in many instances, being 50 percent. This bill was prepared by the Commissioners and submitted for the consideration of the committee, and, as stated by Mr. Hazen——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments of the committee were, on page 2, line 9, after the word "interest", to insert "on loans, the face amount of which is less than $100"; in line 11, after the word "amount", to insert "not in excess of 10 percent"; in line 20, after the word "loan", to strike out "and any accelerated period or prepayment, and any bona fide rower shall be computed for the contract term and not for any accelerated period or prepayment" and insert "and any bona fide commission. In like manner, the fees, expenses, and commission actually paid or incurred and deemed to be reasonable shall not exceed 8 percent on loans in excess of $100 but not in excess of $200, and 6 percent on loans in excess of $200. In any prosecution or suit arising out of any such transaction the burden shall be upon the lender to establish the absence of knowledge of any such payment and to establish the reasonableness of any such excepted payment"; on page 3, line 9, after the word "receive", to insert "compounded interest or"; in line 12, after the word "annum", to insert "on unpaid balances for the period loaned"; in line 19, after the word "imprisonment", to insert "and prosecutions for violations of this act shall be conducted by the office of the Corporation Counsel in the police court of the District of Columbia", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1180 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1180. What is usury: If pursuant to any arrangement, understanding, or agreement whatsoever, made with the knowledge of the lender, either as a part of the contract of borrowing or collateral thereto, and whether made at, before, or after the time the loan is made, there shall be paid by or at the expense of the borrower to the lender, his or its broker, officer, director, or agent, any commission, bonus, fee, premium, penalty, or other charge, compensation, or gratuity, whatsoever, whether in money, credit, or other thing of value as consideration, compensation, or inducement for obtaining any loan or any renewal, extension, or forbearance thereof, any such payment shall be deemed a part of the interest charged on such loan: Provided, however, That for the purposes of this section interest on loans, the face amount of which is less than $100, shall not be deemed to include such reasonable amount not in excess of 10 percent as shall be actually applied in payment of the reasonable expense of inspecting any security offered in connection with said loan, or investigation of the responsibility of the applicant, the reasonable expense of procuring or extending any abstract of title or certificate of title insurance covering such security, the amount actually paid for the examination of any such abstract or title insurance certificate, or the cost of the preparation, execution, and recording of any papers necessary in consummating such loan and any bona fide commission. In like manner, the fees, expenses, and commission actually paid or incurred and deemed to be reasonable shall not exceed 8 percent on loans in excess of $100 but not in excess of $200, and 6 percent on loans in excess of $200. In any prosecution, or suit arising out of any such transaction, the burden shall be upon the lender to establish the absence of knowledge of any such payment and to establish the reasonableness of any such excepted payment. If any person or corporation shall contract within the District of Columbia, directly or indirectly, on behalf of themselves or otherwise, either verbally, to take or receive compounded interest or a greater rate of interest than 6 percent per annum, or in writing, to take or receive a greater rate of interest than 8 percent per annum on unpaid balances for the period loaned, the creditor shall forfeit the whole of the interest so contracted to be received; and any person or corporation so contracting shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment of not more than 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and prosecutions for violations of this act shall be conducted by the office of the corporation counsel in the police court of the District of Columbia: Provided, That nothing in this chapter contained shall be held to repeal or affect the act of Congress approved February 4, 1913, relating to the business of loaning money on security."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OIL AND GAS ON FORT MORGAN MILITARY RESERVATION, ALA.

The bill (H.R. 8208) to provide for the exploitation of oil, gas, and other minerals on the lands comprising Fort Morgan Military Reservation, Ala., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF LAW RELATIVE TO CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

The bill (H.R. 3673) to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment. I know he desires to offer an amendment which is a friendly amendment. Personally I am very much in opposition to it, and I hope the Senate will vote it down. The Senator, I am sure, is not objecting to the passage of the bill on its merits, but simply that in form he thinks there should be an amendment. I hope the Senate will consider his amendment and vote it down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1993 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1993. Any child hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose father or mother or both at the time of the birth of such child is a citizen of the United States, is declared to be a citizen of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to any such child unless the citizen father or citizen mother, as the case may be, has resided in the United States previous to the birth of such child and unless the child, in cases where one of the parents is an alien, comes to the United States and resides therein for at least 5 years continuously immediately previous to his eighteenth birthday, and unless, within 6 months after the child's twenty-first birthday, he or she shall take an oath of allegiance to the United States of America as prescribed by the Bureau of Naturalization."

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad", approved March 2, 1907, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship by the father or the mother: Provided, That such naturalization or resumption shall take place during the minority of such child: And provided further, That the citizenship of such minor child shall begin 5 years after the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States."

SEC. 3. A citizen of the United States may upon marriage to a foreigner make a formal renunciation of his or her United States citizenship before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens, but no citizen may make such renunciation in time of war, and if war shall be declared within one year after such renunciation then such renunciation shall be void.

SEC. 4. Section 2 of the act entitled "An act relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women", approved September 22, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That an alien who marries a citizen of the United States, after the passage of this act, as here amended, or an alien whose husband or wife is naturalized after the passage of this act, as here amended, shall not become a citizen of the United States by reason of such marriage or naturalization; but, if eligible to citizenship, he or she may be naturalized upon full and complete compliance with all requirements of the naturalization laws, with the following exceptions:

"(a) No declaration of intention shall be required.

"(b) In lieu of the 5-year period of residence within the United States and the 1-year period of residence within the State or Territory where the naturalization court is held, he or she shall have resided continuously in the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, or Puerto Rico for at least 3 years immediately preceding the filing of the petition."

SEC. 5. The following acts and parts of acts, respectively, are repealed: The act entitled "An act providing for the naturalization of the wife and minor children of insane aliens, making homestead entries under the land laws of the United States", approved February 24, 1911; subdivision "Sixth" of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States", approved June 29, 1906; and section 8 of the act entitled "An act relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women", approved September 22, 1922, as said section was added by the act approved July 3, 1930, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relative to naturalization and citizenship of married women', approved September 22, 1922."

The repeal herein made of acts and parts of acts shall not affect any right or privilege or terminate any citizenship acquired under such acts and parts of acts before such repeal.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, if we are to consider the bill now, I should like to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out, beginning on page 1, line 5, down to and including line 7, on page 2, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 1993. (a) Any child hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose father and mother at the time of the birth of such child are citizens of the United States, if either of said parents has resided in the United States previous to the birth of such child, is declared to be a citizen of the United States from birth.

(b) Any child hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, one of whose parents at the time of the birth of such child is a citizen of the United States and the other an alien, if the parent who is a citizen has resided in the United States previous to the birth of such child, may become a citizen of the United States by taking an oath of allegiance to the United States within 6 months after his or her twenty-first birthday, in such form and manner as shall be prescribed by the Bureau of Naturalization, provided that such child has resided within the United States for at least 5 years continuously immediately previous to his eighteenth birthday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, it will be seen that the amendment is in the nature of a substitute for the first section of the bill.

Mr. President, the section in question deals with the nationality of children born abroad of American parents. The present provision of the law is found in section 1993 of the Revised Statutes, which this bill seeks to amend. The present provision of the law reads as follows:

All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States.

The present law provides that a child born out of the United States is a citizen if the father was a citizen at the time of birth and if the father had resided in the United States. This section was interpreted by the Supreme Court in Weedin v. Chin Bow (1927) (274 U.S. 657), in which the Court held that the residence of the father in the United States must be prior to the birth of the child.

The bill H.R. 3673 seeks to amend the present law by providing for two categories of cases:

First. Children born out of the United States both of whose parents are American citizens.

Second. Children born outside the United States either one of whose parents is a citizen.

The obvious purpose of the bill is to provide equality for men and women, enabling an American mother as well as an American father to transmit American citizenship to their foreign-born child.

The bill retains the curious phraseology of section 1993 of the Revised States in providing that—

> The rights of citizenship shall not descend * * *.

In the Chin Bow case, above referred to, the Supreme Court had difficulty in interpreting this expression, but concluded that the transmission of the right of citizenship takes place at the birth of the child. The present bill would seem to provide that the rights of citizenship shall descend when the child reaches his twenty-first birthday. As the bill is drafted, it is rather impossible to tell with certainty whether the child during his first 21 years is an alien or a citizen; this applies to a case of a foreign-born child, only one of whose parents is a citizen.

The substitute I offer for this section of the bill retains the substance and purpose of H.R. 3673, but seeks to clarify it. This is done by dividing the section into two paragraphs, (a) and (b).

Paragraph (a) covers the case of foreign-born children both of whose parents are citizens.

Paragraph (b) covers the case of foreign-born children only one of whose parents is a citizen.

Paragraph (a) presents no difficulties. The only real change is the definite statement that such child is declared to be a citizen of the United States "from birth." These last two words are considered desirable in the interests of clarity, particularly when contrasted with paragraph (b).

Paragraph (b) clearly expresses the principle that the foreign-born child, only one of whose parents is a citizen, is born an alien but may become a citizen by fulfilling certain requirements.

It is apparent that under this paragraph (b) the child is born an alien, and this fact renders unnecessary the discussion of difficult questions regarding the application of the immigration laws of the United States to such child.

The redraft, therefore, leaves this question open, and I believe that the issue should not be raised. It should be borne in mind that an Executive commission is now considering a comprehensive revision of our nationality laws, and it may therefore be assumed that the present bill will eventually be superseded by the provisions of some comprehensive act. It is better to leave an uncertainty in the present bill than to raise the difficult question of immigration at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator state the difference, in legal effect, between the provisions of the first section of the pending bill and the proposed substitute for that section which the Senator has offered? What is the difference?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Under the proposed substitute which I have suggested all persons born abroad, both of whose parents are citizens of the United States, will be such citizens from the time of birth. In cases where only one parent is a citizen of the United States the child abroad will be considered an alien from the time of birth. The present law, as suggested, has confused the matter of citizenship to such an extent that every case involves further confusion; and, in my judgment, by the pending bill, without the amendment, we are merely adding greater confusion instead of clarifying the situation with respect to our nationality laws, which as they stand today are extremely complex, as the Senator knows.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator mean that when a child is born to American citizens abroad those citizens are prevented by virtue of their passports——

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The question of passports does not enter into this case at all.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand the law, an American citizen who goes abroad and fails for 2 years to have his passport renewed comes within the provisions of the law. Of course, he may stay 10 or 15 years and still be an American. But does the Senator suggest that a child born of American parents who have been abroad 10 or 15 years shall be held to be an American?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Each case, of course, would be determined on its particular merits. So far as the birth of the child is concerned, if a child is born of parents both of whom are American citizens but live abroad, he shall be deemed a citizen of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator think, if an American man and an American woman move abroad and remain 20 years in Europe and then have a child, that the child should be considered to be an American citizen?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That question does not arise.

Mr. WALSH. I agree that while they are abroad and under passport permits, children born to them should be considered American citizens; but I think there must be some limitation of time, because they occasionally abandon their American citizenship and take up their residence abroad to avoid taxation in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is very true. If the Senator will read the bill or the suggested substitute, he will find that those questions do not arise at all. There is involved merely the question of determining nationality.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What difference is there between the pending bill and the present law?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The principal difference is that from the time the child is born until he is 13 years of age he has the status of a stateless person in international law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is that a change from the present law?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Where is the language which constitutes that change? Does the Senator have before him the language of the original law?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to see it.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I invite the Senator's attention to it:

> All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States.

The Supreme Court has interpreted that language to mean that the descent of citizenship must come at the time of the child's birth. The change suggested is that descendant citizenship shall not come until the time the child reaches 21 years of age.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Here is a statement with reference to which I desire to ask the Senator a question. I should like to know if, in his opinion, it is a correct statement so far as the purposes of the bill are concerned:

> Principally it would give to the mother the right to transmit nationality to the minor child born abroad of an alien father.

This right now inheres only in the father, under the doctrine of relationship of blood as opposed to the right derived from place of birth. That the right of the mother under such a doctrine should be superior to that of the father might fairly be advanced and readily maintained; that it should be at least equal is surely beyond the need of argument.

If an American father has the right that is provided in the bill, why should not an American mother have the same right?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is, of course, the purpose of the bill, and that is the purpose of the proposed substitute. I am not out of harmony with the purpose of the bill. I believe in the purpose of the bill, and I hope it will become the law of the land, but I do not think a bill to bring about more confusion than we already have in our nationality and immigration laws should be enacted into law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the editorial from which I just quoted is such a clear exposition of the matter that I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Evening Post, Charleston, S.C., May 8, 1934]

EQUAL NATIONALITY RIGHT

There is pending in the Senate a bill for equalizing the nationality rights of women with those of men. It has already passed the House and has the support of leaders in both parties, as it well deserves. The bill is designed to remove the last remaining discrimination against women in the nationality laws of the United States. Principally it would give to the mother the right to transmit nationality to the minor child born abroad of an alien father. This right now inheres only in the father, under the doctrine of relationship of blood as opposed to the right derived from place of birth. That is the right of an alien father. That the right of the mother under such a doctrine should be superior to that of the father might fairly be advanced and readily maintained; that it should be at least equal is surely beyond the need of argument.

By the inequality of the present laws an American woman who marries an alien loses the right to transmit American citizenship to her minor children, and in event of the death of the husband the children remain of the nationality of the deceased father, even though the mother may return with them to the United States, and they are aliens under the law of their mother's native land.

The principle involved in the measure is sound and just. It has been written into the fundamental laws of 13 nations, and it was written into the recent treaty of Montevideo, to which 21 nations, including the United States, subscribed. The bill has been carefully drawn to avoid raising any issues as to immigration or quotas of aliens. It is plain and unequivocal in its equalization of the nationality rights of the sexes, and it would remove an unjust and an archaic discrimination against women. The reasonableness of the bill was so apparent that it passed the House without a roll call. It should find like approval and sanction in the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Having examined the statute as it now reads, as submitted by the Senator from Utah, and having compared it with the language of the bill now pending before us, it seems to me that the only substantial difference is that the word "mother" is inserted, giving to the mother the same rights of transmitting citizenship to the child that are now given to the father; and also that it provides that the descent of citizenship shall go only to those children whose father or mother, as the case may be, has resided in the United States prior to the birth of the child. Under the present statute the right of citizenship does not descend to those children whose fathers never resided in the United States.

That would be true of the pending bill. It differs from the present law in that it requires residence in the United States by the mother.

The new provision to which the Senator objects is that which deals with children one of whose parents is an alien. In such cases the right of citizenship does not descend to the child unless he or she comes to the United States and resides here for not less than 5 years immediately preceding his eighteenth birthday and unless within 6 months after his twenty-first birthday he takes the oath of allegiance.

This, it seems to me, is not out of harmony with the Supreme Court decision which the able Senator has quoted. The child becomes a citizen at birth, but such citizenship is subject to defeasance by the omission of the child to reside in the United States or to take the oath. It will be observed that the pending bill does not provide that citizenship shall not descend but that the rights of citizenship shall not descend in certain cases.

I ask the Senator, therefore, if it is not the fact that the passage of the bill as it came to us from the House will merely preserve the present status with respect to fathers and extend it to mothers?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think not. If the Senator's conclusion were correct I should have absolutely no objection to the wording of the bill, because I want to see that purpose accomplished; but when we take a particular case and analyze it, when we treat a case as the immigration authorities may treat it, we find that under the present reading of the law individuals are left in a stateless condition, greatly to their disadvantage.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I understand that the purpose of the Senator from Utah is to clarify the language, but I have taken pains to inquire of those who have administered the law in the past and those who now administer it, and I have no question at all that the bill as written will accomplish exactly what the women have been asking for, to have men and women citizens put on the same plane of equality. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Utah will be rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. KING. This may not be pertinent to the discussion or come within the terms of the bill. Suppose that a woman who is ineligible to citizenship, such as a Japanese or a Chinese or a woman from India, should marry a man who is a citizen of the United States and happened to be in one of those countries, and children were born. What would be the status of the children?

Mr. COPELAND. That is all fixed by necessity of the term of residence.

Mr. KING. Would they ipso facto automatically become American citizens?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think so.

Mr. KING. I think that is the meaning and purpose of the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over. It is too complicated to be considered at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope the bill may be disposed of now. It has been the subject matter of discussion from time to time for quite a while, and I am sure it will be necessary to act upon it during the present session.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am in favor of voting on it today, as delay will not help matters at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was taken up without objection and by unanimous consent. It is now too late to interpose an objection.

Mr. SMITH. I did not know it was taken up by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. COPELAND. Let us have a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM G. FULTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 740) for the relief of William G. Fulton, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the numerals "$1,528", to insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government", and in line 11, after the numerals "1922", to strike out "and, further, to pay said William G. Fulton the sum of $800 for one cement block house which was actually sold to said William G. Fulton on July 25, 1922, but which was demolished and moved by the Camp Meade authorities and not turned over to said William G. Fulton", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William G. Fulton, of Annapolis Junction, Md., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,528, in full settlement of all claims against the Government, for damage to crop on the Camp Meade Reservation, Md., for which he had entered into contract with the United States Army authorities at Camp Meade on May 18, 1922.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, why does the Government pay crop damage to this claimant? There is a long report, but the opportunity to read it has not been afforded.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Senate bill 740, Order of Business 908.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I find upon examination of the record that there was a contract, notwithstanding the statement at first made by the War Department that no such contract existed, and that the claimant cultivated a crop on the land. His crop was destroyed by the United States troops at Camp Meade; and it appears, therefore, that he is entitled to reimbursement for the damage.

I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3032) to require financial responsibility of owners and operators of vehicles for hire in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. That seems to be an important bill, and I think it had better go over for the day. We cannot discuss it under the 5-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FRANK FERST

The bill (H.R. 889) for the relief of Frank Ferst was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARVEY O. WILLIS

The bill (H.R. 3553) for the relief of Harvey O. Willis was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1735) to amend an act approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. 555) entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims", which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. 555), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party as in other cases, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statute of limitations, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat.L. 642), or arising under or growing out of any subsequent act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs which said Chippewa Indians of Minnesota may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States. In any such suit or suits the plaintiffs, the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, shall be considered as including and representing all those entitled to share in the final distribution of the permanent fund provided for by section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat.L. 642), and the agreements entered into thereunder: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to affect the powers of the Secretary of the Interior to determine the roll or rolls of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for the purpose of making any distribution of the permanent Chippewa fund or of the interest accruing thereon or of the proceeds of any judgments: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to authorize the submission to the Court of Claims for determination of any individual claim or claims to enrollment with the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota or to share in the interest or principal of the permanent Chippewa fund or in any funds hereafter acquired: Provided further, That the qualifications necessary to such enrollment shall not be changed or affected in any manner by the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1744) enabling certain farmers and fruit growers to receive the benefits of the Federal Farm Loan Act and amendments thereto, and the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that measure. It is rather extraordinary.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ACCOUNT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND STATE OF CONNECTICUT

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 67) directing the Comptroller General to adjust the account between the United States and the State of Connecticut was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Comptroller General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and reexamine the account between the United States and the State of Connecticut with respect to advances and expenditures made by such State for military purposes during the War of 1812–15 with Great Britain, and, after applying to such account the rules applied to the settlement of a similar account between the United States and the State of Maryland under the act entitled "An act authorizing the payment of interest due to the State of Maryland", approved May 13, 1826, as amended by section 12 of the Civil Appropriation Act, approved March 3, 1857, to submit to the Senate a report containing a restatement of such account with interest computed according to such rules.

ELOY ALFARO AND JAIME EDUARDO ALFARO

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 108) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Eloy Alfaro and Jaime Eduardo Alfaro, citizens of Ecuador, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, my only objection was that it was too important to be considered in 5 minutes.

Mr. COPELAND. Let us see if we cannot conclude its consideration in 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate return to Order of Business 959, Senate bill 2001. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill provides that in any port set aside for that purpose by a State legislature there may be established a free zone, which means that there may be brought into that port from a foreign country products which there may be mixed, or blended, or manufactured, not for admission to our country, unless later it is determined that they shall come in, in which event they would pay the full tariff charge. The question of tariff, in other words, is not involved; but the bill is designed to permit, for example, in my own city, imported products to be made into other articles of commerce, as, for example, mahogany logs could be brought from Central America, sawed into lumber, and then exported. The advantage is that the labor would be performed in the United States. As I have said, there would be no admission through our tariff boundaries at all, but simply permission to manufacture here.

There are 30 countries in the world where this practice prevails. I was much impressed years ago, in visiting Hamburg, in Germany, to find the free zone there a very active place, where much manufacturing was going on and great industrial activity, which benefited the city of Hamburg, and did not hurt the German Government or its treasury in the least.

I am sure that the Senator will recall that we have discussed these matters before in the Senate, and there has been no difference of opinion in times past that this would be a desirable law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator would point out that this bill would not provide for free ports in the sense in which the term is used in Europe, I think it would clarify the matter.

Mr. COPELAND. It would not do so at all. The articles would be brought in, manufactured or processed, and then sent out, all the labor being performed by American citizens.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I observe that the measure was not referred to the Committee on Finance. I had supposed it dealt with the tariff. I see that it went to the Committee on Commerce and has nothing to do with the tariff.

Mr. COPELAND. It does not relate at all to the tariff.

Mr. FESS. Was the committee unanimous in its report?

Mr. COPELAND. The committee was unanimous.

Mr. FESS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, after line 5, to strike out:

> The term "public corporation" means a State, a legal subdivision thereof, or a municipality, or a lawfully authorized public agency of a State or a municipality.

And to insert in lieu thereof the words:

> The term "public corporation" means a State, a legal subdivision thereof, or a municipality, or a lawfully authorized public agency of a State or municipality, or a corporate municipal instrumentality of one or more States.
> The term "person" includes corporations, partnerships, and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of the United States, or any State, Territory, District, or possession thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 9, after the word "corporation", to insert the words "or person", and on line 12, after the word "corporation", to insert the words "or person", so as to read:

> The term "grantee" means a public corporation or person applying for the right to establish, operate, and maintain a foreign-trade zone.
> The term "grantee" means a public corporation or person to which the privilege of establishing, operating, and maintaining a foreign-trade zone has been granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 17, after the numeral "2" and the period, to insert "(a)"; on line 20, after the word "corporations", to insert the words "or persons", so as to read:

> SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary is hereby authorized, subject to the conditions and restrictions of this act and of the rules and regulations made thereunder, upon application as hereinafter provided, to grant to public corporations or persons the privilege of establishing, operating, and maintaining foreign-trade zones in or adjacent to ports of entry under the jurisdiction of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 2, to insert a new paragraph as follows:

> (b) In case of any State in which harbor facilities of any port of entry are owned and controlled by the State and in which State harbor facilities of any other port of entry are owned and controlled by a municipality. The Secretary shall not grant an application by any public corporation or person for the establishment of any zone in such State, unless such application has been authorized by an act of the legislature of such State (enacted after the date of enactment of this act).

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York the reason for this amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. In case the harbor facilities of any port of entry are owned and controlled by the State, and in which State harbor facilities of any other port of entry are owned and controlled by a municipality, then the Secretary shall not grant an application by any public corporation or person for the establishment of any zone in such State unless such application has been acted upon by the proper authorities.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I want to be absolutely sure about this. Am I to understand from the amendment that where a State owns a port there can be no permission granted, except to the State, until the legislature has authorized it?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. Suppose the State itself, through its authority, desired such a free port?

Mr. COPELAND. They would have the right to have it.

Mr. BLACK. It is not intended to require that the State legislature act before the State itself may take advantage of the act, if it owns the port?

Mr. COPELAND. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 10, line 9, after the word "No", to strike out the word "person" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "individual", so as to read:

> SEC. 15. No individual shall be allowed to reside within the zone except Federal, State, or municipal officers or agents whose resident presence is deemed necessary by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 14, after the word "repeated", to insert the word "willful", so as to read:

> SEC. 18. In the event of repeated willful violations of any of the provisions of this act by the grantee, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury, or a majority of them, may revoke the grant after 4 months' notice to the grantee and affording it an opportunity to be heard. The testimony taken before the Secretaries shall be reduced to writing and filed in the records of the Department of Commerce, together with the decision reached thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on page 3, line 19, the committee desires to strike out the words "but not manufactured."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 19, after the word "manipulated" and the comma, it is proposed to strike out the words "but not manufactured."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. The committee also desires to insert after line 17, on page 5, a new provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

> Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed in any manner so as to permit vessels under foreign flags to carry goods or merchandise from one foreign-trade zone to another zone or port in the protected coastwise trade of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 86) for adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the cooperative marketing associations was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

The bill (S. 2082) to amend the first sentence of section 8 of the act of May 28, 1896, chapter 252, relative to the appointment of assistant United States attorneys, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, when Senate bill 2082 was reached, my attention was distracted by a conversation with another Senator. I had desired to object to the consideration of the bill, in the absence of certain Senators. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed are reconsidered.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the bill go over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

IRRIGATION PROJECTS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2614) for the relief of purchasers and owners of lands on irrigation projects on Indian reservations, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust, eliminate, and suspend irrigation charges due the Government of the United States by non-Indian landowners of lands situated within any Indian irrigation project in such a way as shall be equitable and just in consideration of all the facts and circumstances under which such charges were made: Provided, That any suspension or deferment of collection of charges made by said Secretary by reason of the lands being temporarily unprofitable of irrigation shall not exceed periods of 5 years: Provided further, That a report shall be made to Congress annually on the first Monday of each regular session showing adjustments so made during the preceding year: And provided further, That any proceedings hereunder shall not be effective until approved by Congress unless Congress shall have failed to act favorably or unfavorably thereon by concurrent resolution within 60 legislative days after the filing of said report, in which case they shall become effective at the termination of said 60 legislative days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust irrigation charges on projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes."

SCHOOL FACILITIES ON FLATHEAD RESERVATION, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2286) to provide funds for cooperation with joint school district no. 28, Lake and Missoula Counties, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children of the Flathead Indian Reservation, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "expended from any moneys now available and applicable for construction under provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, or that may become hereafter available", and to insert in lieu thereof the words "appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of cooperating with joint school district no. 28, Lake and Missoula Counties, Mont., for the extension and improvement of public-school buildings, namely, at Arlee in the sum of $40,000, at Ronan in the sum of $30,000, and at St. Ignatius in the sum of $30,000: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all Indian children of the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

It shall be unlawful for any such agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, or others as herein provided, to collect, receive, exact, or withhold a portion of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 20 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of William Martin and John E. Walsh, Jr."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky whether this bill was approved by the Treasury Department?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] probably knows. I do not think it was. It was a refund of money which the Treasury Department had collected, and, so far as I recall, there has never been any approval by the Treasury Department of any act calling for the refunding of money which has been collected in such a way. The collection in question was made on a tariff charge. Too much was charged, the money was collected, and before the claimant could get his claim in he was told he was barred by the statute of limitations, and therefore it was not paid. The committee considered it to be a just claim and that it should be paid.

ARTHUR HANSEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3192) for the relief of Arthur Hansel, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "the sum of", to strike out "$15,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,500", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3524) to amend an act of Congress approved February 9, 1893, entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report states that the object in changing the name of this court?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was requested to introduce this bill by the judges of the court. It changes the name from the "Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia" to the "United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report states that the present title "Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia" implies that the court is merely an appellate court for matters arising in the District of Columbia, whereas it exercises other jurisdiction.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

Mr. KING. Much of the business of the court comes now from outside the District, and therefore its duties are of a broader nature than implied by the name, "Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the court established by the act of February 9, 1893 (27 Stat. 434), entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", shall hereafter be known as the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

ST. CLAIR RIVER BRIDGE, MICHIGAN

The bill (S. 3545) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., authorized to be built by the Great Lakes Bridge Commission by an act of Congress approved June 25, 1930, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 28, 1931, June 9, 1932, and June 13, 1933, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 13, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

JOHN P. LEONARD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 541) for the relief of John P. Leonard, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the word "prior", to insert the words "or subsequent", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, John P. Leonard, late of Company I, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said Company I, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, on the 31st day of December 1901: Provided, That no bounty, pension, back pay, or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior or subsequent to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3520) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Over.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. The Committee on Banking and Currency has given study to this measure for more than 2 years. Since the original introduction of the bill there have been very substantial amendments made to it, and I think I can speak for the committee as a whole and say that after these amendments were suggested they were unanimously agreed upon.

The purpose of the bill is to augment the provisions of the bill which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] introduced before we started on the stock-exchange control bill, whereby the Federal Reserve banks were authorized to make loans to industry for a 5-year period. The bill provides for the making of loans for the purpose of maintaining and encouraging employment. I think if Senators will analyze this bill they will find that it is very well surrounded by safeguards and that what is proposed to be done under its terms is a very desirable thing to do.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am interested in the purposes of the bill. The bill is not exactly the one I thought it was. It proposes to do what I should like to see done. Therefore, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I probably have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but in a colloquy a few days ago with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] reference was made to the bill to follow the Glass bill, which permits the Federal Reserve banks to loan money to private industry. Is this the bill to which reference was then made?

Mr. COUZENS. This is the bill, and it was reported out from the committee on the day after the Senator from Kentucky made the reference to which the Senator from Oregon refers.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the consideration of the bill, although I expect to vote against it if a vote is had on it, but I do desire, if the bill be taken up, to offer an amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. I hope the bill will be taken up, because I do not know how many more opportunities we will have to consider it and it is a bill which will have to go through the House, and will have to go to conference. The House is also prepared to report out a bill for the same purpose.

Mr. BLACK. I shall not object to the bill if I be given the privilege of offering an amendment and having a vote thereon.

Mr. COUZENS. I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not believe there will be any objection to giving opportunity to amending the bill, if there be not too much time taken in its discussion.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; there is objection. I am in exactly the situation of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. I have an amendment to this bill which I desire to present, and I desire to discuss it, and I shall ask the Senate ultimately to pass upon it. I do not want to delay the consideration of the bill, but I desire some time in which I may present the amendment. The amendment I desire to present is embodied in a separate bill now before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over, because our time is very short, it now being only 7 minutes to the hour when the Senate will proceed to consideration of other business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOSEPH M. THOMAS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3059) for the relief of Joseph M. Thomas, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the name "Thomas", to insert "alias Joseph Thomas, alias Thomas O'Donnell"; on the same page, line 8, after the word "private", to strike out the word "Battery"; and on the same page, line 9, after the word "Twenty-second", to strike out the word "Regiment" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "Battery", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army Joseph M. Thomas, alias Joseph Thomas, alias Thomas O'Donnell, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on September 26, 1904, as a private, Twenty-second Battery United States Field Artillery: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Joseph M. Thomas, alias Joseph Thomas, alias Thomas O'Donnell."

TOURS OF DUTY IN THE TROPICS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3397) to amend the laws relating to the length of tours of duty in the Tropics and certain foreign stations in the case of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, on page 2, line 12, after the word "hostilities", to insert "and except in the discretion of the Secretary of War for temporary emergencies", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 12 (requiring assignments of officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps to permanent duty in the Tropics and at certain foreign stations to be for not less than 3 years) of the Treasury and Post Office Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1934, approved March 3, 1933 (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 10, sec. 17a), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. The second and third provisos in the paragraph with the heading "Barracks and Quarters, Philippine Islands" in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916", approved March 4, 1915 (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 10, sec. 17), are hereby amended to read as follows: "No officer or enlisted man of the Army shall, except upon his own request, be required to serve in a single tour of duty for more than 2 years in the Philippine Islands, on the Asiatic Station, or in China, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Panama Canal Zone, except in case of insurrection or of actual or threatened hostilities and except in the discretion of the Secretary of War for temporary emergencies: Provided, That the foregoing provision shall not apply to the organization known as the 'Philippine Scouts.'"

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Hereafter what will be the tour of duty in the tropical countries of the officers and enlisted men?

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, the amendment provides for a 2-year tour instead of 3, but there are exceptions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That was the information I desired. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1777) providing for an additional justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GIBSON. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HOMESTEAD LAWS AND RAILROADS IN ALASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7306), to amend section 10 of the act entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right-of-way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes, approved May 14, 1898, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, to strike out lines 1 to 20, both inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided further, That any citizen of the United States, after occupying land of the character described as a homestead or headquarters, in a habitable house, not less than 5 months each year for 3 years, may purchase such tract, not exceeding 5 acres, in a reasonable compact form, without any showing as to his employment or business, upon payment of $2.50 per acre, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and in such cases surveys may be made without expense to the applicants in like manner as the survey of settlement claims under the act of June 28, 1918 (40 Stat. 632), as amended by section 1 of the act of April 13, 1926 (44 Stat. 243): And provided further, That the minimum payment for any such tract shall be $10, and no person shall be permitted to purchase more than one tract except upon a showing of good faith and necessity satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS OF CORPORATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 91) to supplement the authority of the Federal Trade Commission to obtain information relating to the salaries of officers and directors of certain corporations whose securities are listed on the New York stock exchanges, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments, on page 2, line 6, after the word "corporation", to insert the words "whether or not"; on page 3, line 10, after the words "For the", to strike out the words "purposes of" and to insert in lieu thereof" purpose of carrying out"; and on page 3, line 17, after "1914", to strike out "with respect to the matters over which the Commission has jurisdiction under such act", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make inquiry and report to the Congress as soon as practicable the salaries of the executive officers and directors of each corporation whether or not engaged in interstate commerce (other than public-utility corporations) having capital and/or assets of more than $1,000,000 in book or ledger value, whose securities are either listed or dealt in on the New York Stock Exchange or the New York Curb Exchange.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the Federal Trade Commission shall have the same right to obtain data and to inspect income-tax returns as the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Congress or to either House thereof.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of carrying out this resolution the Federal Trade Commission, the Attorney General, and the courts of the United States shall have and may exercise all of the powers and jurisdiction severally conferred upon them by the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes", approved September 26, 1914.

SEC. 4. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, which shall be available for expenditure as the Federal Trade Commission and the Attorney General may jointly direct, for expenses and all necessary disbursements, including salaries, in carrying out this resolution and prosecuting litigation necessary in aid of the powers conferred hereunder.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I should like to have someone state the purposes of the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a year ago this month the Senate requested certain agencies of the Government to investigate and report to the Senate salaries paid by certain corporations. In response to inquiries of the Federal Trade Commission several hundred corporations submitted the requested information. About 40 corporations declined for one reason or another to respond. The Federal Trade Commission thereupon indicated that there was no known justification for such refusal, and suggested its willigness to proceed and institute legal proceedings, in accordance with the Senate resolution, to secure that information. The joint resolution is designed to authorize such action.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 3, line 19, after the word "hereby", to insert the words "authorized to be", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, which shall be available for expenditure as the Federal Trade Commission and the Attorney General may jointly direct, for expenses and all necessary disbursements, including salaries, in carrying out this resolution and prosecuting litigation necessary in aid of the powers conferred hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments to the preamble will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the preamble, on page 1, line 9 of the first paragraph, after the word "price", it is proposed to insert the words "and volume"; in line 1 of the second paragraph, to strike out the words "the salaries aforesaid tend to diminish unduly the income taxes payable by the corporations above described" and to insert the words "high and excessive salaries, bonuses, and other compensation aforesaid paid to directors and officers of corporations whether or not engaged in interstate or foreign commerce tend to diminish unduly the income taxes payable by such corporations", so as to make the preamble read:

Whereas it is believed that high and excessive salaries, bonuses, and other compensation paid to various directors and officers of corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce have the effect of burdening or restraining interstate and foreign commerce, and have effects upon the value and marketability of the securities of corporations bought and sold in interstate or foreign commerce and upon the earnings available for investors in securities so bought and sold and upon the price and volume of commodities bought and sold in interstate and foreign commerce; and

Whereas it is believed that high and excessive salaries, bonuses, and other compensation aforesaid paid to directors and officers of corporations whether or not engaged in interstate or foreign commerce tend to diminish unduly the income taxes payable by such corporations, and that the rate of income taxes assessed against the directors and officers aforesaid may be too small and that by various devices certain of said directors and officers may have been avoiding the payment of a just amount of tax; and

Whereas the Congress should consider whether new legislation should be enacted or existing legislation amended on any of the subjects hereinbefore described and in aid thereof should be informed on all of such subjects; and

Whereas certain corporations have neglected or refused to supply the Federal Trade Commission with the information needed by said Commission to enable it to procure for the Senate the information required by S.Res. 75, Seventy-third Congress, first session; and

Whereas the Congress should have such information to aid it in considering the necessity for the legislation already herein described: Therefore be it

The amendments to the preamble were agreed to.

The preamble, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN subsequently said: Mr. President, during the consideration today of unobjected bills on the calendar the Senate approved Senate Joint Resolution 91, Order of Business 980, supplementing the authority of the Federal Trade Commission to obtain information relating to the salaries of officers and directors of certain corporations whose securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

The reasons which led to the submission of the joint resolution were so well set out in a report by the Federal Trade Commission to the Senate on February 26, 1934, that I ask unanimous consent to have the Federal Trade Commission's report incorporated in the RECORD immediately following the RECORD's recital of the Senate's approval today of Senate Joint Resolution 91.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ON COMPENSATION OF OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS OF CERTAIN CORPORATIONS

Senate resolution

The present inquiry was initiated by the Commission following a resolution of the United States Senate proposed by Senator COSTIGAN and agreed to May 29, 1933, calling for information regarding the salaries and other compensation of executive officers and directors of specified classes of corporations. No explanatory statements were made in the Senate, either as to its scope or purpose.

The text of the Senate resolution (No. 75, 73d Cong., 1st sess., approved May 29, 1933) was as follows:

"Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each Federal Reserve bank and member bank of the Federal Reserve System; be it further

"Resolved, That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each bank not a member of the Federal Reserve System to which loans or advances have been made by the Corporation; be it further

"Resolved, That the Federal Power Commission is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each public-utility corporation engaged in the transportation of electrical energy in interstate commerce, and of all other corporations licensed under the Federal Water Power Act; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each corporation engaged in interstate commerce (other than public-utility corporations) having capital and/or assets of more than a million dollars in value whose securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange or the New York Curb Exchange.

"For the purposes of this resolution, the term 'salary' includes any compensation, fee, bonus, commission, or other payment, direct or indirect, in money or otherwise, for personal services."

As hereinafter noted more particularly, there were instances in which the language of the resolution would have required more than one department to report on certain companies.

RESOLUTION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

On receiving this direction from the Senate the Commission passed a resolution for the purpose of authorizing the undertaking of this work. The Commission's resolution, which was passed on June 2, 1933, was expressed in the following terms:

"Whereas the Senate of the United States on May 29, 1933, passed a certain resolution known as 'Senate Resolution 75, Seventy-third Congress, first session', which reads in part as follows:

"'Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each corporation engaged in interstate commerce (other than public-utility corporations) having capital and/or assets of more than a million dollars in value, whose securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange or the New York Curb Exchange.

"'For the purpose of this resolution, the term "salary" includes any compensation, fee, bonus, commission, or other payment, direct or indirect, in money or otherwise, for personal services.'

"And whereas this Commission construes said resolution to be a request by the Senate of the United States, addressed to this Commission, expressing its desire that this Commission, in the exercise of the powers vested in it by the Federal Trade Commission Act, proceed to make the investigation outlined in said resolution and to transmit a report thereof to such Senate as soon as practicable;

"And whereas this Commission does not construe said resolution as an exercise by the United States Senate of the power to direct this Commission to make such investigation and report, as such power is vested in such Senate by subdivision (d) of section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act;

"And whereas said Federal Trade Commission Act vests in this Commission the power in its discretion to make such an investigation and report as are so requested;

"And whereas this Commission, upon careful consideration of the terms of said resolution and the subject matter thereof, is of the opinion that it is to the public interest that this Commission do make such investigation and report at the earliest time practicable: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this Commission, in the exercise of the full discretionary powers vested in it by said Federal Trade Commission Act, and acting in what this Commission deems to be the interest of the public in the premises, do proceed forthwith to make such investigation as so indicated in said Senate Resolution 75, Seventy-third Congress, and to make a written report therein and thereof to the Senate of the United States as soon as practicable.

"That said resolution of the United States Senate and this resolution of the Federal Trade Commission be, and hereby are, referred to the Commission's chief economist, with instructions to proceed to make such investigation and submit such report to this Commission for its consideration and action at the earliest time at which the chief economist shall be able to make such investigation and report.

"That said chief economist be, and hereby is, authorized and directed in the performance of said duty to exercise any and all powers vested in the officers, agents, and representatives of this Commission by said Federal Trade Commission Act."

Done by the Commission this 2d day of June 1933.

LIMITATIONS OF THE PLAN

It will be noted that the plan contained several limitations as to the classes of corporations which should be inquired about by this Commission, which restricted the investigation to a comparatively small portion of the corporations within its general jurisdiction, but it also included some corporations over which the Commission has no legal jurisdiction. The four limitations were (1) that the corporations be engaged in interstate commerce, (2) that they have assets or capital of more than $1,000,000, (3) that they be listed on the New York Stock Exchange or on the New York Curb Exchange, and (4) that public utilities be excluded.

The duty of obtaining data from the electrical utilities, but no other utilities, was assigned to the Federal Power Commission, while all public utilities were excluded from the classes to be investigated by the Federal Trade Commission. As a result, operating gas utilities engaged in interstate commerce and having assets or capital of over $1,000,000 were excluded from the plan.

Public-utility holding companies, utility service companies, etc., were, however, within the range of this Commission's assignment, provided the other conditions of the Senate resolution were also applicable, except where a holding company also functioned as an operating utility. The only important instance of a listed holding company which was excluded on this ground was the United Gas Improvement Co., which operates under lease a municipal gas plant in Philadelphia.

The limitation in the resolution with respect to interstate commerce, which is also a general limitation on the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, raised a number of questions. The most important companies affected, perhaps, were four insurance companies and certain types of holding and investment companies. Some of the insurance companies declined to report on the ground that they are not engaged in interstate commerce, and the Commission did not press these companies to report except as a matter of cooperation.

In order to meet some of the difficulties of carrying out the inquiry according to the plan, considering the limitations on its powers of inquiry, the Commission invited the cooperation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Department of Agriculture.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has furnished to the Senate information relative to compensation paid by railroads and other common carriers which are expressly excluded from the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission by its organic act. The Secretary of Agriculture has indicated his intention to report separately to the Senate regarding compensation paid by packing companies which were transferred to his jurisdiction by the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921.

STOCK-EXCHANGE LISTS

The first step in the inquiry was to obtain from the two specified stock exchanges the names and addresses of all companies with securities listed thereon. These were promptly furnished by the respective exchanges. The New York Curb Exchange furnished two lists, one of which was denominated "companies whose securities are fully listed", and the other, "companies whose securities are admitted to unlisted trading." In accordance with the resolution this report covers companies whose securities are listed. It does not include companies whose securities are traded in on the curb but not listed. Where, however, such companies were affiliated with other companies whose securities were listed either on the New York Stock Exchange or the New York Curb Exchange, their reports were used in making consolidations. Thus the report of Electric Bond & Share Co. was used in respect to the compensation of its officers and directors insofar as they were also officers or directors of its affiliated companies, American Power & Light Co., Electric Power & Light Co., American & Foreign Power Co., or National Power & Light Co., whose securities were listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Among the companies whose securities are traded in but not listed on the New York Curb Exchange, and from whom reports were not required by the resolution, are some very large companies such as Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, Aluminum Co. of America, Cities Service Co., the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. of America, and various others.

After the eliminations which preliminary examination showed should be made, in accordance with the provisions of the Senate resolution, there remained in the two stock-exchange lists taken together about 1,050 corporations. After the schedules were sent out, however, a number of other companies were eliminated when they reported that they were engaged in banking, were common carriers, had assets of less than $1,000,000, or were in receivership and their records not available. These further eliminations accounted for something more than 100 corporations.

REQUESTS FOR CONFIDENTIAL TREATMENT

The Commission received many inquiries asking if the information as to salaries and other compensation would be made public. All such inquiries were answered to the effect that the information would be sent to the Senate and that the Commission was not advised as to the use the Senate would make of it.

Coupled with many of these inquiries were claims as to the confidential nature of the information and assertions that neither the Senate nor the Commission had any right to ask for it. The Commission, of course, refused to promise any confidential treatment of the information received.

THE FORM OF THE SCHEDULE

In drafting its schedule the Commission decided that it would ask for the salaries, and all compensation, direct and indirect, including that from subsidiary and affiliated companies, paid to executive officers and directors for each year 1928 to 1932, inclusive, and also the rate of salary as of September 1, 1933. In addition it was necessary to ask for the total assets in order to exclude those companies with assets of less than $1,000,000, as specified in the Senate resolution. Companies were also asked to report their net sales and net income, but the Commission has not insisted on this information being furnished, as it was not within the scope of the Senate resolution.

The information as to salaries and other compensation was asked for covering the 5-year period, 1928–32, because it was believed important that a basis for comparison with changes in economic conditions should be available to the Senate. As compensation other than regular cash salary is frequently determinable only at the end of the business year, only the regular cash salary rate is shown for 1933.

TABULATION OF RETURNS

A total of 877 schedules, which were pertinent to this inquiry, was returned. Shortly after the returns began to come in it became obvious that many companies had not included indirect compensation; that is, amounts paid by subsidiary or affiliated companies. In such cases this additional information was obtained from the companies and the consolidating done by the Commission's staff.

The general rule followed in tabulating the schedules was that the information as to cash salary and other compensation for each year and the rate of cash salary as of September 1, 1933, be shown in the form reported by the company, but some variations from this rule were necessary in order that a fair degree of uniformity might be obtained. The tabulations show the total salary actually paid each executive officer and director and also the other compensation each received.

Some difficulties occurred in tabulating other compensation. Thus, options or rights to subscribe for stocks were frequently reported as "other compensation." In a number of such instances the companies failed to follow the instructions to give the value of the rights as of the date deliverable. Where the information was sufficiently definite to appear to warrant it, the Commission has computed the value of the rights from the difference between the market quotations and the option prices, with proper footnotes. Where less definite information was available, nothing has been included in the "other compensation" column, but option prices, contract terms, market prices, and the like have been shown in footnotes. In most cases, however, the reported value of such rights on date deliverable is shown in the tabulation. The amounts shown in the "other compensation" column are, in most instances, directors' fees, especially those which are small.

The annual cash salary rate as of September 1, 1933, does not indicate anything about such other compensation, as most companies would not be able to show the amounts of such compensation until the end of the fiscal year. The schedules were sent out in October 1933. Directors' fees are also excluded from the cash salary rate tabulation sheets for September 1, 1933, wherever possible, since in most instances companies could only report that such fees were at the rate of a stated amount for each meeting attended.

GENERAL PLAN OF TABULATIONS

In transcribing the data in respect to salaries and other compensation the Commission has attempted to present the information as it was reported. This, however, was not always possible, because the companies did not always conform in their answers to the questions asked. It was sometimes necessary, therefore, to rearrange the data for the sake of uniformity, but some inconsistencies could not be eliminated from the tabulations.

In tabulating salaries and other compensation the general plan has been to show only the amounts in dollars and to drop the cents. As a result many of the columns do not add exactly to the totals, less the cents, as reported by the companies, except in those cases where the Commission has consolidated returns, as described below.

A large number of companies failed to include salaries received by their officers and directors from subsidiary and affiliated companies. When attention was called to the fact that a complete report would necessarily include salary or compensation paid indirectly, through subsidiaries, many of these concerns sent in the necessary additional information in letter form, in a tabular statement, or on another copy of the schedule. The Commission has consolidated this information, and the tabulations presented herewith represent all the reported salary and compensation, direct or indirect, of the officers and directors shown therein. A few companies did not make it clear whether or not their reports included indirect compensation.

The names of the companies appearing at the top of the tabulation sheets are as reported, except that the Commission believed it necessary to add explanatory names in some cases. An example is that of Standard Brands, Inc. The return for this company covered only the Fleischmann Co. for 1928 and the first 4 months of 1929, as noted on the sheets for those years, the remaining years being headed "Standard Brands, Inc."

In some few instances predecessor companies were not reported in consolidated form, and the tabulations show the salaries and compensation for officers of the several companies separately, as illustrated by Bickford's, Inc.

Each company sheet carries a code symbol representing the particular trade or industry classification to which that company has been assigned. This classification was prepared by the Commission but is based primarily upon similar groupings which have been used by the Federal Reserve Board and the Census of Manufactures.

The code symbols and the industries to which they are assigned, respectively, are as follows:

I. Agriculture,
II. Mines, quarries, and oil wells:
  1. Bituminous coal.
  2. Anthracite.
  3. Metalliferous mines.

XI. Service:
  1. Amusement.
  2. Education (public, private).
  3. Business service.
  4. Professional service.
  5. Domestic and personal service.
XII. Unclassified:

The total assets shown on the tabulation sheets are as reported by the companies, except that for a few companies the Commission obtained the information from either Poor's or Moody's Manual. The Commission did not attempt to consolidate the assets of two or more companies when consolidating their salary returns. Some few companies, however, reported consolidated assets and, when known, this fact has been indicated in the tabulations.

It should be noted also that the Commission did not attempt to consolidate the net income of two or more companies when consolidating their returns. Any comparison between salaries and other compensation, which are on a consolidated basis, and assets or income, should be made with this in mind.

The names of officers and directors are given as reported in practically all cases. Some of the companies returned schedules filled in by hand which it was not always possible to decipher. In many instances the Commission was able to obtain the correct names by reference to Poor's or Moody's Manual. In a few instances the same name was spelled differently at different places in the originals, and the Commission has endeavored to correct many of these errors.

Some companies did not report the names of their directors for some years and others not for any year. This is particularly noticeable in the tabulations for the annual salary rate on September 1, 1933. In other cases the reporting companies did not clearly indicate their directors, but made a general statement to the effect that some of those named were directors as well as executive officers.

It was not practicable to transcribe in full the positions of the several officers and directors of the reporting companies because of limitations of space on the forms. Abbreviations have been used in most instances. These abbreviations, however, are not uniform throughout the tabulations because some companies reported positions in abbreviated form and there was little uniformity in this respect. The Commission did not believe it should change these abbreviations, since in many instances it was not certain that the change would be correct. The result is that numerous variations occur in the tabulations, but the following list will explain most, if not all, of the abbreviations.

The schedule asked, for each year, the regular salary rate and the amount of cash salary actually paid to each officer and director, and in the tabulations presented herewith the latter amounts have been used. In many instances the salary rate and amount paid were the same, but this was by no means the rule. It was noted, especially in the later years covered, that the amounts actually paid tended to be less than the amounts reported as the rates. Where salaries were reported on a monthly basis the Commission has computed a yearly amount.

A few companies reported that they did not pay salaries to individuals, but that they employed a management organization, paying it a lump sum to run the company. The tabulation sheets show a number of lump-sum payments to affiliated organizations or interests. These are illustrated by the cases of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, the National Investors Corporation group, Standard Gas & Electric Co. group, and, apparently, also by the Stone & Webster, Inc., group and others.

As previously explained, companies were asked to report separately all compensation other than regular cash salary and to explain the nature of such special compensation. As appears in the attached tabulations, particularly for the earlier years, many companies reported payments to officers and directors of compensation in addition to cash salaries.

This special compensation was reported as paid in many different forms and for many different reasons. The schedule asked that the value of this special compensation be stated in dollars, with appropriate explanations, and by far the larger part of the reporting companies so reported. Some companies, however, simply reported the nature of the special compensation, and in such cases the Commission either attempted to obtain the value from the reporting company or to compute the value from available sources. This failure to report value was particularly true of stock bonuses and of options to purchase stock.

A number of companies in reporting special compensation simply stated that some officer or officers were given rights to subscribe to a specified number of shares of stock at a specified price. Some of these companies further stated that the rights had not been exercised because the market value of the stock had been less than the value of the rights and in such cases, of course, no specific compensation could be reported. For a few companies, however, examination of Poor's or Moody's Manual showed that during the year in which the rights were granted the market value of the stock was such that the rights had a value and often one that was substantial. In these instances the Commission has shown the number of rights granted and the range of the market price of the stock for the year in which the grant was made.

Directors' fees were usually reported for each one receiving them, but a few companies simply reported a flat sum as having been paid during the year as directors' fees. In both cases the Commission has followed the form reported except that it has endeavored in all cases to show these fees as "other compensation paid during the year" rather than as salary. The Commission also tried to exclude directors' fees from the tabulation of the cash salary rate as of September 1, 1933. Another method of reporting directors' fees was to state that directors were paid a specified amount for each meeting attended or that a specified sum was appropriated for each meeting and divided among the directors attending.

Several companies reported that in some of the years covered by the inquiry their boards of directors had voted certain lump sums to be given their presidents for the purpose of distributing these amounts among the officers of these companies and that the presidents were not to make any record of these distributions. A brief summary of each such instance appears in the tabulations for these companies.

The schedule for the United Aircraft and Transport Corporation was received so late that it could not be consolidated and copied in the same form used for the other companies. It was, therefore, photographed as submitted.

INCOMPLETE RETURNS

Four companies made incomplete returns to the inquiries made by the Commission, but these returns have been incorporated with the others. These four companies were the following: General Electric Co., Burroughs Adding Machine Co., United Drug Co., Potrero Sugar Co.

General Electric Co. made detailed returns for salaries and other compensation of executive officers and directors for only 1 year, namely, 1932, though the total amounts of compensation were given for each of the 5 years 1928 to 1932. For 1932, the company did not report the names of the recipients of such compensation in the schedule, but in an accompanying letter signed by Owen D. Young, and Gerard Swope, chairman of the board and president, respectively, of General Electric Co., a list was furnished which identified 20 of the 41 directors or executive officers receiving the specified amounts. The writers of the letter also stated that they thought it "of the greatest importance that the information given on these sheets be treated in confidence", explaining that confidential treatment of such facts was important in order by rewarding special merit to maintain the maximum efficiency of the executive staff without arousing jealousy among them and causing embarrassment to the directors. The Commission, however, identifies in this report the individual amounts of compensation, so far as disclosed.

A less complete return is that of Burroughs Adding Machine Co. It reported the total compensation of all directors and executive officers in a lump sum for each year from 1928 to 1932 inclusive, and the extra compensation, only, in detail for identified individuals for the said 5 years, with no statement of specific salaries for individual officers. This company objected to giving all the particulars called for by the Commission as against its interests as well as "a violation of the privacy of each person affected."

United Drug Co. answered the Commission's questionnaire by merely reporting the maximum amount of "compensation (salaries and bonuses)" paid to any of its directors or officers in each of the 5 years, 1928 to 1932.

Potrero Sugar Co. stated both the salary and bonus for each executive officer by name for each of its 5 fiscal years, 1928–29 to 1932–33, but did not furnish the information required as of September 1, 1933.

ABSENCE OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ALLEGED

Many companies omitted to make any return under the claim that they were not engaged in interstate commerce and therefore were not obliged to report. The conceptions as to what conditions bring a company into this category are not, of course, always easy to define. Where this claim was made the Commission attempted to consider the merits of each reply in the light of whatever information was readily available and to suggest to the company (in a number of instances) specific reasons for a different conclusion regarding its status in this respect. As a reasonably prompt report was imperative, only a limited correspondence was attempted, with results that were sometimes quite inconclusive, and at other times definitely unsatisfactory. The main difficulty was with those holding companies which apparently completely control companies manufacturing and trading in the general commercial field.

The companies declining to report under the claim that they are not engaged in interstate commerce were the following: Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, Koppers Gas & Coke Co., American I. G. Chemical Corporation, the Delaware & Hudson Co., the Hudson Coal Co., the M. A. Hanna Co., Newmont Mining Corporation, Ludwig Baumann & Co., Exchange Buffet Corporation, United Dry Docks, Inc., Pantepec Oil Co. of Venezuela, Venezuelan Petroleum Co., Penn Mex Fuel Co.

Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, in a letter dated January 31, 1934, claimed that the Commission was not justified in demanding a report on the ground that it is a holding company not engaged in interstate commerce. More specifically it stated: "This company performs the normal functions of a holding company, such as the election of the directors and the giving of advice from time to time to its subsidiaries. It does not assume to itself the functions of its subsidiaries and does not participate in their operations."

Koppers Gas & Coke Co., in a letter dated January 25, 1934, insisted that it is not engaged in interstate commerce and also claimed that it would be difficult, owing to intercompany financial arrangements, for it to compile the information requested. The basis of these claims is neither clear nor in any way convincing, but correspondence with the company was suspended in order to finish this report.

American I. G. Chemical Corporation, in a letter dated January 25, 1934, contended that, even though its subsidiaries are engaged in interstate commerce, it is not so engaged, and "has consistently refrained from participating in the management or direction of any company" subsidiary to it, although there is a certain degree of community in respect to their officers and directors. Corespondence was suspended owing to the necessity of compiling the data for this report.

The Delaware & Hudson Co., in a letter dated January 31, 1934, claimed that it is not engaged in interstate commerce and that its only subsidiary which is so engaged is a common carrier subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Hudson Coal Co., which is a subsidiary of the Delaware & Hudson Co., also claimed that it is not engaged in interstate commerce. It did not, however, give specific details of its method of merchandising its output, although the output undoubtedly moves in interstate commerce.

The M. A. Hanna Co., which has two subsidiary coal companies engaged in interstate commerce, expressed the opinion in a letter dated January 30, 1934, that it is not itself engaged in interstate commerce, because these coal companies "operate entirely as independent entities." The M. A. Hanna Co. also stated that it is the selling agent and owner of all the stock of the Susquehanna Collieries Co., which ships coal in interstate commerce.

Newmont Mining Corporation contended that it is not engaged in interstate commerce without giving specific reasons, but added: "We are perfectly willing to provide any information that may be properly required at any time." Apparently it owns minority interests in the stocks of other companies.

Ludwig Baumann & Co. explained that it operates nine furniture stores in New York City and one in Newark, N.J., and that it does not believe it is engaged in interstate commerce.

Counsel of the Exchange Buffet Corporation advised that its only establishments outside of the State of New York are a restaurant and cigar stand in Newark, N.J.; that they had examined the pertinent facts and did not find anything to indicate that the company is engaged in interstate commerce.

United Dry Docks, Inc., in a letter dated January 23, 1934, stated that: "The business of our company, United Dry Docks, Inc., is almost wholly intrastate, its interstate business being negligible."

The Pantepec Oil Co., of Venezuela, stated that its only interests in the United States are part interests in certain Texas oil leases which are under the management of the Texas Co., and that it does not engage in trade between the United States and Venezuela.

The Venezuelan Petroleum Co. wrote that it "is engaged in business wholly in Venezuela and is not now and never has been engaged in any interstate commerce in the United States."

The Pen Mex Fuel Co. advised that the company "is engaged in the production and transportation of petroleum wholly in Mexico."

GENERAL DENIAL OF COMMISSION'S POWER

Several companies replied to the request for information with a general denial of the Commission's powers, namely: General Aviation Corporation, American Can Co., General Motors Corporation, The Studebaker Corporation.

General Aviation Corporation expressed its inability "to find any legal justification for the request" of the Commission and asked for its views. The chairman of the Commission, on January 20, 1934, advised the company on this point as follows:

"With respect to the legal justification for the request, your attention is invited to the following cases: Federal Trade Commission v. Claire Furnace Co. (274 U.S. 160), Federal Trade Commission v. Miller's National Federation (23 Fed. (2d) 968), and Federal Trade Commission v. Smith (34 Fed. (d) 323). Reference is also made, in respect to salaries, specifically to the Securities Act of 1933, schedule A, paragraph (14), to the recent reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the subject of salaries of railroad officials. McGrain v. Daugherty (273 U.S. 135) is pertinent to legislative intent, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 24, 1933, pages 4109, 4119, 4120, and 4131 to 4135 records consideration of salaries of corporation officers in connection with legislative action."

No further word was received from the company.

General Motors Corporation, by its general counsel, questioned the authority of the Commission to make this inquiry. A letter from the Chairman of the Commission similar in tenor to that addressed to General Aviation Corporation, part of which is quoted above, was sent on January 17, 1934, but no reply or report was received from the General Motors Corporation.

American Can Co., in a letter dated January 13, 1934, also questioned the power of the Commission to call for a report and expressed the opinion that the information was not relevant to any matter properly before the Commission or before Congress. A letter similar to that sent to the General Aviation Corporation, part of which is quoted above, was sent on January 19, 1934, to this company, but no report or further communication was received.

The Studebaker Corporation, which is now in receivership, through counsel for receivers, requested copies of the resolution of the Commission respecting this inquiry and citations of pertinent provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act for further consideration. Copies of these documents were supplied, but no further word and no report was received from the receivers of the company.

COMPANIES REFUSING OR NEGLECTING TO REPORT

Nineteen companies refused to make a report or neglected to comply with the Commission's request. In a few instances, after being on notice for 3 or 4 months that a report was requested, the reply was made to a follow-up letter that it was not convenient to call a directors' meeting in time for action. Following are the 19 companies referred to: Chrysler Corporation, Bendix Aviation Corporation, Columbian Carbon Co., Congress Cigar Co., Porto Rican American Tobacco Co., Waitt & Bond, Inc., Consolidated Retail Stores, Inc., Dodge Bros., Inc., General Refractories Co., General Mills, Inc., Howe Sound Co., National Biscuit Co., National Department Stores, Sloss Sheffield Steel & Iron Co., Stein Cosmetics Co., Inc., Timken-Detroit Axle Co., Union Oil Co. of California, Yellow Truck & Coach Manufacturing Co., Cleveland Tractor Co.

It is not necessary to discuss each of these companies separately and there is no known adequate reason why any of these companies should refuse to report.

In some cases, however, some comment is appropriate.

General Refractories Co. sent in a schedule originally, but later wrote to the Commission to have this report returned to the company for revision. General Refractories Co. did not return the report in revised form, nor did it answer a further request for the report.

Timken-Detroit Axle Co., in failing to make report, stated in part (letter of Jan. 5, 1934), "* * * we do feel that the Federal Trade Commission is not entitled to this information unless every single concern in the country is required to report."

The Commission has not instituted actions to compel any companies to make reports. It has felt that it should make a report to the Senate at the earliest possible date and the delays which would be inevitable in forcing compliance with the call for information would make it impossible to have a report ready within any reasonable time. A matter for consideration also was the cost which would be involved in taking legal action to compel reports. The necessity with which the Commission has been faced of carrying out its increased duties within the limits of its budget has left it no alternative but to apply its funds in ways which would be most directly productive of results in its continuing work. The Commission, of course, holds itself ready to invoke all its powers to compel the production of the information called for, within such limits only as funds which may be provided for that purpose may make necessary.

By direction of the Commission.

GARLAND S. FERGUSON, JR.,
Chairman.

FEBRUARY 26, 1934.

WAR CLAIMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 325) extending for 2 years the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, and the Tripartite Claims Commission and, extending until March 10, 1936, the time within which Hungarian claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, of awards of the War Claims Arbiter, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "words", to strike out "eight", and to insert in lieu thereof "seven"; and on line 8, after "March 10", to strike out "1936", and to insert in lieu thereof "1935", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That subsection (g) of section 2 and subsection (f) of section 5 of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended by Public Resolution No. 11, Seventy-third Congress, approved June 12, 1933, are further amended, respectively, by striking out the words "6 years" wherever such words appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "7 years."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution extending for 1 year the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and the Tripartite Claims Commission, and extending until March 10, 1935, the time within which Hungarian claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, of awards of the war claims arbiter."

A CENTURY OF PROGRESS EXPOSITION

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 112) to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at A Century of Progress Exposition, Chicago, Ill., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out the preamble.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this joint resolution?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, this joint resolution is a duplicate of the one previously passed by the Senate with respect to the exposition a year ago. It authorizes those who are making displays to bring their exhibits in free of tariff duty, but guarded. The provision covering such importations is drawn up by the Treasury Department, and among other things makes sure that the articles are guarded and prevented from being sold. There is also a provision which the Customs Bureau suggested be placed in the joint resolution, looking to compliance with the forms of the Treasury. I must say to the eminent Senator that I do not recall the nature of the House measure, but the House having passed a measure similar to the one presented by myself, which is recommended by the committee, I ask that House Joint Resolution 311 be substituted for the Senate joint resolution. I do this in order to expedite the matter.

Mr. FESS. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 311) to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at A Century of Progress Exposition, Chicago, Ill., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes, which was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the exposition to be held by and known as "A Century of Progress", or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulation for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond, and imported articles in bonded warehouses under the general tariff law, may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That A Century of Progress shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for articles imported under the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed by A Century of Progress to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask that Senate Joint Resolution 112 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There are only three or four bills on the calendar which have not been called. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and sufficient length of time be given to call the remaining bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LANDS IN EWA DISTRICT, OAHU, HAWAII

The bill (H.R. 8235) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey by appropriate deed of conveyance certain lands in the district of Ewa, island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN AUWAIOLIMU, KEWALO, AND KALAWAHINE, OAHU, HAWAII

The bill (H.R. 8052) to amend sections 203 and 207 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920 (U.S.C., title 48, secs. 697 and 701), conferring upon certain lands of Auwaiolimu, Kewalo, and Kalawahine, on the island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, the status of Hawaiian home lands, and providing for the leasing thereof for residence purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOANS TO FRUIT GROWERS

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 106) authorizing loans to fruit growers for rehabilitation of orchards during the year 1934 was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration is authorized to make loans to fruit growers for necessary expenses to rehabilitate their orchards during the calendar year 1934, in the same manner and under the same terms and conditions (including penalties) as in the case of loans under the act entitled "An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes", approved February 23, 1934; except that (1) a first lien on all crops grown or harvested during the years 1934 to 1938, both inclusive, shall be required as security for any such loans to a fruit grower, and (2) no such loan shall be made for a period of more than 5 years or in an amount in excess of $5,000 to any one borrower. To carry out the provisions of this resolution there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

ELLEN WILSON MEMORIAL HOMES

The bill (S. 3442) to dissolve the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the body corporate and politic created under the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes", approved March 3, 1915, be, and the same is hereby, granted the right to dissolve under the supervision of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and to have its assets distributed among the persons determined by said court to be entitled thereto, all in the manner prescribed by subchapter 14 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended; and jurisdiction over said corporation for the purposes aforesaid is hereby conferred upon said court as fully and effectually as though said corporation had been created pursuant to the general incorporation provisions contained in the last-mentioned act, as amended.

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wonder if it will not be possible to have considered at this time the bill (S. 3520) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to industry? We have been trying for some days to get the bill passed, and I do not believe it will take very long.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I have no desire in the slightest to delay the Senator from Florida, but I have pending before the committee a bill which has not as yet been acted upon. The committee probably has not been able to consider it fully. I intend to offer that bill as an amendment to the bill referred to by the Senator from Florida. It has got to be explained, because it is an important amendment, and there will have to be opportunity for explanation. May I suggest to the Senator that immediately following, as I understand, the present unfinished business, a bill of like character will come before the Senate? Why can we not, then, take up, following that measure, the bill referred to by the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I cannot ask the Senate to spend very much time on the bill. I thought it would not take very much time.

Mr. JOHNSON. That may be, but I ask the Senator in the interim if he would not be pleased to consider whether or not he could consent to add as an amendment to the bill he has in mind the bill which is now pending before the Banking and Currency Committee, with respect to which the subcommittee heard me on one occasion?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, the fact that it is pending shows that it has not as yet been acted on by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know that.

Mr. FLETCHER. And I am a little afraid we cannot now take it up.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am going to seek to have it acted upon by the Senate because of the near approach of adjournment. We will adjourn, I assume, within the next 3 or 4 days.

Mr. LEWIS. We will be here until July 15.

Mr. FLETCHER. We ought to get the bill to which I refer over to the House as soon as possible; otherwise, it will be too late.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the other bill is of like importance and of like character. Why can we not take up the two bills, or take one up immediately after the other?

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume we will have to do that if the Senator insists. The measure to which I have referred is really a very important one, and very urgent, because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation want to know whether they are authorized to go on with this matter at all, and they are now uncertain about it. The bill will give them authority to proceed to make industrial loans. There is great demand for the passage of the measure. This is a matter that is really urgent in an emergency situation. They do not know whether they can make any headway at all with reference to such loans; they do not know how to answer communications and applications, and all that sort of thing. We have to pass the bill here, of course, before it can go to the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it will be possible to take it up immediately unless the afternoon is to be devoted to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. We cannot do that, and, I presume, Mr. President, it will have to go over.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendment of the House to Senate bill 752.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards, which was, on page 1, line 9, after "State", to insert "or any rate-making body of any political subdivision thereof."

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FINANCIAL AND OPERATING STATISTICS FOR 26 AIR-MAIL ROUTES

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a release from the Post Office Department showing the financial and operating statistics for 26 air-mail routes for December 1933, compiled from monthly reports of air-mail carriers, showing among other things a deficit in net operating costs of $595,127.46 for 1 month at the old rates in effect preceding the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN].

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] for the reason stated by me this morning, and I announce also the absence in his State of my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], caused by official business.

I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I have given rather careful consideration to the arguments which have been presented to the Senate during the past few days with respect to the pending proposed legislation. I am frank to admit that during the past year or two I was not very much in sympathy with much which was said about legislation regulating the stock exchange, because I doubted whether it would be possible for the Congress to enact any legislation that would be helpful to the public interest. I am not quite certain that that impression which I entertained did not date back several years.

A great many years ago, in my law practice, I was called upon to defend a stock broker in a transaction growing out of dealings which that broker had with a customer. A suit was brought, and I appeared defending the broker in that action.

Counsel on the other side requested an opportunity to examine the books of the broker. That was readily agreed to by my client, and the examination was made. The examination of the books showed some irregularities of such a character that I could not, in my judgment, defend successfully the action that was brought. A settlement was made. The accountants who had examined the books came from New York. My recollection is they were accountants who were employed from time to time by the New York Stock Exchange.

Shortly thereafter the stock exchange sent accountants again to examine the broker's books and found similar irregularities continuing. As a result, that member of the stock exchange was brought before the governing board and disciplined in a way that seemed to me so effective that there could be no doubt that the stock exchange itself had a very complete control over its members and exercised that control in a way that made it safe for the public to deal with its members. An opportunity was given to the man to sell his seat on the stock exchange, and that necessitated his selling his business. He went out of business and has not been a member of the stock exchange since.

During that examination, I had occasion, the only occasion I ever had, to examine the rules and regulations of the New York Stock Exchange itself. It seemed to me there was in those rules and regulations sufficient control over the members to protect amply everybody who had occasion to deal with stock-exchange members. I got the distinct impression that the safest person with whom a man could deal in the purchase or sale of securities would be a member of the New York Stock Exchange.

Comparatively recently, however, during the examination which has been so carefully made by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, and in view of the facts there disclosed and the evils which were there exposed, I reached the conclusion that probably my original impression that it was not necessary for Congress to take any action was an erroneous one.

I desire at this point, Mr. President, to read into the RECORD, from what I conceive to be the very best authority, a statement made by the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge, the distinguished senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], appearing at page 8163 of the RECORD. He undertook to state the purpose of the bill. I quote:

> We propose by this measure to establish, through Federal regulation of the methods and the mechanical functions and practices of the stock exchange, an efficient, adequate, open, and free market for the purchase and sale of securities; also to correct abuses we know of and others which may exist; to prohibit and prevent, if possible, their recurrence; to restore public confidence in the financial markets of the country; to prevent excessive speculation, to the injury of agriculture, commerce, and industry; to outlaw manipulation and unfair practices and combinations by which to exploit the public and misrepresent values, such as pools, wash sales, fictitious transactions, and the like; to oblige disclosure of all material facts respecting securities traded in on the exchanges, which disclosure is essential to give the investor an adequate opportunity to evaluate his investment.
> Criticism is made that we are calling upon corporations to make disclosures, and that we are thereby putting them to an enormous expense and trouble, and inquiring into affairs into which we have no business to examine. My suggestion is that if any corporation issues securities which are unfit to be certified because of what is back of them, the securities themselves are unfit to be offered to the public.
> What right have brokers to appeal to the public to buy their securities if they are not willing to tell the truth about those securities? That is the whole proposition, and all we ask of them is to tell the truth.
> They do not seem to want to tell the truth, in the first place, and, in the next place, they especially complain about liability for material misrepresentations which have misled the public into buying securities. They are willing to expose, to some extent, the facts behind the securities, but they do not want to be liable in case they lie about them. That seems to be the basis of the objection. All we ask in the pending bill and in the Securities Act is that they tell the truth in their registration papers, so the public may know what is behind the securities.
> We undertake generally to declare the intention of Congress, and enunciate specific principles as a guide to subsequent administration.

Mr. President, I am quite certain that if the bill were limited to those purposes the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], as I know from my talk with him, would have no objection to it at all. Indeed, I think I might safely say that if the bill were confined to the purposes stated by the Senator from Florida there would not be a Member of the body who would oppose its passage. Unfortunately, however, that is not true. The bill involves very much more than the regulation of the stock exchanges. It places a burden upon the corporations of the country which is wholly unnecessary and, in my judgment, not called for.

Somewhere in the argument it was suggested that the complaint about the bill affecting corporations is merely advanced as a blind to protect the stock exchanges themselves. I think I have heard it suggested that it was expected that by putting up such argument the corporations would be thereby compelled to pull from the fire those things in the bill which are objectionable to the stock exchange itself.

In my judgment, in the passage of the bill, we are about to do that which we frequently do when the public is excited and when there is a great prejudice created against a certain institution. I think it is not too much to say that Congress is frequently controlled by public opinion, and oftentimes by the opinion of those who do not know all the facts involved in the controversy about which they form an opinion. I think in some instances the same thing may be said with respect to the judiciary. I have in mind the performance now going on in Chicago, whereby a man whose name has appeared on the front pages of all the newspapers for weeks and months has finally found his place in jail because he cannot give bail of $200,000.

Does anybody doubt that if the public were not interested in that case, if the public were not excited about having that man convicted, the bail would have been fixed in an amount within the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and not at such a sum as makes it necessary for him to go to jail?

What has been done, I suggest, is due to the fact that public opinion is crying out for this man to be put in jail, and the judiciary, like the Congress, is influenced by what the public thinks with respect to the matter.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I inform the able Senator from Delaware that, as I gather from the press, the judge who made the order for the bail is a man of very high standing and credit, named by President Hoover and confirmed by this body, and one who, I must assume to say to the able Senator, would not consciously allow mere public opinion or public excitement to drive him from a sense of conscientious duty. As to the facts of the matter I have no further knowledge than my honorable friend, who gathers his information of the proceeding itself, as do I, from the press.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have no doubt of that. I do not intend to cast any reflection upon what was done by the judge. I have not any doubt he did not knowingly do that which was wrong.

I doubt whether any Member of the Senate will admit, or even believe, that he is being influenced by the outcry of the public with respect to this bill. He believes he is using his own judgment; but it is human nature for persons to be influenced constantly by the cry of the public, and by what the front pages of the newspapers say about matters.

We should bear that in mind as we go along with this proposed legislation. We should bear in mind that the natural course for us to follow is to be persuaded in the direction in which the public is going to be influenced, if you please, as the distinguished chairman of the committee said, by literally bushels of letters which have been sent by the unorganized victims, as they are called, of the stock exchange. I say that we ought, in all fairness to ourselves—and that it is the only point I am making here—to see to it that we are not controlled by mere public clamor; and we ought to see to it that the public secures accurate information by a discussion of this subject upon the floor of the Senate before we act at all. I am quite certain the Senator from Illinois does not disagree with that statement.

I desire, however, to call attention to the fact that only yesterday the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], in his colloquy with the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] during the course of his argument that the administration of this measure ought to be turned over to the Federal Trade Commission instead of to a special commission, created the impression—certainly he created it unless it was corrected by the colloquy with the Senator from Virginia—that there was a sinister motive back of the particular method proposed for administering the measure, namely, by the selection of five independent commissioners instead of by the Federal Trade Commission. In order that such an impression might not prevail, the Senator from Virginia called attention to the fact that he was the first who suggested this method of administration, and not Mr. Whitney.

I mention these facts in order to remind the Senate that there is but one popular side of this question; there is but one popular demand, and that is for the passage of the bill as it came from the committee, except as some persons believe that it might be made more popular by making it even more drastic.

Both the Senators to whom I refer, in the colloquy yesterday, complained about the president of the stock exchange, Mr. Whitney, not standing hitched to any proposition. I have not read the record to find out definitely how quickly or how often he switched from one proposition to another. I have not any doubt that the Senators who made the statements are correct in their statements; but it seems to me it is not unnatural for a man who represented a great association and who had the responsibility of doing the best he could for the association as he was shifted from pillar to post, to try to find from time to time the post which would do him and his organization the least harm.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I am sure the Senator will acquit me of any purpose to discredit Mr. Whitney, because he did change from one proposition to another. I saw no reason why Mr. Whitney should have been introduced into the discussion at all, except to accentuate the common prejudice against what is known as "Wall Street." I recited the fact that Mr. Whitney had changed from one proposition to another, and had not stood hitched, in order to minimize the impression sought to be created that because Mr. Whitney had suggested something it ought not to be adopted.

Right here, I may say that the committee itself accepted seven or eight amendments to the bill proposed by Mr. Whitney and Mr. Redmond, the lawyer of the New York Stock Exchange; and nobody then suggested that the amendments ought not to be adopted because they were proposed by Mr. Whitney or by Mr. Redmond.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the position of Mr. Whitney reminds me of the practice and law in my own State with which many people are disgusted, and about which many people in years past have complained; and I sometimes wonder if I am not myself as old-fashioned as the State I represent. We still maintain the whipping-post for certain crimes, and I am not quite certain that in some of the Western States where they are having much trouble with criminals this practice and this law of ours could not be defended. The man who is whipped, however, is fastened to a post, and he changes his position between every stroke of the whip, with the hope that next time it will hurt a little less. So as I was considering Mr. Whitney's position I was reminded of the man who did not know what the next stroke was going to do, whether it was going to hurt him more or whether it was going to hurt him less; and he undertook to change his position between strokes so as to make them as light as possible upon him.

I think that might be urged as an illustration of Mr. Whitney's position in trying to defend the organization which he represents.

But, Mr. President, if we could approach this subject bearing in mind what the distinguished chairman of the committee declares is desirable and is the real purpose of the bill, with a view of doing as little as possible while still accomplishing that purpose, it seems to me we would write a very different bill, and one that would be very much less objectionable than the bill now pending.

I am one of those who believe that when Congress finds an evil existing, it ought to do no more than to correct the evil as best it can with the least legislation that is necessary to accomplish the result.

In this case we have gone to just the opposite of that proposition. We have not confined it to any such principle as that. We have not confined it, I submit, to any such good sense as that. We have not said that we will do as little as we can, but, on the contrary, we have said here that we will do as much as we possibly can; that we will make this as near perfect as it is possible to make it by correcting not only all the evils we discover but all the evils which we think may possibly occur in the future with respect to stock-exchange transactions.

Mr. President, one of the early prejudices I had against the enactment of this bill was due to my view—which I think must be well founded—that the Congress of the United States cannot enact legislation to protect the "suckers" of the Nation. We heard yesterday about the stock market being merely a gambling place. Some prefer to call it a place where speculation is going on. It is immaterial to me what it is called. I do not believe what goes on there can be stopped by legislative fiat.

I remember the various efforts made by the States of the Union to control the miserable liquor traffic. I remember how they tried local option, how they tried State-wide prohibition. Ever since I can remember it has been a constant issue in my State and, so far as I know, in communities in every State in the Union. I had much to do with it as a prosecuting officer. I saw crimes committed due to excessive use of alcohol. I saw women and children put into the streets because the husbands and fathers, intelligent enough, and able to earn a good living for a family, would not do so because they could not control their appetites for strong drink.

I believed, with millions of other people of this Nation, that the only way in which we could get rid of it was to make it unlawful all over the country, and to do it by an amendment to the Federal Constitution. I was thoroughly in accord with that. For a year or two I saw what convinced me conclusively that the conditions had improved. Then, as it went along, I became somewhat doubtful about it, and I am not one of those who agree today that the eighteenth amendment ought to have been repealed. I have been in doubt about it for many years and never could reach a definite conclusion, and I have not as yet done so. But the American people did reach a conclusion, and they did so by such an overwhelming vote that there could be no doubt that they did not want to bother any longer with trying to enforce that kind of a law.

In my judgment, what is sought to be done through the pending bill is pretty nearly equal to that. The attempt is to say to people that they cannot do what they please. I do not mean exactly that; I do not mean that people will not be free to do what they please after this measure shall have been enacted, but, in order to protect them from doing what they desire to do, in my judgment, the industries of the Nation and the trading in securities will be loaded down in a way which will greatly retard recovery instead of promoting it.

Mr. President, besides all this, and regardless of whether that argument be reasonable or not, I desire to call attention to the fact that our wish to cure a great evil is leading us a very much greater distance into that new and dangerous path which we have recently begun to tread.

The acts of Congress of the past year or more, with many of which I disagree, and many of which I think are dangerous for the Nation, were enacted under the plea that there was a great emergency, and that relief measures such as those being considered were necessary. No such claim as that is made with respect to the pending bill. It has no relation to the emergency. It has no relation to relief, except as to those persons who voluntarily try to make money on the stock exchange. This is a reform measure; not a relief measure; and, in my judgment, is the definite beginning of the passing of the operation of American business over to the Government upon the excuse that back of it is the popular support of the people of the Nation.

It is impossible to read with any degree of care this entire bill without reaching the definate conclusion that the operation of the stock exchanges of the country would be definitely and positively turned over to the Government of the United States should the bill be enacted.

I shall use the New York Stock Exchange as an example. Though there are 25 other exchanges in the country, apparently the entire discussion and all the evidence relate to the New York Stock Exchange.

The New York Stock Exchange is a voluntary organization, which has been in existence some 150 years. According to the testimony in the record, it has 1,375 members, and the high price for stock-exchange seats has been $600,000, although at the present time it is estimated that the seats are selling for only $190,000. If we figure the seats at $200,000 a piece, there is an investment of $275,000,000.

I suppose the physical property of the exchange is owned by a corporation, and that the interest of the members of the exchange in that corporation is based upon their membership in the stock exchange itself.

Under the bill, the Federal Government would be given the absolute power to destroy everything that association has, except its physical property. The Government control over it would be complete. The matter of the hours of trading by the stock exchange would be under the control of the Government. The time of opening and the time of closing might be fixed by the commission provided for in the bill.

More than that, upon the recommendation of the commission, the stock exchanges of the country might all be closed for a period of 90 days upon the approval of the President of the United States. When that 90 days had expired, the stock exchanges might again open, but, so far as I know, and so far as I can discover from a reading of the bill, the commission, with the approval of the President, could close them before the end of the day for another 90 days.

At the expiration of 181 days, upon the recommendation of the commission and the approval of the President, the stock exchanges might be closed for another 90 days; and upon the expiration of 252 days, on the recommendation of the commission and with the approval of the President, they might be closed for another 90 days. So that, so far as the bill is concerned, so far as the power of the stock exchange itself is concerned, after the bill shall have been enacted, the commission and the President may close every stock exchange in this land, so that they will operate less than 4 days in every year. But that is not all, by any means.

In this bill itself there is the distinct and definite provision that the proposed commission may fix the rate of commission which the stock-exchange members may charge for the service they render. They cannot by rule and regulation govern it any longer. They cannot by rule and regulation fix it at an amount which they believe will return to them a fair amount of money annually, or that will increase their business. They may not use their judgment about it any longer. It passes to the commission.

In addition to that, the rate of interest which they may charge may be fixed by the commission. We heard argument yesterday that we ought to do away with the margin account. We do not need to do that here. We do not need to fix, in the bill, anything with respect to margins. The commission may control the whole thing by fixing the amount of the commission and fixing the amount of interest that may be charged.

Mr. President, I make these statements for the purpose of showing that, in the case of this great institution having today physical assets of $275,000,000, based upon the price of stock-exchange seats, we of the Congress are running ourselves ragged to pass the bill quickly in order that we may protect some person who ought to have known better in the first place than to be trying to guess whether a stock was going up or whether it was going down.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FESS. What is there in the bill that will make impossible in the future such a condition as existed, for example, regarding the stock issued 5 years ago by the Radio Corporation? In a field that was wholly unsurveyed, was illimitable with respect to future accomplishment, the prospect became so inviting that speculators ran the stock up to over $500, the directorate of the company itself being concerned about the elevation of the prices, all due to speculative buying and selling. What is there in the bill which will prevent a man from buying any stock on the stock exchange and paying any price he pleases? How can we protect the man who is willing to do that?

Mr. HASTINGS. There is nothing in this particular bill which will protect him, except that if it seemed desirable to do so the commission could entirely suspend trading in the stock of the corporation on the stock exchange. In that way they could control the speculation, and in certain instances that might be helpful. That is the only answer I can make to the Senator's question.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me further, usually the price paid for any stock is based on the prospect that the stock is going to be valuable, and usually that idea is obtained from the data purporting to state what is back of the stock. The Senator knows as well as I know, however, that people get into such a psychological condition that machine guns cannot keep them from buying and selling stocks.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, with respect to the control of this business passing to the Federal Government, I insist that what I have said is not in any sense an exaggeration. What I have said is positively true under the pending bill. It can be answered in one way only. Those who are satisfied with the bill say, "We know that the President never would agree to closing the stock exchange, as you have outlined, and to keeping it closed most of the time, and letting it transact business only 3 or 4 days a year. We cannot conceive of a President's doing that. We know that the present President will appoint capable men on the commission to manage the stock exchange. For that reason we think the alarm which you sound ought not to be responded to in any way, because in actual operation it is a false alarm."

Mr. President, I learned long ago that it is dangerous for any legislative body to pass legislation because a certain individual whom the members of the legislature or the Members of Congress knew and believed in would be the person called upon to administer a particular law. Legislation of every kind ought at all times to be upon such a firm foundation that no person occupying any official position in connection with it could under any circumstances do a wrong under the act itself. In other words, this ought to be, and we have been led to believe that it is, a country which is protected by the Constitution and the laws of the Nation, and that its security does not in any sense depend upon the character of the person who administers the law.

Of course, it is always important to have good administrators of laws. It is important to have good executives, because we always get better results with such executives. We ought not, however, to pass a law which puts into the hands of any man who may not be what we think he ought to be an opportunity to do under the law something that will be hurtful to the people of the Nation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Speaking of the power to close the exchange, the Senator has reference, I take it, to paragraph (4), on page 42, which reads:

> And if in its opinion the public interest so requires, summarily to suspend trading in any registered security on any national securities exchange for a period not exceeding 10 days, or with the approval of the President, summarily to suspend all trading on any national securities exchange for a period not exceeding 90 days.

I direct attention to the fact that that power now exists and is exercised by the stock exchange itself. That is not a new power; but instead of the stock exchange itself exercising the power, the commission is allowed to exercise it in the public interest, with the approval of the President.

That is the first point.

The Senator seems to be apprehensive that the commission will have such power that it will manage and control the exchanges of the country. I think we have carefully guarded against that. Instead of attempting to do that sort of thing, or authorizing the commission to do it, the Senator will find that on page 44, paragraph (c) we provide that—

> The Commission is authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the rules of national securities exchanges with respect to the classification of members, the methods of election of officers and committees to insure a fair representation of the membership, and the suspension, expulsion, and disciplining of members of such exchanges. The Commission shall report to the Congress on or before January 3, 1935, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

The matter is to be investigated by the commission, and it is to report to Congress what it recommends.

Mr. HASTINGS. But in the meantime what happens? In the meantime does not the commission have all the control I have suggested?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not think so. It has nothing to do with the election of officers or the qualification of members or personnel.

Mr. HASTINGS. What will anyone care about the election of officers after this act shall go into effect? The election of officers will become of the least importance to any member of the stock exchange. The kind of rules and regulations that can be made by the members of the stock exchange will amount to nothing to any member of the exchange or to the public after we shall pass this bill.

What the Senator states is true. The Senator says the stock exchange has that power now. Of course it has the power. What I am complaining of, and the only point I make about it, is that we are taking away from the stock exchange the power which it now has and putting the power in the Federal Government. The sole point I have made up to this time in that connection is that we have transferred to the Federal Government this great institution, with $275,000,000 of property, and the control of its operations.

Because of the urgency of the demand for that action, because the public is demanding that something of the kind be done, I have expressed great fear that this is but the beginning of the taking over by the Government of other great institutions in which the public is interested.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator says that the stock exchange now has the power and authority to adopt rules and regulations and to regulate its own members. I simply desire to mention the fact that the New York Stock Exchange is not the only exchange in the country. It has competition right in New York City. I think there are eight or nine other exchanges in New York City. There is competition there. The control of an exchange extends only to its own membership, however. The nonmembers, those outside of its own membership, are the people who are giving the exchange trouble, and it cannot control them.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to section 2 of this proposed act, in order that we may try to find wherein lies the authority to enact this kind of legislation. Here is what is said in the proposed act itself:

> In order to prevent obstruction of the normal flow of interstate commerce and also to preserve and protect the national credit, the Federal taxing power, the national banking and Federal Reserve Systems, and the proper use of the mails and the facilities of interstate commerce, it is imperative that legislation be enacted to regulate and control such transactions.

Mr. President, I suggest that those who had to go to these sources to find authority for this proposed legislation are stretching to the limit the provisions of the Federal Constitution. It never was intended that Congress should interpret the grant of power to control interstate commerce to do such a thing as this. It never was intended that it should prevent the use of the mails except for some improper purpose, and it is undertaken here to make a purpose improper by imposing certain conditions.

However, Mr. President, besides the control of the hours, the days, the rates of commission, the interest, and so on, there is a further provision which ought at least to be shocking to the American people.

Under the provisions of this proposed act there are five commissioners to be selected at a salary of $12,000 a year each. I may say in passing that I think it is a little surprising that this Congress and this administration should suggest any such salary as $12,000 a year for any man when the average income for 1932 was but a little more than $300 for each person. With an administration that is urging upon us the importance of a better distribution of the income of the Nation and with many members of the administration insisting that there must be an equitable distribution of the wealth of the Nation, it is now proposed to give to five men $12,000 a year each in order to administer this proposed law.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCARRAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Is that an unusual salary for commissioners who perform such important duties as are to be imposed upon these commissioners?

Mr. HASTINGS. No.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator if it is not true that he has voted for bills carrying such a salary during the last 3 or 4 years on several occasions?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not quite certain about that, but I am quite certain that I would have so voted if the occasion had arisen and I believed that it was a reasonable salary.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is not complaining about the amount of the salary?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not complaining about the amount of the salary, but I am expressing this thought and this thought only: When I read what has been said in this RECORD and remember what I have heard upon the floor of the Senate during the past year or so, and what I have read of the statements made by the President, and by many of his advisers about a better distribution of the income of the Nation and a better distribution of the wealth of the Nation, I merely express surprise that this administration should be urging upon Congress the payment of a salary of $12,000 a year for anybody to do any kind of service and under any kind of circumstances, when it is remembered, as I repeat, that the average income is but a little over $300 a year for every man, woman, and child in America.

Mr. LOGAN. As I understand, the Senator was not expressing any personal objection to the amount of the salary——

Mr. HASTINGS. Not at all.

Mr. LOGAN. But was simply expressing his surprise that some of those whom he has indicated should have proposed such a salary?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

However, Mr. President, there are some things in the pending measure touching that subject to which I do object. I should like to call attention to the powers given under this proposed act to the commission.

(c) The Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and other experts and employees as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States.

There is no limit to that authority. The Congress has nothing to do with it; the President of the United States has nothing to do with it; the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States has nothing to do with it. While the salary paid to the commissioners is fixed in the proposed act, it is the only thing that is fixed, and immediately after the passage of this measure the commission, if it cares to do so, may employ Mr. Pecora at a salary of $100,000 a year, and there will be nobody under the sun who can complain about it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Are the expenses of the commission to be paid out of the Treasury of the Federal Government or are they to be paid by levying on the various stock exchanges?

Mr. HASTINGS. They are to be paid by levying on the stock exchanges.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. With respect to this staff of employees, I suggest to the Senator that there is another hazard which perhaps could be corrected, but which certainly now stands wide open. Although there are penalties provided in this bill against every man, woman, and child who may be externally related to these transactions in stocks and bonds and other securities, there is not a word in the bill which attaches penalties for the misuse of information on the inside of the commission and its staff. That, it would seem to me, is a tremendous weakness in the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is the Senator quite certain about that? It seems to me that somewhere in the bill there is a provision making it unlawful for an employee of the commission to give out certain information. I am not sure that there is any penalty attached, but I remember distinctly that somewhere in this bill there is a prohibition against that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I just canvassed the matter with one of the experts, who was under the impression that such a provision was in the bill, but he could not find it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Perhaps he is right.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If he is right, the defect ought to be corrected.

Mr. HASTINGS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. President, the salary of the five commissioners is the only thing that is fixed. I take it that every commissioner will be entitled to at least one secretary, and I take it also that the secretary to one of the commissioners will be quite as important as is the secretary to General Johnson who administers the N.R.A. According to the newspapers that particular position now pays $5,600. I doubt very much whether the amount thus paid would be $5,600 if it had been fixed by the Congress of the United States. I doubt whether the commissioners to be appointed under this bill would be able to pay their secretaries anything like that sum if they depended upon Congress for the appropriation and depended upon the Congress to fix the amount; but under this bill they can pay their secretaries and their experts and other employees whatever they please. I care not how much one may speculate upon it, there is nothing under the sun to prevent them from doing as they please except their own conscience.

Who pays the bill? There would be some control over this question if Members of the House and Members of the Senate were charged with the responsibility of making the appropriations for the expenses of the proposed new commission. We would have an opportunity to have the commissioners brought before us and examined as to whether they were paying reasonable or unreasonable salaries. We would have a hearing; we would have an opportunity to discuss the subject in the Senate, because we would be interested. We would know that back in the States where we live there would be somebody complaining about the salary paid, saying that such salary affected the taxes he paid to the Federal Government, and entering complaint about it. No such thing as that can happen here.

O Mr. President, as I read this bill my mind goes back to the Revolution, and the period before the Revolution, when the people in the American Colonies rose in their might and said, "There shall be no taxation without representation." We based the whole theory of our Revolution upon that principle, and here, 150 years afterward, not in the form of emergency legislation but permanent legislation, we find the Congress enacting a measure contrary to that principle, notwithstanding the provision in the Constitution which gives to the Congress alone the right to levy taxes. There is a provision in the Constitution that all legislation involving taxation shall originate in the House, that taxes shall be levied by the Congress, and that they shall be uniform in their nature. All those requirements are written into the Constitution; but, notwithstanding that fact, we find in the year 1934 the Congress rushing headlong to give away this power to a commission created by the Congress, and putting the stock exchanges of the country in a position where they cannot even complain. The commission may be as extravagant as it pleases; it may pay everyone in its employ what it pleases; and then the Congress says to the stock exchanges of the country, "You must pay the bill."

Is there any provision in the bill about the division of the expense? Not at all. The only provision is that it shall be distributed in a way that to the commission seems to be fair and equitable. Is the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], who is much interested in the bill, willing for the two stock exchanges of his State to depend upon equity, as the five commissioners may see it, when it comes to assessing those two stock exchanges out of existence if the commissioners happen to be opposed to them? Is the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] willing that the stock exchanges in his State shall be dependent upon a commission which may be so prejudiced against the New York Stock Exchange that it will impose the whole burden upon that exchange?

There is no court review; there is no review anywhere after the matter passes out of our hands. We give the power to the commission, without knowing who the commissioners will be, without knowing what their sympathies may be, whether their sympathies will go out to the stock exchange in Detroit or Pittsburgh or New York or California or elsewhere. We have no way of knowing. We are letting this power go from our hands into the hands of five commissioners to say what shall be done with respect to the matter.

Mr. President, the temptation is left with the new taxing authority to be liberal in the matter of the money it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill. When a commission is appointed that is dependent upon Congress for appropriations for its expenses we may naturally expect that commission to use some care with the money it is called upon to expend, because some day it must account to somebody; but a broad authority is about to be given to this new commission, without any power anywhere to check it, without any responsibility or requirement to respond to those who pay the bills.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator, purely for information, if the same broad powers which are found in the bill now before us were granted to the Radio Commission and the Power Commission and possibly some other commissions?

Mr. HASTINGS. Am I to understand the question to be whether some such powers have been granted elsewhere?

Mr. LOGAN. Is this bill, so far as these provisions are concerned, along the same lines as the provisions in the acts creating the Radio Commission and the Power Commission?

Mr. HASTINGS. Not at all. I think I am correct in my answer. The only thing I recall that is comparable at all grows out of the emergency legislative acts we have passed. When we created the Coordinator for the Railroads, a temporary affair to last for a certain number of years, my recollection is there was some provision by the Congress whereby the railroads should pay a certain amount per mile to cover the expenses involved. But there is no such provision with respect to the expenses of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself or the Radio Commission. It might very well be. It is just as applicable to those commissions as to the commission we are about to create.

I will tell the Senator from Kentucky whence the idea comes. It comes from the administration of the emergency measures. It comes from the administration of the N.R.A. My attention was first called to the fact when I heard from a constituent of mine who operates a grocery store, and who sent me a letter showing that there was a demand made upon him by those who were administering the retail grocers' code to pay a dollar for himself and a dollar for each of his clerks toward the expense of administering the retail grocers' code. Subsequently I found that was based upon an Executive order and that it applied to every code.

I may say to the Senator that just recently I have discovered the automobile-truck code alone has a budget of $2,977,500, within $22,500 of $3,000,000, for the administration of that code. There are 408 codes already adopted. I suppose it would be unfair to multiply that $3,000,000 by 408, because I assume the motor-truck industry is probably one of the larger ones. But if we multiply it by $3,000,000 and divide it by 10 we have a tremendous tax imposed upon the people of the United States which the Congress never intended to be imposed upon them.

These cases are not similar to those where organizations, such as the Federal Reserve member banks, are involved. The banks do not have to become member banks. They may do as they please. So far as I know heretofore there has never been any effort to tax the people of the Nation under a plan like this. If this were a scheme set up whereby the stock exchanges wanted to participate in it or not, then it would be perfectly all right to let those who did want to participate bear the expense, and those who did not want to do so to stay outside. But here we are imposing a tax upon people without their consent and through commissions and through code authorities on a basis which I say is un-American and foreign to any ideas we ever had up until the past few months, and which, in my judgment, is exceedingly dangerous.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Can the Senator tell me what it will cost to conduct the business of the commission?

Mr. HASTINGS. I have not seen it estimated anywhere. I do not believe anyone has any idea what it will cost. After a while I shall discuss the great task to be imposed upon the commission and let each Senator judge for himself whether or not it will be a huge sum or whether it will be a small sum. I may a little later be able to answer the Senator's question. Of course, a good deal will depend upon whether the commission shall be administered economically or whether the gate shall be thrown wide open and an effort made to be as liberal as possible with the employees of the commission.

Mr. President, before I leave this subject I wish to impress upon the Members of the Senate one further thought. We have on one side a tax, imposed by the commission, uncertain in amount and with nobody daring to estimate what the total will be. On the other side we have the right on the part of the commission to fix the amount of the commissions which may be charged by members of the stock exchanges and the rates of interest that may be charged on the debtor accounts.

If that is not putting stock-exchange members between the two millstones, without any certainty on the part of anybody as to what the result will be, I cannot conceive of anything being true.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The salaries fixed for the members of the commission will be paid out of the Federal Treasury, will they not?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, not at all.

Mr. FESS. Not the salaries of the members of the commission?

Mr. HASTINGS. Not at all.

Mr. FESS. I understood that the expenses of administering the organization were to be assessed on the exchanges, but I supposed that the salaries of the commissioners would be paid out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not true. The bill provides that the original necessary expenses may be drawn from the Treasury; but that is only until the commission can get its machine operating so that it may make the assessments and collect the money. The bill distinctly provides that when that is done the money shall be returned to the Treasury of the United States, and ultimately not a dollar is to be charged against the Treasury.

Mr. FESS. So the commission will not only fix the charges but will have authority to fix the number of employees and the size of its budget, and assess the expense upon the exchanges without having to come back to Congress for authority?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is quite correct.

Mr. FESS. Is there any limit on the expenses the commission may incur?

Mr. HASTINGS. Not at all.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do.

Mr. WALCOTT. The House bill provides that the registration fee shall be 0.05 of 1 percent of the money value of the securities dealt in on the exchange. A rough estimate of that on a 5-year average, which I believe was taken, comes to $5,000,000 in cash to be raised in that way. That, however, would go into the Treasury, and would be budgeted out in accordance with an amendment that has been offered here, provided we have a new commission. If, however, the administration of the measure should rest in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission, the money would be budgeted automatically from the receipts of the Treasury; and the $5,000,000, or approximately that sum, would go into the Treasury to offset whatever might be spent for the Budget.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is the $5,000,000 the annual amount?

Mr. WALCOTT. That would be an annual receipt, computed on the average of the 5 years just preceding.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator; but I am quite certain that nobody can make a very accurate estimate of what this new machine and its operation will cost.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Is not that an unusual set-up? I cannot recall at the moment any other agency where the officers are appointed by the Government to administer a law enacted by the Government and are authorized to assess the cost on some institution outside the Government. Is not that entirely new, unless we might say that some phase of it is involved in the processing tax? It seems to me that we are entering upon a very strange field.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I will say in that connection that I do not recall that I have had a single protest about that provision. I observed it as I read the bill, and I talked to some members of the committee about it, to see whether that was what was intended. I received from everybody the answer that that was what was intended; and, if you please, that removes one of the objections to the bill. People who are not interested in the stock exchange, people who are not interested in this business at all, might very well say to the Senator and to me, "We see no particular objection to annual salaries of $12,000. It makes no difference to us whether the commission costs $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 annually. It is no skin off our foreheads. It comes out of the stock exchange." So I suppose one of the purposes in putting this provision in the bill is to get rid of the opposition to it, so that nobody can possibly object to it, because none of the people back home, with the possible exception of a few people interested in stock exchanges, are concerned.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield for that purpose?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, it might be well at this time to call attention to the fact that the beginning of the inquiry into the stock exchange was a resolution which I introduced suggesting that an inquiry be made as to short sales being then made on the stock exchange. I was not responsible for the development into a wider inquiry, but, Mr. President, I have no complaint on that score, and I join in the compliments other Senators on the floor have extended to the committee for their investigation. I think they discovered evils which ought to have been discovered, and that they discovered much that was worth while that does not in any way enter into the bill now before the Senate. I am not complaining about the discoveries made, but I am complaining about trying in one act to remedy all the ills and cure all the injuries being inflicted upon people by reason of the transactions taking place at the time the committee began their investigation.

Mr. President, before I read the portion of the proposed act, which affects the stock exchanges alone, and referring again to the prejudices which have been created against the stock exchanges, I call attention to an editorial appearing in the Herald Tribune under date of May 2. The editorial is based upon a statement made by Mr. Ferdinand Pecora to the effect that nearly a billion dollars was made in the commission business by members of the New York Stock Exchange during the period of 5⅔ years. This newspaper says the exact figures were $833,000,000, and then calls attention to the fact that that was something like $140,000,000 a year. The editorial proceeds to state that during the period from January 1, 1928, to August 31, 1934, there were slightly more than 4,360,000,000 shares of stock bought and sold, and that a rapid calculation shows the average price to be $63. They add to that amount $17,000,000,000 in bonds, making a grand total of $292,000,000,000.

Then the editorial calls attention to the fact that as against this $292,000,000,000 the figures $833,000,000 are less impressive. They represent—the newspaper figures—three tenths of 1 percent of the amount of business transacted.

Then the newspaper calls attention to this fact:

> Indeed, it is only a little more than twice as large as the stamp tax on security sales that went to the Federal and State Governments during the period, which item Mr. Pecora conveniently forgets to mention. The transfer taxes on this huge turn-over amounted, the record shows, to more than $360,000,000.

Nothing is said in this connection with respect to the income taxes paid by the various members of the exchange upon these transactions.

Mr. President, after reading from that editorial, let me refer to the speech delivered by the chairman of the committee [Mr. FLETCHER], on page 8165 of the RECORD, in which he called attention to this billion-dollar profit. The Senator from Florida says:

> Mr. Whitney made some reply to that, according to the press, claiming that we do not take into consideration what they have lost in the value of their seats; in other words, that the seats have gone down from $600,000 each to about $190,000, I believe they are at this time, and that there was a loss to the stock exchange in the value of their assets by virtue of that fact. That is true in a way. There was a shrinkage in the value of the seats on the stock exchange, but, as Mr. Untermyer pointed out a day or two ago, they have during that time sold some 350 seats. Let us say they sold them at $190,000 each. At that figure their assets must have been considerably built up. Multiplying $190,000 by 350 gives quite a neat little sum.

Mr. President, I, myself, have done a little figuring on that matter, and I should like to submit the figures to the Senate with the hope that we may place in a little truer light the many things which are being said against the members of the New York Stock Exchange at this time. My primary objection to this bill is not because it imposes a great burden upon them. It is for the additional reason, as I have pointed out, that I think this bill in section 4 violates an important principle of our form of government, namely, taxation without representation, and not only that but taxation by other institutions than the Congress itself.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the able Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator give me his information as to whom go the $376,000,000 referred to by the Senator as transfer taxes?

Mr. HASTINGS. They go both to the State and the Federal Government. I have only the record which I quoted from the Herald Tribune. The greater part of it I am quite certain, however, goes to the Federal Government, but I think in New York there is also a tax upon the transfer of securities, which tax goes to the State of New York, and, as I understand the editorial, $360,000,000 is the total of such taxes paid both to New York State and the Federal Government.

Mr. President, in order that we may analyze for a moment the statement which was made by Mr. Pecora—and I remember seeing it in the headlines of all the newspapers for a day or two—that the stock-exchange members had made in a period of 5⅔ years nearly a billion dollars, I desire to call attention to the fact that if we take that huge sum and divide it by 1,375 members of the New York Stock Exchange the result shows a profit to each member of $605,800 during the period, or a little more than $100,000 a year for each member.

I should like to present these additional facts in order that Senators may better understand just how much they did gain. Bear in mind that at the time this period began a stock-exchange seat was worth $600,000; so that, for the purpose of my figures and for the purpose of illustration, I shall assume that at the very beginning some person purchased a seat on the New York Stock Exchange for that large sum. Figuring the interest at 6 percent upon that amount during that period will disclose that it amounts to $36,000 a year and for 5⅔ years it will be $214,000 interest on the investment, making the principal and interest up to that time $814,000.

If, on the other side of the ledger, we take the profit for that period of $605,800 and take the value of the seat at the end of that period at $190,000, we have at the end of the period $795,800 as against an investment and interest of $814,000, or an actual loss of $18,200. The stock-exchange member not only has the loss of $18,200 but he has spent his whole 5⅔ years in actual service in trying to make a profit.

I think the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] should be interested in those figures and I hope he may be able to tell the Senate later whether or not they are correct.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. I can find much fault with them right now, but I do not want to interfere with the Senator's discourse. The Senator has fixed a maximum of $600,000 for a seat. I wonder how many who invested their money through the brokers during that time got 6 percent through all the years? The figures presented by the Senator are so out of line with the experience of those who patronize the brokers as to be laughable.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator may laugh at the figures, but ordinarily a laugh will not change the result of accurate calculation. If he wants to figure on some other basis, if he can find something wrong with my figures and will point out the error, I shall, as I said, be very pleased to have him do so. It is true I have taken a larger sum, but if we are to be influenced by Mr. Pecora's figure, which was used by the chairman of the committee on the floor of the Senate, $833,000,000, which he had expanded to $1,000,000,000, I see no harm in calling attention to the fact of the larger sum and how it works out. I think it was true that at that time seats were selling for $600,000. I think it is true the lawful rate of interest is 6 percent. If we assume those facts, it will be found that at the end of the period the broker had an actual loss of $18,200.

Compare that figure with the salary which the commissioners are to get. During the period of 5⅔ years they will have received the sum of $68,000 with no investment of any kind and with authority to employ all the people they care to employ to assist them so as to lighten their burden. It seems to me under these circumstances that a member of the stock exchange in the end would probably be delighted to have a position as secretary to one of the commissioners rather than to retain his seat on the stock exchange itself.

Mr. President, I desire to discuss another phase of the bill. The distinguished junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] the other day pointed out that his principal objection to the bill is to be found in the burden placed upon the corporations of the country. That is the basis of my principal objection. That is found in section 12 (a). The particularly objectionable feature is the one which provides for—

> An agreement by the issuer * * * to comply with the provisions of this act and any amendments thereto, and with the rules and regulations made or to be made thereunder.

And so forth.

In the bill as it passed the House that provision has been eliminated. There is no such provision in the House bill. As the Senator from Oregon pointed out, it is particularly important that the issuer shall not be compelled to sign an agreement. It is wholly unnecessary to compel him to sign an agreement. There have been so many safeguards thrown around it in the bill, there is such a heavy penalty imposed upon those who violate any of the rules and regulations when their stock is listed, that it is wholly unnecessary and a useless burden upon the corporations to compel them to sign an agreement to do these things.

Mr. President, I desire to invite attention to what a corporation must do in order to have its stock listed upon any of the exchanges under the terms of the bill.

First. It must sign an agreement.

Second. It must comply with the provisions of the act and any amendments.

Third. It must comply with the rules and regulations of the commission.

Fourth. It must not lend funds at the money post, or to any member.

Fifth. It must not lend money to any broker or dealer.

Sixth. It must furnish full and complete information covering the following items:

Seventh. Organization, financial structure, nature, and operations of the business.

Eighth. The terms, position, rights, and privileges of the different classes of securities outstanding.

Ninth. The terms on which their securities have been or are to be offered to the public.

Tenth. The directors, officers, underwriters, and each security holder of record holding more than 10 percent of any class of equity security of the issuer.

Eleventh. Remuneration to others than to directors and officers exceeding $20,000 per annum.

Twelfth. Bonus and profit-sharing arrangements.

Thirteenth. Management and service contracts.

Fourteenth. Options existing or to be created in respect of their securities.

Fifteenth. Balance sheets for not more than the 3 preceding fiscal years, certified, if required by the rules and regulations of the commission, by independent public accountants.

Sixteenth. Profit-and-loss statements for not more than the 3 preceding fiscal years, certified, if required by the rules and regulation of the commission, by independent accountants.

Seventeenth. Any further financial statements which the commission may deem necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors.

Eighteenth. Copies of articles of incorporation.

Nineteenth. Copies of bylaws.

Twentieth. Copies of trust agreements.

Twenty-first. Copies of underwriting agreements.

Twenty-second. Such other documents as commission may require.

Twenty-third. If the requirements under subsection (b) be inapplicable, then such other information as commission may require.

Twenty-fourth. Reports provided in section 13.

Twenty-fifth. Correct information.

Twenty-sixth. Annual reports.

Twenty-seventh. Quarterly reports.

Twenty-eighth. Such other reports as are essential.

Twenty-ninth. Form of report.

Thirtieth. Items to be shown on balance sheet.

Thirty-first. Earning statement.

Thirty-second. Methods to be followed in preparation of report.

Thirty-third. Method to be followed in the appraisal of valuation of assets and liabilities.

Thirty-fourth. Method to be followed in determination of depreciation and depletion.

Thirty-fifth. Method to be followed in the determination of differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income.

Thirty-sixth. Method to be followed in the determination of the differentiation of investment and operating income.

Thirty-seventh. Method to be followed in the preparation of separate or consolidated balance sheets.

Thirty-eighth. Method to be followed in reporting income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlled by the corporation.

Thirty-ninth. Method to be followed in reporting income accounts of any person under direct or indirect common control with the corporation.

Fortieth. If any of these things be inapplicable, commission is authorized to require any report of comparable character.

So there are 40 things besides those which may be required by the rules and regulations that may be fixed by the commission.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FESS. On page 20 of the bill it is made unlawful for any dealer or broker or other person giving information for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of securities to make—

Any statement which was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made false or misleading in any material respect.

Then follows this language:

As used in this paragraph, the term "statement" shall be construed to mean any omission to state a material fact.

In other words, the statement must be limited to the facts; but if any statement is omitted that might be regarded by somebody to be material, the person omitting to make it is subject to punishment. How is a man to protect himself where he is under penalty for omitting a statement that somebody might regard as material? Is not that language unusually broad?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the specific language mentioned by the Senator merely undertakes to give a definition. I see no particular objection to requiring a full disclosure. As I read the language, its only purpose is to give a definition of what is meant in the form of a statement. That is, if a statement is presented, and something material is left out, those who drafted the bill have been careful not to let the person escape punishment.

Mr. FESS. In other words, a man is responsible for what he says, and he is equally responsible for what he does not say?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. FESS. That is pretty broad.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true; but this bill is so broad that it is difficult to tell what to do about it anyway.

Mr. President, there are two points to which I particularly desire to call attention. The Senate is familiar with the fact that there must be originally a balance sheet for not more than the 3 preceding fiscal years. I assume that that language is clear enough to let in a corporation that has not been in existence for more than 2 years, although my attention has been called to the fact that it might entirely eliminate a corporation that has been in existence only 2 years; but I think the language is unobjectionable. It might be made a little clearer, but it is not of great importance. To my mind, however, the provision running all through the bill providing for independent public accountants is of the very greatest importance.

Here, let us say, is a corporation which desires to have its stock registered on the exchange. It is required to have a balance sheet for the 3 preceding fiscal years certified, if required by the rules and regulations of the commission, by independent public accountants.

In the case of a large corporation, for instance, such as the United States Steel Corporation or the du Pont Co.—both of which, I assume, have independent public accountants to examine their books, as most corporations do, at least annually—does that or does it not mean that under the bill it is within the power of the commission to hold that such public accountants are not independent public accountants, because they were employed by the corporation itself, and that independent public accountants, under the bill and under the rules and regulations adopted by the commission, means such public accountants as the commission may select?

If that be the case, that which appears on the face of the matter to be a great burden, namely, the submission of annual and quarterly statements and such other statements as the commission may require, is greatly increased, because corporations cannot be certain that their own independent public accountants whom they have selected will be satisfactory to the commission. It might mean that the public accountants will be selected by the commission themselves, and that all the work will have to be done over.

Mr. President, a casual glance at the bill will indicate that a corporation will have a right to withdraw and have its stock stricken from the stock exchange. The Senator from Michigan called my attention to the matter the other day, as I recollect, when I raised some question about it. The language is:

A security registered with a national-securities exchange may be withdrawn or stricken from listing and registration in accordance with the rules of the exchange and after at least 30 days' notice by the issuer to the exchange and to the Commission; except that if the Commission deems such action necessary for the protection of investors, it may require ratification by the holders of a majority of the voting stock of the issuer prior to such withdrawal or striking from listing and registration.

In that connection I desire to call the attention of the Senate to section 19 (b), to see whether or not my interpretation is correct. Section 19 is the one which gives the broad powers to the commission. Paragraph (b) of that section provides:

The commission is further authorized, if after making appropriate request in writing to a national securities exchange that such exchange effect on its own behalf specified changes in its rules and practices, and after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, the commission determines that such exchange has not made the changes so requested, and that such changes are necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors or to insure fair dealing in securities traded in upon such exchange or to insure fair administration of such exchange, by order to alter or supplement the rules of such exchange.

Of course, everybody must admit that that language, if it means anything, means that the commission is in control, and the stock exchange must do what it is requested to do by the commission; but here are some of the things that are specified that the commission may do if the stock exchange does not do them voluntarily. All of these things are in respect to such matters as—

(1) Safeguards in respect of the financial responsibility of members and adequate provision against the evasion of financial responsibility through the use of corporate forms or special partnerships; (2) the limitation or prohibition of the registration or trading in any security within a specified period after the issuance or primary distribution thereof; (3) the listing or striking from listing of any security—

"The listing or striking from listing of any security."

(4) Hours of trading; (5) the manner, method, and place of soliciting business—

And so forth.

And then, to be certain that everything is covered, the paragraph concludes with:

(13) Similar matters.

Mr. President, I am quite certain that under the provisions of section 19, regardless of what a corporation may want to do, when its securities are once listed on an exchange it cannot withdraw them without the consent of the commission.

Passing from that for a moment, because I do not want to overlook the matter I am about to mention, I desire to call attention to the very extraordinary power given the commission by section 21 of the bill. It provides that:

The commission may, in its discretion, make such investigations as it deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this act or any rule or regulation thereunder, and may require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as the commission shall determine, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated. The commission is authorized, in its discretion, to publish information concerning any such violations, and to investgate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may seem necessary or proper to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this act, in the prescribing of rules and regulations thereunder.

Listen to the last three lines of that paragraph:

Or in securing information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this act relates.

If I know anything about what that means, it means passing over to this commission all the things the Committee on Banking and Currency has had the authority to do, and to do the things the committee has been doing for something like a year or more. In other words, the authority to investigate is to be passed over by the Congress, not to some committee of the Senate, but to be passed over to the commission itself, and with authority to punish persons who fail to comply with their requests and appear as witnesses, to furnish books and papers, and what not. They can delve into every corporation, and, so far as I can see, the power extends to corporations which have nothing to do with the stock exchange, and do not care to have anything to do with it, and might disclose, and in many instances would disclose, the most secret formulas of many of the corporations.

In that connection, I have some comments made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce in that regard. Referring to the corporation control section of the bill, it goes on record as follows:

The automobile industry believes that the proposed bill, through the provisions of the above sections, goes far beyond the legitimate purposes of stock-exchange regulation, and under the guise of that purpose extends to industry in general an unjustified governmental supervision over certain phases of its internal management. Aside from the question of the constitutional power of Congress to so extend governmental supervision to business in general, the chamber believes that there is no justification for governmental interference with the normal functions of private management. If long-recognized principles are to be discarded and all business is to be supervised by a governmental agency, then, in effect, all business is being put into the category of the railroads. To such a general theory that all industry should come under Government bureaucracies, this chamber is unalterably opposed. If control of certain features of corporate management is to be given now to a Federal agency, it is likely to be but the beginning of the usurpation of other functions of management.

In addition to its general objection to the regulation of phases of general business management by a Federal agency, the chamber submits that the sections referred to impose undue hardship on business without compensating advantages to the public. * * *

Much of the specific information required by the sections would be of little benefit to the public but would seriously affect the interests of the corporation by the disclosure of facts intimately related to confidential affairs of the corporation to competitors and to prying individuals with no legitimate ends to be served. It is reasonable to assume that the average investor is primarily interested in the true character of the security and the actual assets and the actual earnings of the corporation. The giving of information which goes beyond these phases of the corporation's affairs exceeds the legitimate requirements of investors and the public interest. * * *

Mr. President, there are other protests. Whether the Durable Goods Industries Committee spoke spontaneously or at the suggestion of stock-exchange members, as charged, is of little moment. The point is that they endorsed the judgment of alert business men who have read and studied the unusual and alarming features of the bill directly affecting corporations and corporate executives rather than the stock exchanges:

"Existing unemployment in industry", the letter states, "is traceable in large part to the reduced volume of private capital flowing into private enterprise and to the enormous losses sustained by business since 1929. Durable goods, the source of the greater part of all industrial unemployment, are financed largely by the proceeds of security sales. In addition, many enterprises within the group are so short of capital, due to past losses, as to be unable to operate effectively without new financing.

"These conditions make it imperative to restore the normal flow of new capital into private enterprise. In the 10 years ended with 1930 the volume of new capital moving into enterprise in the United States was about $4,000,000,000 per annum. In 1933 this had been reduced to $160,000,000, or about 4 percent of this annual average. This compares with about 56 percent in 1933 of the same 10-year annual average in the United Kingdom.

"Industry is in accord with the President in his judgment as to the necessity for regulating securities exchanges as expressed in his message to Congress on February 9. This proposed bill, however, goes far beyond anything dealt with in that message or required in the situation. It includes may detailed provisions for regulation which the committee believes are wrong in principle and if adopted would create many difficulties in administration. * * *

"If business needs capital for prosperity, it is in public interest not to burden corporations issuing securities for the procurement of such capital or investors purchasing such securities with regulations so stringent as to discourage such transactions."

Mr. Samuel W. Reyburn, president of the Associated Dry Goods Corporation, in an address relating to the Securities Act and the Stock Exchange Act, delivered on Thursday, May 3, made these observations:

The Fletcher-Rayburn bill adds to the citizen's confusion. It is intended to eliminate crooked speculation and to prevent management from taking advantage of inside knowledge to the detriment of the investor and the fellow in the street. Simple laws with real teeth in them can accomplish these desirable ends without placing the corporate executives and management in the strait-jacket the Securities Act of 1933 and the stock-exchange bill of 1934 will provide. Again there is no disposition to deny that speculation exceeded reasonable bounds in the period 1928–29 or that some executives clearly violated their fiduciary responsibilities and played fast and loose with their knowledge and power. It does not follow that the exchanges, as institutions, should be strangled and honest business men subjected to the continuous danger of persecution. The speculation which proved so harmful took place, it is true, upon the exchanges, but they were merely passive market places in which the exaggerated optimism of millions of men and women found expression. History abounds in illustrations of tyrants who beheaded messengers that brought them unfavorable tidings. It seems that something of this spirit is back of the Fletcher-Rayburn bill.

According to the income-tax returns, there are more than 500,000 corporations doing business in the United States. Probably no less than 2,000,000 individuals operate these enterprises and could be classed as business executives. It is reasonable to suppose that such a large group of men and women contain some whose spirit is predatory, whose conduct is antisocial. It is equally reasonable, however, to assume that the great majority of these are law-abiding citizens with just as decent a regard for the welfare of their employees, stockholders, and the general public as may be found among those who hold public office. The Fletcher-Rayburn bill insists on treating all these people as potential crooks.

The Securities Act and the stock-exchange control bill mislead the public and undermine its faith in values by attributing all losses to the deceit of investment bankers, to speculative excesses induced by the exchanges, and to the larcenous conduct of business executives. The real basis of values is entirely ignored.

Mr. President, before I leave the subject, I desire to call attention to what is called the Roper committee. I quote from Mr. DICKINSON, who, I think, was perhaps the person in control of the committee. I am not certain as to that, but I remember that Mr. DICKINSON had much to do with the pending bill.

I read from the House hearings, page 513, where Mr. Roper said:

The point which I have last made suggests the primary point of distinguishing between the theory upon which the report of the Roper committee was constructed and the theory of the present bill.

Having in mind, now, a bill similar to the one before us, but perhaps somewhat more drastic.

The Roper committee report went on the theory that if governmental regulation attempts to do too much directly and to control and intervene directly in the first instance over the whole field which it covers, it is in danger of breaking down under its own weight and proving ineffective. In the report of the Roper committee, therefore, the action of the Government through the proposed stock-exchange authority—which, incidentally, was to have no other duties than to be a stock-exchange authority and was to be free to devote its entire time to the task of exchange regulation—nevertheless the functions, the regulatory functions of this governmental agency were held in reserve and were employed only to supplement and supervise what in the first instance was self-regulation of the exchanges.

No doubt the exchanges will frequently fail to do a good job of regulating their members, but even so, it seemed to the Roper committee during their deliberations likely that Government regulation was likely to be more effective and less unwieldy if it was applied to the exchanges in an effort to make them do their own job and to come down on them like a ton of bricks if they did not do their job, rather than for the Government itself to take over from them that job of direct regulation and attempt to perform it from the very beginning and in the first instance by governmental policing methods.

In framing a regulatory measure the practical problem of administration has always to be faced, and when regulation gets beyond a certain point the sheer ineffectiveness of attempting to exercise it directly through government on a wide scale counterbalances the fact that possibly the exchanges might not be as diligent as we would wish them to be about regulating themselves or as diligent as the Government would be if the task were compact enough to fall within the limits of effective governmental performance.

Now, it may be said, of course, cynically—and I think that there is a good deal in it, and of course we have to recognize the weakness of human nature—it may be said that the idea of self-regulation is just a device to avoid regulation, and so in some instances it no doubt is; but self-regulation in the first instance, with the Government holding its power in reserve to see that that self-regulation is exercised, is after all a necessary recourse in view of the mere physical limitations in time and in personnel, which operate on the direct exercise of the powers of government as the task of regulation becomes more and more extensive over a wider and wider field.

Now, in what I am saying, I hope I will not be regarded as speaking in any attitude of negative criticism of this bill. I believe that regulation of the stock exchanges by Federal legislation should be enacted at this time by the present Congress; that it is demanded by the conditions which exist and by the pledges of the party platform.

I do not, however, believe that those demands will necessarily be satisfied by any or every type of bill that might be adopted irrespective of its provisions. I envisage a type and method of regulation which will be effective because it does not go beyond the limits of what is feasible and necessary in order to accomplish its objective.

I can conceive a type of Federal regulatory authority which will not undertake to burden itself by dividing the control of banks and bank credit with the established financial agencies of the Government, and which will not be swamped by an attempt to exercise drastic control over thousands of corporations and municipal bodies.

If stock-market regulation is to be effective and not a mere peg upon which to hang other regulatory activities, the Federal agency which is charged with such regulation should be free to devote itself to that task, which is a large enough one to require the full attention of any governmental agency if it is to be successfully performed.

Mr. President, much has been said here about all the corporations of the country coming under the provisions of this measure. It is undoubtedly true that the bill in effect grants to the commission control of all the corporations of the country which desire to sell their securities outside the State in which they are incorporated. Section 15 of the bill, under the heading "Over-the-Counter Markets", is a section which has nothing at all to do with the stock exchanges. It is an effort to control the broker or dealer, and it provides that—

It shall be unlawful for any broker or dealer, singly or with any other person or persons, to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce for the purpose of making or creating, or enabling another to make or create, a market, otherwise than on a national securities exchange, for both the purchase and sale of any security (other than an exempted security or commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, commercial bills, or other similar obligations) in contravention of such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest and to insure to investors protection comparable to that provided by and under authority of this act in the case of national securities exchanges. Such rules and regulations may provide for the regulation of all transactions on any such market, for the registration with the commission of dealers and/or brokers making or creating such a market, and for the registration of the securities for which they make or create a market. For the purposes of this section the commission may make special rules and regulations in respect of securities or specified classes thereof listed, or entitled to unlisted trading privileges, upon any exchange on the date of the enactment of this act, which securities are not registered under the provisions of section 12 of this act.

In other words, if a corporation, at the time this bill becomes effective, concludes that it does not care to go into this agreement with the stock exchange which will make it binding upon the corporation to comply with the forty-odd things prescribed by the bill itself, as well as all the rules and regulations which may be made by the commission, if the corporation concludes that it does not want to take that chance, that it does not want to enter into an agreement to go on the stock exchange when it is uncertain whether it can ever get off, there is no provision made in the bill to let the corporation alone. If it is a corporation of any size, its securities will be scattered throughout many States. That is particularly true if it is a corporation whose stock has been listed upon the prominent exchanges of the country. So what is the corporation to do with respect to that? It cannot escape by saying, "We decline to go on", because no broker or dealer dare have any transaction with that particular stock until the corporation has complied with the provisions of this bill, until it has filed with the commission three annual statements, until it has done all these things.

In other words, there is only one kind of corporation which is not affected by the bill, and that is the corporation whose stock is dealt in by a broker only in the State wherein the particular broker and the particular corporation are located.

Out of the 500,000 corporations mentioned by Mr. Reyburn in his letter, how many are in such a position as that?

Is it not true that they must comply with the provisions of the bill? Whatever may be said and whatever may be thought about the members of the New York Stock Exchange, is there any reason for and is there any good sense in imposing that kind of obligation upon the corporations of the country? Or is it true, Mr. President, that in the past few months there has developed such a prejudice against capital of all kinds—against capital which is represented by investments in corporations—that we want to destroy them all?

I sometimes wonder whether the suggestion which has been made by Mark Sullivan and by others is, after all, correct, that there are certain persons in this administration, close to the President of the United States, who are deliberately attempting to prevent the country from progressing; who are insisting that the Securities Act of 1933 is a thing that must remain on the statute books without being changed; who insist that we must go further, and strangle other securities by imposing upon them the restrictions contained in this bill, in order that there may be no further progress, and in order that people who have money may find no place to invest it except in the securities of the Government of the United States, and the Government of the United States in return will say, "In view of all these circumstances, in view of the need of these industries to go forward, in order that we may get rid of some of the unemployment, the Government itself must take hold of the industries, and place its own money in them, and place its own officials in charge of them"—in other words, bring all the industries of the Nation, just as they have the farms of the Nation, under the control of some bureau in Washington.

Mr. President, notwithstanding all the prejudices that may have been created against the stock exchange, notwithstanding all the prejudices that may have been created against corporations generally, notwithstanding all the prejudices that have been created against persons of wealth, I am confident in my own mind that unless the Securities Act shall be changed so that capital will be willing to invest in new enterprises, there will be no great progress made in this Nation. At the same time I say, even if we shall do that as is proposed in connection with this bill—amend the Securities Act so as to make it more liberal and attach such amendment to the pending measure—when we pass this proposed act, despite the improvement in the securities law, we shall have made conditions worse than they are at the present time.

I say, in closing, that the majority are proposing to do that which is not necessary to protect the innocent investors of the country. They are taking this action, it seems to me, in order to punish people who they think have done wrong. When they get an opportunity to punish them, they should do it in a way that will be effective; but when they do that, they should at the same time bear in mind that they are doing a great harm to many other people. There are in this country 14,000,000 people holding stocks of corporations to the amount of less than 100 shares each.

Senators must bear in mind that when they destroy corporations, when they destroy the wealth of the Nation, they are destroying the insurance companies which protect me and my family and which protect the families of others. They are destroying the savings banks which, in many instances, have their investments in this kind of securities. They are destroying the widow who has been left a few shares of stock which were once worth a few thousand dollars. They are destroying the very heart of the Nation when they destroy that class of people. This kind of legislation will ultimately do all that; if it shall be persisted in it will retard recovery, and it will be a long time before we get rid of the task of feeding the unemployed of the Nation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in a few minutes I will be compelled to leave the city to be gone for the balance of the day, and before I go I desire to make a few remarks upon the pending amendment.

The amendment now pending before the Senate is one which would place the control of the operation of the bill, when it shall become a law, in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission, instead of under the special commission proposed to be set up in the bill.

There has been controversy over that matter for some time. It was one of the points of controversy in the committee. The same controversy arose in the House, and the House provided that the control should be in the Federal Trade Commission.

An amendment similar to that now pending was defeated in the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, we are told by the chairman of the committee, by a very small margin. The chairman of the committee himself stated on the floor of the Senate that in the committee he had favored the amendment. He feels, and perhaps some others feel, that since the committee has not seen fit to put the Federal Trade Commission in charge, he should vote against such a proposal now.

Mr. President, to me that argument has but little weight, especially when we realize that very likely it was fully discussed in the committee, and that the committee is almost evenly divided on this question, or was at the time it was voted on in the committee.

The argument is made that since the House provided that the Federal Trade Commission should be in charge of the enforcement of the law, if we insert such provision in the bill now, there will be nothing in conference. That is one reason why I think that if we favor the Federal Trade Commission having charge of the operation of the law, we ought to vote for the amendment, so as to take it out of conference, and therefore settle the matter once and for all.

After all, we are called upon now, in our vote on this amendment, to decide whether we prefer to have the Federal Trade Commission or the special commission to be set up in the Senate bill take charge of the enforcement of the law. That is the test. As I look at it, our votes should not be controlled by the vote in the committee, especially under these circumstances.

Mr. President, I believe the Federal Trade Commission ought to have charge of the enforcement of the law. I regretted exceedingly that the committee, in framing the bill, did not provide that the Federal Trade Commission should be in charge. It seems to me that in the hearings, remarkable as the work of the committee was, they pulled several teeth out of the bill before they reported it, and I think this is one of them. If we put the amendment of the Senator from Colorado into the bill now, we will be restoring, as I look at it, one very valuable and necessary tooth, which should be in the law in order to aid in its administration.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to correct one statement from an historical standpoint. The bill as originally introduced in the Senate carried provision that the administration of the law should be in the Federal Trade Commission. The Senator from Virginia offered an amendment to change that so as to provide for a special commission. That was the amendment which by a majority vote the Senate committee adopted. As originally introduced, the bill carried this idea.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. That only demonstrates the accuracy of what I said, and I am glad to have the Senator's statement.

As I look at it, when the committee took out the provision giving the Federal Trade Commission control and put the control in the special commission they pulled out a good, healthy tooth that was already in the bill. I want to see it go back.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. According to our view, we not only did not pull a tooth, but we established a tooth that will have nothing else to do except to chew on this particular problem.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand; the Senator can have his viewpoint, but, as a matter of fact, the country and even the Senate do not look at it that way, and did not look at it that way when that tooth was pulled out. The country was worked up for fear the committee, engaged in pulling teeth out of this bill, would present us with a toothless old woman when they got through. I do not think they did that. As the Senator from Arizona, sitting near me, states, it will be 6 months before "she" can take a bite if they pull many more teeth out. I think there are many teeth in the bill. I do not want to be understood as being opposed to the bill in any respect. With this amendment or without it, I am for the bill, and hope it will be enacted.

Mr. President, in the first place, I am opposed to the establishment, unless it is absolutely necessary, of more bureaus and commissions in our Federal Government. We already have many of them doing good work, it is true; but if we provide for the commission proposed to be set up we are going to duplicate the work, I think. The Federal Trade Commission as now constituted have established offices for the enforcement of the securities law, which will become a part of this work, in different parts of the country. They have the machinery now in operation, practically enough machinery to put this law into operation at once, if it is put on the statute books. They are not inexperienced men who do not understand what this law will be.

It is said, and that is the argument in favor of a special commission, that we shall have specialists in this line on the Commission. I think we can all concede that it should be a commission which is not under the control of the body which we want to govern. The Commission should not be under the control of bankers. It ought to be in the control of independent men. They should, of course, be men who have sufficient ability, wisdom, and courage to carry out the provisions of the bill according to their true meaning. Such are the men now in the Federal Trade Commission. They are able men. They have been engaged in governing business of this kind ever since the establishment of the Commission. They have been dealing with problems which are very much akin to those with which the special commission provided for in the bill will have to deal if the bill becomes law. We shall then have men already tried to a great extent, and ready to go on with the service.

Another reason why I believe the Federal Trade Commission should be designated is because of what I believe to be the economy of the situation. In the last session of Congress we passed a bill authorizing the President of the United States to bring about economy by the consolidation of bureaus and special offices and departments. If there had been then a separate commission doing this line of work, there is no doubt in my mind that the President, in carrying out the provisions of such a law, would have combined the two Commissions. They ought to be combined. They are very much alike in their operations. Economy will result if we adopt this amendment. We shall thereby save money for the taxpayers.

I think the Federal Trade Commission is more likely to be efficient in administering the law than a new commission. If we have numberless commissions doing all kinds of governmental investigation and work, we shall find that the attention of the country will not be attracted to the different commissions. I feel that if this special commission shall be appointed, it will not be many years before the country will lose track of what it is doing. New appointments may be made; inexperienced, really unqualified men may be put on the commission; and its action will not attract the attention that will be attracted by the addition of the Federal Trade Commission, an outstanding investigating governmental body which has been in the eyes of the people of the country for years, in fact ever since the commission was established during the administration of President Wilson.

If appointments are to be made to another commission which is not in the public eye, it is very likely that appointments will be made and changes will be made in its membership to the detriment of good government without the country ever knowing anything about it. That cannot happen with the Federal Trade Commission.

It is said that the Federal Trade Commission is already overworked. It has done, and is doing, a remarkable work. It is easy to increase its membership if necessary to enable it to do the work entrusted to it. The commission that is designated will be in reality the general for an army of men who will be appointed to go into records more or less of a technical nature and get the facts desired by the Commission. The Commissioners will act finally upon the facts thus assembled.

Here we have a Commission already established, equipped as no other branch of the Government is equipped, prepared to do this kind of work. It does not make any difference whether it investigates a corporation which is selling bonds, or whether it investigates a corporation which is making sewing machines; in either case its purpose is to protect the people of the country against fraud and wrongdoing.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No one knows better than the able Senator from Nebraska that the Federal Trade Commission was created in large part to deal with unfair practices.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one of the superlative things emphasized at the time of the passage of the original act.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does not that fact and the experience of the Commission in dealing with such practices especially equip it to serve under the bill being considered by the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I do not think that can be disputed. The members of the Commission are trained and experienced. The very law that provides for their existence requires that they shall be men of the type qualified to undertake this additional work. They have been engaged in work very similar to this—a part of it, I think, in reality—because the Senator from Florida has announced that if this amendment shall be defeated, and if this task shall be left to a special commission, he will offer another amendment to take away from the Federal Trade Commission authority to operate under the so-called "Securities Act." That act has been in operation for some time, and the Federal Trade Commission has had considerable experience with it.

I called on a member of the Federal Trade Commission for some information about the work they had done under that act. I shall not weary the Senate with any long statistics. I shall simply state that they have had a great many cases, running into the thousands, of little things that have arisen under the Securities Act. Every action they have taken stands at the present time. There has not been a single appeal from any action taken by the Federal Trade Commission under that act.

Let me give the Senate some of the figures. Under that act the Federal Trade Commission has made 144 orders. That is quite a number. Some of them are important. Some of them are of minor importance. Altogether there have been 144 orders. Those were what are called orders of withdrawal. Not a single appeal was taken, although appeal is allowed by law, from any order of withdrawal made by the Commission.

A corporation desiring to issue securities files schedules, and so forth, as provided by law, with the Federal Trade Commission; and in case of adverse action by the Federal Trade Commission an order of withdrawal is made. They do not allow securities to be issued in a particular case where they issue an order of withdrawal. Senators should realize that this is of tremendous importance in saving the investors of America from investing their hard-earned funds in securities that would be considered, if the whole facts were known, to be bad. That is what a withdrawal order means.

Altogether, the Federal Trade Commission has issued 105 of those orders. That means that already there have been 105 cases under the Securities Act in which the Federal Trade Commission has not permitted stocks and bonds to be issued and sold to the public. Of those 105 cases, 39 were stop orders. A stop order requires the corporation to refrain from issuing any stock. From all those orders, as matters stand today, not one appeal has been taken.

I submit that the work already done by the Federal Trade Commission illustrates, and I think practically demonstrates, its equipment for the additional work provided for in this bill.

I said that in carrying out and fulfilling the duties of the Commission it has established offices in different parts of the United States, and has put in employees whose work many times is of a technical nature, whose duty it is to ferret out and assemble the facts before these orders are passed on. So the Commission is already doing a part of this work. It is doing it successfully, I think.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, I think the work which the bill provides shall be done by this Commission is of tremendous importance. Do not get the idea that the country is not interested in this proposed legislation. People all over the country are watching it. The country, I think, has confidence in the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, when was the Securities Act passed?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not remember now. If some other Senator has the date I shall be glad to yield to him, and let him give us the date.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the act was passed very shortly before the adjournment of the last session, about the middle of last June.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have said about all I have time to say. I sincerely trust we will bear in mind, first, that if we shall adopt this amendment there will be no offense to the committee. The committee practically stands even on it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the exact date of the approval of the Securities Act was May 27, 1933.

Mr. NORRIS. When the question was first asked by the Senator from Michigan I was about to say that the bill became a law a year ago. That is practically true. It has been in operation for just about a year.

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to announce the absence of the Senators whose names I previously mentioned, to which I add the name of my colleague, the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], who has been summoned to his State on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the amendments offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], it having been agreed that they shall be voted on en bloc.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not quite comprehend the suggestion of the Chair about voting on the amendments en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the present occupant of the chair that it was agreed yesterday that the three amendments submitted by the Senator from Colorado should be voted on en bloc.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, all the amendments, I may explain to the Senator from Oregon, have relationship to the same subject matter and are designed to carry out the principal purpose of the amendment, which is to substitute the Federal Trade Commission for the special commission reported by the committee. It is an entirely consistent proceeding.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is one subject covered by the three amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is really one amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I can appreciate a parliamentary situation where the three amendments might be, in fact, covering one subject matter. If that is the situation, of course, I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is entirely correct.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, am I to understand that there are three places where we are going to strike out the provision for the special commission and insert the "Federal Trade Commission"?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As I understand, the changes proposed by the amendments of the Senator from Colorado are designed to effectuate that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senate decides to substitute the Federal Trade Commission for the special commission, there are several places in the bill where the change will have to be made. The amendments of the Senator from Colorado cover all those changes.

Mr. FESS. Very well.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, my attention has been called to certain language in lines 23 to 25 on page 10 of the bill, reading as follows:

To complete its organization and to carry out its work during the first year after its establishment.

Those words, of course, imply that the Commission is to be established through the enactment of the bill. If the Federal Trade Commission should be chosen as the agency under the bill by the adoption of my amendment, the words I have read ought to be slightly modified, because it is already established. I ask to have substituted for the quoted words the following:

To carry out its functions under this act during the first year after the date of the enactment of this act.

I request that this substitution be treated as part of the amendments which are to be voted on together.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if his interpretation of his amendment includes the furnishing of a budget by the Federal Trade Commission for the execution of this work. The Senator will recall that some of our colleagues have complained about the proposed independent commission being free to tax the stock exchanges any amount it may choose. I understand the effect of the Senator's amendment is that the budget shall apply to it in the same sense that it is applied in the Securities Act and to other commissions. Is that correct?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It has been my assumption that the budgetary requirements will prevail under these amendments and under the law. It is true that the language with respect to expenses means that those expenses are to be estimated by the Commission. That is so under the bill as reported to the Senate by the Banking and Currency Committee. I do not interpret that language as obviating the necessity for budgetary precautions.

Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to read without further comment two paragraphs from the testimony of Commissioner Landis, an able member of the Federal Trade Commission, who appeared as the first witness in the stock exchange regulation hearings held on H.R. 7852 and H.R. 8720. I read from the testimony at page 23. Commissioner Landis said:

Now it may be said why not take the Securities Act away from the Commission—and put it in the hands of whatever administrative authority may be chosen to administer the job of administering this act? It seems to me in a large measure that the answer to that is this—that the Securities Act has been administered and has been developed in the Federal Trade Commission where there is a corps of experts in whom I happen to have confidence. I think they have a morale that I would say is second to none in any Government department. It would be a shame to lose the benefits of those traditions. The building up of a successful, worthwhile efficiency has already been achieved there.

Secondly, I think there is always danger attendant upon the establishment of new commissions. It takes some time for a commission to get started. The Federal Trade Commission, I think, can be credited with efficiency in operation, a tradition of true service, and one of integrity; all qualities demanded by an act of this type, and for that reason, the Commission itself, I think, feels that it would like to undertake an activity of this type.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado because I do not agree with him that the Federal Trade Commission has experts in its employ who are familiar with the development and condition of the industries of the country. I am positive in my opinion, based on information I have received, that they have not anyone on the force of the Commission or on the Commission itself who knows anything on earth about the development of the mining industry of the country.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I understand the amendment of the Senator from Colorado proposes to substitute the Federal Trade Commission in every part of the bill for the special commission which is recommended by the committee. I invite his attention to the provisions in lines 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, page 10, which authorizes the commission to levy certain annual assessments for payment of estimated expenses. There is no limitation upon the use of those funds derived from such an assessment. If the Federal Trade Commission is to be substituted for the special commission now provided for in the bill, there is no way in which such funds can be segregated. They might be used for any or all the expenses of the Federal Trade Commission and not be limited to the expense of supervising the administration of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the House bill contains a provision in effect levying an assessment of one five hundredths of 1 percent on the amount of sales of securities, to be used to administer the provisions of the bill. The view I have of the legislative situation is that in conference some arrangement can be effected to take care of any such difficulty as is suggested by the able Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I confess that I do not know how an agreement can be entered into in conference when this provision is absolutely clear as it is worded here, and will be part of the enactment if the bill shall be passed.

Beginning in line 16 of page 10, the bill now reads:

The Commission shall levy semiannually upon such exchanges an assessment sufficient to pay its estimated expenses and the salaries of its members and employees—

What Commission? The Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. With respect to the matter that will be in conference, the House bill says, on page 56:

Every national securities exchange shall pay to the Commission—on or before March 15 of each calendar year a registration fee for the privilege of doing business as a national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year or any part thereof. Such fee shall be in an amount equal to one five-hundredths of 1 percent of the aggregate dollar amount of the sales of securities transacted on such national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year.

I submit that if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado should be agreed to, this entire matter would be in conference—that is, the paragraph which the Senator read, which appears in our bill, and the paragraph which appears in the House bill—so that our conferees would be in a position, if the Federal Trade Commission should be designated, to adopt the language of the House providing for the collection of one five-hundredths of 1 percent.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, that has absolutely no relation to this provision. This provision would still be in the bill and would provide funds for the Federal Trade Commission if the Federal Trade Commission should be substituted. It seems to me that we should legislate on our own account and not rely upon the conference or upon the provisions of the House bill.

It is not a difficult matter to provide a modification which will take care of this inconsistency. For example, after the words "sufficient to pay its estimated expenses and the salaries", and so forth, we may add the words "for the purposes of this bill."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that the vote will be taken upon the amendment heretofore submitted by the Senator from Colorado. If the amendment shall prevail, then the matter to which the Senator from Rhode Island refers can well be considered, and he can offer an amendment to correct the language.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I understand that this very section is included within the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. If that be so, and the amendment shall be adopted, then it will have been perfected, and will not be subject to further amendment, as I understand the rule.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not know that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado covered that point, but I see no reason why it cannot be perfected at this time. If the Senator has an amendment to offer, why does he not offer it?

Mr. HEBERT. It is not my amendment. I am suggesting a change in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, to clarify the language of his amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, yesterday I indicated to the Senate—doubtless in the absence of the Senator from Rhode Island—that section (d) on page 10 is not included in the amendments. Possibly confusion has arisen from the fact that this afternoon, in order to perfect the amendments, a change was suggested in the language in lines 23 to 25 on page 10; but in other respects the subdivision referred to by the Senator from Rhode Island is not touched by the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. I understand that if he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is necessarily detained. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CUTTING (when Mr. NORRIS' name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is unavoidably absent from the Chamber, has a pair on this question with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If the Senator from Nebraska were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea", and I understand that the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], who is detained by illness. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I refrain from voting. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], caused by official business, and desire to state that were he present and voting, I am authorized to say that he would vote "nay."

Mr. BARKLEY (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask whether or not my pair has been announced?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] announced the pair of the Senator from Maryland with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. STEPHENS (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. HEBERT. On this question the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. I am advised that if the Senator from Missouri were present, he would vote "nay" on this question, and that if the Senator from Louisiana were present, he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 51, as follows:

So Mr. COSTIGAN's amendments were rejected.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask the clerk to read an amendment which I desire to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 35, section 13, paragraph (d), to amend by changing the period after the word "issuer" to a comma, and adding the following:

> And notwithstanding any of the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of this act, the Commission may require the issuer to file with the exchange or with the Commission only such information as is necessary to protect the public and investors in the securities of such issuer.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the purpose of the pending measure is to control the stock exchanges and to provide protection for the American public and for the investors.

I respectfully request and urge that my amendment be accepted, for it provides that the commission of five shall be privileged to secure from the corporations whose issues are listed upon the exchanges just such information as will be of benefit to the commission or to the Government in protecting the public and investors.

The measure was designed originally exclusively for the purpose of protecting the public and investors, and controlling the stock exchanges, and I can see no reason why this amendment should not be accepted. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I want to say only a word with reference to the amendment. The language of the bill as it now stands leaves to the commission the determination as to what is necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors and to insure fair dealing in securities. That is the language of section 13.

The effect of the language offered by the Senator from North Carolina would be to take from the commission the discretionary power. It would give to the court the power of immediate review and nullify the provisions of the bill as to hearings in cases where the corporation protests against the disclosure of the information.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to ask the Senator what he conceives the commission might ask for that would not be in the interest of the investor?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not conceive of anything. I am pointing out specifically what the effect of the amendment would be. Under the language of this very section it is provided that the commission may require information necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors.

This amendment is evidently for the purpose of making it possible for any person who is asked for information to go into the courts and request an immediate revision on the ground that the Commission is exceeding its authority.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to, because I do not think the commission should be hobbled in any such way.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may we have the amendment read again? I have tried to get a copy of it but have been told it is not in print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will again state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 35, section 13, paragraph (d), to change the period after the word "issuer" to a comma, and to add the following:

And notwithstanding any of the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of this act, the Commission may require the issuer to file with the exchange or with the Commission only such information as is necessary to protect the public and investors in the securities of such issuer.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, what does the word "only" relate to there? Will the Senator tell me to what the adverb relates?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The members of the commission proposed to be set up are to be privileged, under the pending measure, to make certain inquiries of corporations whose securities are listed upon the exchange. The members of the commission, under the measure, are privileged to inquire of corporations into their business, only to the extent of securing information sufficient to protect the public and to protect investors in general.

It is not to be the business of this commission, it is not the business of this Government, to inquire into the private affairs of any individual, or to inquire into the corporate affairs of any corporation, unless, under the provisions of this measure, the inquiries directed will be of material benefit to the commission in protecting the public and in protecting investors.

I say to the Senator from California, in passing, that the purpose of the measure is twofold: First, to control the stock exchanges; secondly, to protect the general public and the investors, and under this measure the commission will have the right to inquire into the affairs of any corporation only to the extent of securing information sufficient to protect investors.

Therefore, I have incorporated in the amendment and have employed the word "only", because the power of the commission should not go beyond their authority to collect information sufficient to protect investors.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. As I listened to the wording of the Senator's amendment, it occurred to me that it was covered in paragraph (K) of section 12, on page 30, which would authorize the commission to require such further financial statements as would be appropriate for the protection of investors. I understood that to be the purpose of the Senator's amendment, but it seems to me that is covered in paragraph (K).

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I think my amendment clarifies the phraseology of the particular section.

I will say to the Members of the Senate that I am desirous of having the amendment adopted in order that the authority of the commission may be limited to the extent that they may not be privileged to delve more deeply into the affairs of a corporation than is necessary in order to protect the public and investors.

I am of the opinion that the public and investors have some rights in this matter, that they have some say-so, and in all fairness to the public and to those corporate institutions whose issues are listed on the stock exchanges, I think the amendment ought to be adopted, and I hope that it will be.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, my position is that the amendment is wholly unnecessary. It simply uses language which is not needed or required in any way, and makes for confusion rather than clarity.

In the very beginning, section 13 provides:

SEC. 13. (a) The Commission may require every issuer of a security registered on a national securities exchange to file with the exchange and with the Commission in accordance with, and in such form and detail and at such times as may be prescribed by, such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors and to insure fair dealing in the security—

That is in the very outset of section 13, and it applies to all requirements under section 13.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I have no great concern about this amendment one way or the other, but I think there is some misunderstanding of the effect of the language presently contained in section 13 (a), and in the assumption that that language is substantially identical in effect with the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Section 13 provides that the reports which are to be made shall be prescribed by rules and regulations, "as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors."

Mr. President, that leaves the question of the scope of the reports in the discretion of the commission. I believe there is no question about that at all. When the commission, in the exercise of its power, makes the determination that is permitted under that language, such determination is final; if the amendment is agreed to, it becomes a question of the determination by the commission only in the first instance, and the corporation would have a right to appeal to the courts if the commission exceeded its authority and went further than the proposed limitation permits; whereas in the language as now written in the bill there would be no restraint on the commission, in court or otherwise, because the decision is discretionary with the commission, and its action could only be reviewed for abuse of discretion.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator will agree with me that that must be the purpose of the amendment; that if the commission must determine, then that discretion is vested in the commission in the first paragraph of section 13. This language is a limitation upon the powers of the commission, and it must be meant by the limitation to give to the corporation the right to go into court, to prevent the commission from abusing its authority.

Mr. STEIWER. Undoubtedly it is a limitation. And I think it is reasonably clear that the adoption of the amendment would permit the corporation to resort to the court to determine whether the commission had exceeded its authority or had abused its discretion in requiring reports which are not related to the protection of the investor. Whereas under the language of the bill the determination by the commission would be final, there would ordinarily be no way to review its conclusion; and the nature, the extent and scope of the reports would be determined by the commission, and its determination would be final upon the subject.

Mr. BYRNES. Except in this respect, the Senator will agree that in the subsequent section of the bill, where it is provided that if the corporation deems the information is such that it should not be made public, they can, in furnishing the information, file such a statement, and they would have a private hearing by the commission, and if the commission then issued an order against the contention of the corporation, the corporation then has a right to go into the courts and appeal from that order.

Mr. STEIWER. I agree thoroughly, Mr. President, and I think if I were preparing the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, I would consider very seriously putting it in the subsequent section, instead of at the end of section 13.

I will not detain the Senate by further consideration of this matter. I rather like the idea of giving to the corporations who are subject to this act the right to protect their essential interests by appeal to the courts. I shall, therefore, vote for the amendment. But I hope that no Senator will vote for it in the belief that it merely restates language already contained in the bill. I believe it does not do that but, on the contrary, makes an essential change in the language of the bill, and I imagine it was so intended by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And brings about a limitation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator yield the floor?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that section 12 of the bill deals with the registration of securities on the exchanges, and section 13 deals with the reports which are to be made from time to time after the securities shall have been registered.

This amendment is undoubtedly intended to restrict the power of the commission in requiring information for the benefit of investors, because the amendment begins by saying that notwithstanding any of the provisions of sections 12 and 13 the commission shall not do so and so. In other words, it is a nullification of many of the provisions of sections 12 and 13 and is intended to be a nullification of those specific provisions insofar as they may conflict with the language of the Senator's amendment. Otherwise, there would be no object in saying that notwithstanding any of the provisions of sections 12 and 13, which set out somewhat in detail the power of the commission in requiring reports, this language shall govern the commission in requiring these reports. One might as well move to strike out sections 12 and 13 entirely.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky that I am at variance with him upon that question. The intent of my amendment is to restrict the authority of the commission to a certain extent. I am of the opinion that no commission, no government, no one should be given authority to go beyond the intent of the act itself.

What is the intent of the act? There is but one interpretation that I can put upon it.

There is but one intent to it. There is but one thing in which we are all interested, and that one thing is the protection of the American investor. We are more interested in protecting the investor than we are interested in controlling the stock exchange, and I say that it is manifestly unfair to permit any commission, any individual, or any government to inquire into the affairs of a corporation and secure information which is not going to be of a single bit of benefit, material or otherwise, to the American investor.

Therefore I insist upon the employment of the word "only", which in this instance is to be interpreted as a limitation. Why should this commission be permitted to inquire into the business of a corporation beyond securing information that would be of benefit to the commission in protecting the American investor? On the contrary, I say to my colleague from Kentucky that it is not the intention to nullify any portion of the provisions of sections 12 and 13. It is the intention of the amendment merely to limit the prowling powers of the commission created under this act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in voting on this amendment we might as well understand that it is intended as a restriction of the authority of the commission as set out in sections 12 and 13. Otherwise, as I said a moment ago, one might as well strike out the language of sections 12 and 13, and say, in substitution for those two sections, "The Commission may require the issuer to file with the exchange or with the Commission only such information as is necessary to protect the public and the investors in the securities of such issuer", and let it go at that. That is all this amendment would mean, because it starts out, in substance, with the language "notwithstanding anything else in sections 11 and 12." Notwithstanding the subsections which are set out in detail in sections 12 and 13, those sections are to be null and void if they conflict with the language here employed.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. Would the Senator rather add that the commission shall have uncontrolled discretion to make any rules it pleases? That is practically what is now provided.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the Senator does not understand the language employed to mean any such thing.

Mr. KEAN. I understand the English language, and that is what I understand it to mean. It means that these matters are within the uncontrolled discretion of the Commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we understand that if any Commission abuses its discretion, the courts are always available to anyone who is injured.

Mr. KEAN. I think that is what this sentence means; and I think the distinguished Senator from North Carolina has put in a limitation which ought to be there.

Mr. BARKLEY. I knew before the Senator spoke that he felt that way about it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I should like the Senator to point out where there is any such authority.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not a specific authority granted in the bill; but no commission, no Government agency, can abuse a discretion conferred upon it by Congress without someone having the right to go into court and assert his rights as an injured party. The result of this amendment will be that everyone who dislikes any regulation which the commission may make, or is disinclined to furnish any information which the commission may demand, will immediately go into court and tie up the commission indefinitely, so that the information will be obtained so late that it will be of no value to the investing public or the prospective purchaser of an issue.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The authors of the bill evidently have recognized the fact that the commission is to have no right whatsoever to interfere with the management of any corporation whose issues are listed on the stock exchange. That is evidenced by paragraph (d) of section 13, on page 35, which reads as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the Commission to interfere with the management of the affairs of an issuer.

In other words, nothing in the bill shall be construed as authorizing the commission to interfere with the affairs of a corporation. That being true, and that being frankly in accordance with the terms of paragraph (d) of section 13, it naturally follows as a consequence that nothing in the bill shall be construed to empower the commission to extract from a corporation any more information than is necessary to protect the investor. That being true, I cannot see where objection can be found to the employment of the word "only" in the clause which says that the commission shall be permitted to secure only such information as will be of benefit to the investing public.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language on page 35 was put in the bill by the committee in order to allay the fears of business men and corporations that the Government was to be authorized to manage their business. There is a great deal of difference between managing the business of a corporation and requiring information to be filed in a public place for the protection of those who are not investors in it at the time but who may become investors. The bill recognizes the difference between the obligation of the Government and the corporation to those who are already stockholders and those who are not stockholders but may be induced to become stockholders.

Any stockholder in any corporation has a right to get any information he wants from the corporation itself, but that opportunity is not available to the outsider. Therefore, in order that the outsider, who for one reason or another may be induced to invest his money in the stock of any corporation, may get the information, the commission is given the power to require a report and information on the registration of securities; and after they shall have been registered, the reports are to be made which will advise the public who may become stockholders later, of the true condition of the company in which they may invest.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think a careful examination by those persons who are interested in the passage of the bill will convince them that the amendment would not take away any very great power, but, on the other hand, would in effect be of great service to the commission itself in administering the law. I have carefully gone over the bill and prepared, as I have stated today, many amendments which I believe would improve it.

I believe the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] has great merit and will do no particular harm. I may invite the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that if we adopt the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina we will relieve the Commission in many instances of complying with the letter of sections 12 and 13. I think it is readily conceivable that in many instances the Commission might not deem it necessary to comply with all the requirements of sections 12 and 13, but when they go back and look at the law and look at the directions contained in the law they will find that they are compelled to do it. But if we adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, we leave to the Commission some discretion in connection with the matter.

Of course, it has an additional advantage which I think is of great importance and which I think is not contained in the bill at this time. It would give to the persons interested an opportunity to appeal to the courts because of an abuse of the discretion granted under the bill. So far as I can discover, there is nothing in the bill which gives the court jurisdiction of anything except to impose penalties for the violation of the provisions of the bill and the rules and regulations of the Commission. I may be in error about that, but for the moment I do not recall anything in the bill to that effect.

If we shall adopt the amendment and give to the distressed corporation, if it believes it is distressed, an opportunity to go before the court to show that it is an unreasonable request or an unreasonable demand made upon it by the Commission, we will give great confidence to the corporation which is now distressed by the terms of the bill.

But that is not the only advantage in adopting the amendment. If we should adopt the amendment, we would save the Commission tremendous work, in my judgment. We would save great labor to the Commission, because the adoption of the amendment would give the Commission an opportunity to waive in certain instances the requirements now demanded by the two sections. By doing that we would eliminate a lot of the work involved and at the same time give to the Commission, which is provided under the bill, sufficient authority to demand that which may be unnecessary in their judgment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, with the approval of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, I desire to submit a request for a limitation of debate to take effect tomorrow. It had been hoped that the measure might be disposed of today. Apparently that cannot be done. I therefore ask unanimous consent that tomorrow debate be limited so that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill, nor more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I am sorry; I must object. I have an amendment the discussion of which will take longer than the time suggested by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today it take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

Mr. REYNOLDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote in the same way I shall vote. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have a pair with the Senator from Iowa, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], who is necessarily detained, and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I regret to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] are detained in a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is detained by a death in his family.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]; REPEAL OF CERTAIN SECTIONS OF REVISED CODE OF LAWS RELATING TO INDIANS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2671) repealing certain sections of the Revised Code of Laws of the United States relating to the Indians, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That sections 2111, 2112, 2113, 2120, 2134, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, and 2153 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 25, secs. 171, 172, 173, 186, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, and 226) are hereby repealed."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PROGRESS REPORT OF TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress copy of a communication from the Tennessee Valley Authority reporting progress of the work of the Authority in carrying out the program for the development of the Tennessee Valley.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 10, 1934.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the hour of 2 p.m., debate be limited so that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill, or more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STEIWER. Reserving the right to object, I desire to dispose, if possible, of one very brief matter in order to know whether or not the proposal is acceptable to me.

At the first opportunity I wish to offer an amendment to exclude or exempt the railroads from the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the bill. I rather think the committee may be agreeable to that proposition; and if so, it will not take any considerable time to dispose of it. If they are going to contest the matter, I desire to argue it, because I think the amendment is of the very greatest importance, almost rising to the dignity of necessity. If the subject is to be debated and argued here, I shall very reluctantly be obliged to object to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, or else ask to be permitted to proceed tonight with respect to the question.

Can the chairman of the committee enlighten me as to the attitude of the committee on that subject?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the matter is one which we have not as yet considered. I should like to submit it to the committee and have it considered. In the meantime, I may say to the Senator that I am sure I shall not take over 10 minutes on the subject, and I do not know that any other Senator will.

Mr. STEIWER. An extended debate would require much more time than proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let me point out to the Senator from Oregon that under the agreement I have requested there will be 3 hours of debate before the limitation goes into effect.

Mr. STEIWER. That is true; but I had understood that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] wished to consume part of that time. I do not know how much of it he will use.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; the Senator from New Jersey has announced that he wishes to speak for some time. I do not anticipate that his address will require over an hour, however, although I have no authority to speak for him.

Mr. STEIWER. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me in order that I may offer the amendment at this time? I think that will dispose of the matter, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. STEIWER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. With that understanding I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. STEIWER's amendment was, on page 34, line 21, to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That carriers subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, shall not be subject to any provision of sections 12 and 13 of this act, except that the Commission may require that such carriers file with it duplicate copies of reports or other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon has been offered. I now ask that the question be put on the request for a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the proposal. It quite meets with my accord, except that I desire to have it understood that there will be a recess not later than 5:30 this evening.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is ready to have a recess taken. I should like to have this agreement entered into, because I am compelled to leave the Chamber.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, I have some amendments which I should like to offer and have lie on the table, reserving the right to call them up tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly; the Senator may do that. There is nothing in the proposed agreement that would prevent him from offering amendments.

Mr. HEBERT. Very well. I wanted to have that made clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PREVENTION OF CRIME

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I recall with a great deal of gratification that last summer my colleague from the State of New York, Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND, devoted his entire vacation to visiting a number of sections of our country as chairman of a subcommittee making a study of crime, its causes, and its prevention. I recall, likewise with a great deal of gratification, that from time to time I noted through the columns of the press of the country the remarkable work he was doing on behalf of the American people; and during the several months he was engaged in that splendid work he was successful in unearthing a number of facts which were, are now, and will prove to be in the future of inestimable value to the Department of Justice.

I recall at this hour, Mr. President, all the fine work the Senator from New York did, and I think the American people owe him a deep gratitude for his magnificent accomplishments.

At this hour, Mr. President, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that the press this morning stated that Mr. Insull had been returned to Chicago and lodged in jail, and soon the prosecutors of the Government will be called upon to prosecute his case in the Federal courts.

I likewise recall at this hour that there is at large one of the most desperate men this country has ever known. If one may believe the press, 35 lives or more have been stricken down as the result of the wanton, willful, murderous acts of John Dillinger. But, with abiding confidence in Mr. Edgar Hoover, the Director of the Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, and with abiding confidence in that great prosecutor, Joseph B. Keenan, Assistant Attorney General of the United States in charge of criminal prosecutions, I still believe in the law-enforcement authority of this great Government, and believe that ere long, before many suns shall have set, that dastardly criminal will have been apprehended and punished.

At this time I ask unanimous consent that there be published in the RECORD a most interesting article which I have but recently read entitled "The Price of Crime—Criminals Steal Four Times More Than Government Spends—Racketeers and Kidnapers Toll Mounts into Billions Yearly, Causing Tax Jumps."

In passing, I wish to say that in the body of this article I note that it is stated that for every single dollar an individual pays in taxes to his Government, he pays to the racketeers of this country 25 cents. One fourth he pays to the racketeers, the criminals of the land.

This article I have clipped from the June issue of the Nationalist, a monthly newspaper published in Washington, D.C., by L. M. Cadison.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRICE OF CRIME—CRIMINALS STEAL FOUR TIMES MORE THAN GOVERNMENT SPENDS—RACKETEERS' AND KIDNAPERS' TOLL MOUNTS INTO BILLIONS YEARLY, CAUSING TAX JUMPS

The greater problem confronting the people of the United States today is the specter of crime. Not only is there more lawlessness and more sinister type of malefactor in this country than in any other but the increase is appallingly rapid.

You cannot have such a condition of affairs without the cost mounting to figures that stagger the imagination. And the physical injury, the mental anguish, which results to the peaceful, industrious elements of the population is a tragedy not to be computed in the terms of dollars and cents.

The unthinking and the uninformed suppose that all of America's current difficulties can be explained as the fault of nobody in particular, and that it will disappear when the time has come—like a good crop season succeeding a bad one. It has even been said that racketeering has felt the pinch of the shortage of money, and is not flourishing as it used to. Nothing could be further from the truth than this last. The depression was, in a large degree, brought about by crime. Despite the vast boosting of Federal and State budgets to combat unemployment, the criminal still takes a toll four times larger than the sums expended by Government agencies.

If we could conquer crime, there would be an immediate reduction in taxes, direct and indirect, and the depression would be ended. But let us get down to cases, and review some simple statistics.

It has been estimated by experts that some 400,000 men and women in the United States make their living through crime, ranging from murder and kidnaping to the picking of pockets. Of these not less than 120,000 are active, vicious killers and strong-arm men. Their ranks are recruited daily, hourly. For there are actually 121,000 persons confined in Federal and State prisons and reformatories, a figure equaled by the number of the worst desperadoes continuously at large and more than tripled by the main body of the criminal class.

HUGE INCREASE IN CROOKS

The growth of crime has been constantly and progressively augmented since 1850. In that year, when the population of the country was about 23,000,000, there were only 7,000 criminals in jail. Today, with 123,000,000 inhabitants, we have the 121,000 convicts mentioned above. In other words, while the rate of increase in population since 1850 has been 5.4, the increase in crooks safely behind lock and key has been 17.3—more than three times as great.

CRIME

It may be comforting, for a brief moment, to feel that the authorities are jailing three times as many offenders as formerly. But optimism fades when we stop to realize that crimes committed—particularly undetected, unpunished crimes—have multiplied on a far more tremendous scale than that. Murder, for instance, has increased 350 percent in 35 years, or 10 percent per year since 1900.

Twelve thousand murders are now committed annually in this country of ours. An average of 1,000 persons are being murdered every month, 33 every day, 1 every 45 minutes. The overwhelming majority of victims are not being adequately avenged. The rest of the community is not being protected from a similar fate. In 1926, a typical year, when almost exactly 12,000 homicides occurred, more than 99 percent of the perpetrators were either never arrested, or did not receive the death penalty. In round figures, 11,925 fiends escaped execution. Only 75 went to the gallows or the electric chair.

That same year in London, where punishment under English law is certain and swift, just 17 murders occurred, or one to every half million of the population. The United States ratio had been 50 to every half million. It should also be borne in mind that most of the homicides listed as murders in London would not be so classified here, where the term manslaughter is stretched to allow many a cruel-hearted killer to evade full responsibility.

MORE LIVES SNUFFED OUT

During the century and a half since the founding of the Republic we have had six major wars. The number of men killed in action in these wars, excluding those who died from the result of wounds, reached the following totals:

Revolutionary War	4,044
War of 1812	1,950
Mexican War	1,192
Civil War	67,058
Spanish-American War	966
World War	37,541

We see, therefore, that with a 12,000 yearly murder rate, it takes less than 10 years for this hideous form of casualty to surpass our entire loss of men who faced their country's foes. In the 15 years that have elapsed since the end of the World War, 180,000, or more than five times as many as perished honorably on the European battlefields, have been murdered in the United States.

The dreadful social cancer of racketeering is a comparatively recent growth. But it has been a very rapid one. It is a gangsterized industry, led by cunning and ruthless master criminals, who buy the cooperation of venal politicians, corrupt police officials, and mercenary lawyers. The term "racket" has been defined as a "getting control of a particular industry or trade, usually, though not always, in a perfectly legal way, for a professedly worthy purpose, and then committing extortion by blackmail, violence, coercion, intimidation, murder, arson, kidnaping, or bombing."

Few businesses or trades have escaped the attention of the racketeers. In many parts of the country they have terrorized milk dealers, with resulting increase of price, which has deprived tens of thousands of babies of the milk they should have had. Racketeers are deep in the cleaning and dyeing, ice, coal, undertakers, florists, ice-cream, laundry, building, and other trades. In Chicago about 200 different kinds of rackets are now being worked. New ones are invented every week.

The atrocities perpetrated by this type of offender to compel obedience on the part of the refractory citizens are so well known that it is scarcely necessary to repeat them. The hand grenade, called a "pineapple", tossed in to wreck the premises is considered a mild reprisal by the gang leaders. Only too often machine guns come into play and there is wholesale murder. Kidnapings, so that the victims may be tortured at leisure, are practiced in cases when the issue is considered of sufficient importance.

THREE THOUSAND KIDNAPED YEARLY

Incidentally there are 3,000 kidnapings annually in the United States, 100,000 felonious assaults, 50,000 robberies, 40,000 burglaries; and 5,000 arsons. No other land on earth is cursed by anything approaching the magnitude of this catalog of evil.

As to the cost to the public in hard cash—the price of crime, so to speak—the figures have reached proportions so great as to be almost incredible. Yet those offered below are the outcome of careful estimates, and are but too accurate.

America's crime bill for the prevention and punishment of lawbreaking, the maintenance of jails and other penal institutions, the loss of property by fraud or destruction by arsons is $13,000,000,000, which is three times greater than the annual cost of conducting the Federal Government of the United States.

In addition the sums looted by racketeers and robbers or obtained through the illicit traffic in narcotics pile up to $17,000,000,000. Of this colossal amount $2,000,000,000 are credited to the dope trade, and that is five times what it cost to dig the Panama Canal.

The human brain reels when asked to contemplate such totals. It is possible to get some notion of their actual meaning only by studying some of the details and by making comparisons.

The first amount—the 13 billions—would naturally be greatly reduced were crime abolished or materially lessened. We now pay high taxes for the support of courts, prisons, police departments, and other crime-combating agencies. We also pay increased rates for fire, burglary, and theft insurance because of the abnormal risk due to the large number of incendiaries, burglars, and thieves there are in this country. Nor is it necessary for a person to be a taxpayer in order to help foot America's tremendous annual crime bill. The business man who is required to pay higher taxes because of crime conditions, or who is forced to pay tribute to the racketeer, naturally adds the amount to the retail price of the merchandise sold or the service rendered. The consumer is the person who, in the last analysis, shoulders the financial burden—and every man, woman, and child is a consumer.

TAXES TAKE A LEAP

According to the figures of the United States Treasury Department, the total Federal, State, and municipal taxes average $78.26 for every individual living in the Republic, of no matter what age or sex, man, woman, or child. The two thirds of this amount goes toward fighting crime with inadequate and even pitiable results has been clearly shown.

But the 17 billions collected by the racketeers must also be regarded as a tax. That literally is what it is, for the sum is not contributed by the people of their own free will. It is extorted and wrested from them. Each one of us pays the underworld an average of $140 a year—in other words, twice the legal tax of $78.26.

There is no better way to make the reader understand this fully than to show him how legal taxation affects him at every turn of his existence, with every breath he draws. The International News Service recently conducted a survey on the subject, which brought out the following facts:

The tax collectors for Federal, State, and municipal government took from the average citizen last year between 15 and 25 percent of the money he earned. When an American is born the lumber in his cradle is taxed as well as the coal in the furnace to keep him warm. The baby powder sprinkled over his body is taxed; so is his baby ring and later on his toys. His swaddling clothes fall within the processing (manufacturing) tax on cotton, and the cost of his cereal is boosted by the processing tax on wheat. The telephone message which brought the doctor and the telegram which announced the happy event to his relatives are gestures upon which a tax can be imposed. The gas with which his milk is heated and the electric light which is turned on when he cries at night are taxable.

As Mr. American grows up, his parents may move to the suburbs to give him more healthy surroundings. The deed to the new house costs more because of the tax levy. The mortgage contributes a tax of $5 for every thousand. There is a tax passed on when the automobile is bought. The tires are taxed. There is a mulcting for the auto license. The State and Federal gasoline tax costs from $35 to $50 a year.

If the family should remain in a city apartment, the real-estate tax of the municipal government is passed on in the form of higher rent charges by the landlord. The baby no sooner reaches an age to buy things for himself than he becomes a constant taxpayer. He learns to chew gum (Federal tax), uses baseball equipment (sporting-goods tax for Federal Government), eats candy (taxed, of course), practices on a taxable piano or violin, listens to a taxable radio, eats ice cream from a taxable refrigerator, and lights his first cigarette (6 cents revenue tax a package) with matches which he only imagines to be free since someone has paid a tax on them.

Arrived at manhood now, Mr. American pays a ticket tax for his football games, his movies, and his theaters. He buys his girl a ring or a fur coat—perhaps both (miscellaneous Federal tax)—looks at his taxable clock and hurries to the marriage-license bureau, where a little fee is extracted from him. He goes on his honeymoon and pays a head tax on the steamer. He chips in with both a Federal and State income tax. He pays 2 cents for every check he draws, 10-percent tax on his safety-deposit box in the bank, and averages about $50 a year for Government internal-revenue taxes on liquor.

DEATH IS ALSO TAXED

Even death brings no release, because he is charged a tax on the cemetery plot he buys, and after he is gone the inheritance tax commissioner gives his estate a final check-up and takes a good slice of it for Uncle Sam.

These details have been insisted upon to give an idea of how the annual $78.26, the average for every living soul within our borders, is obtained by the Government. Now, try to imagine the infinite ramifications by means of which the $140 criminally gouged by racketeers is added to the burden of the citizen's existence. From the cradle to the grave, we pay both the underworld and the Government, and we pay the underworld twice as much!

It is estimated that from $200,000,000 to $600,000,000 is paid out as tribute by business in New York City, practically every legitimate activity being victimized. A good part of the money thus robbed goes into the pockets of the political protectors of the racketeers. Chicago's contribution to this form of banditry is around $165,000,000 a year.

The net income of "Scarface" Al Capone is declared by Charles Francis Coe, author and criminologist, to have been $30,000,000 in good years. He collected immeasurably large sums, of course, but distributed the difference between his gross and net among the official grafters who "covered" him and among his own red-handed associates.

It is true that Capone was finally brought to justice and is now sojourning in Atlanta Federal Penitentiary. But his gang was not broken up. Other brigands are carrying forward his monstrous work in Chicago.

THE FRENCH GANGSTER

The French handle this sort of thing more efficiently than we do. A few weeks ago there was seized in the city of Marseilles a gangster leader named Venture Carbone, whose methods bore a striking resemblance to those of Chicago's Capone. The Marseilles thug ran the sport racket in the south of France, fixed prize fights and bicycle races, operated or collected from gambling dens, handled the far-flung Riveria dope-peddling ring, took a rake-off from a white-slave traffic to Egypt and South America, and juggled the elections of political officials to suit those who paid the highest for his services. Sounds just like home, doesn't it?

When the French police were ready to arrest Carbone, however, they also gathered in his two principal lieutenants, known as "the Baron" and "Spirito." They completely smashed the gang and have promised to finish the job of cleaning up Marseilles before the year is ended.

How is America to save herself from the damnable incubus of crime? That is the crux of the matter, the justification for spreading horrible truths before the public. It has become the duty of every honest medium of the printed word, of every sincere writer, to warn America of the utter destruction toward which she is heading and to call upon her to protect future generations of her children by scotching the criminal class now.

PERSHING WARNS NATION

Gen. John J. Pershing struck the right note in an article published in the American Magazine of June 1932 when he wrote:

"Make no mistake about this: Our Nation is confronted by a crisis as serious as the crisis of the war. * * * In the war, once we were aroused, we made an effort that astounded the world. Just so today the American citizen, once he is aroused to the dangers that menace his country, will, I devoutly hope and believe, gloriously redeem his indifference of the past."

The subject of General Pershing's article was Crime. Who should know better than he the reality of the comparison he drew with war? With 400,000 vile and conscienceless persons engaged in a civil war with the rest of the community, we have been so blind as to handle their offenses as though the latter were misdemeanors committed in times of peace. That has been the trouble.

Well, the ways of peace for peace—but the ways of war for war! We must organize against the criminals and stamp them out. We must show them no mercy until the lawbreaking has been reduced at least to the rare and furtive phenomenon that it is in England today.

In the month of April this year there was arrested in New York City a malefactor named Vincenzo Tisbo for whom the police had been looking for 12 years. This man had been the head of a private bank, which had failed in 1923 for $2,000,000. Its crash had ruined thousands of poor Italians who had intrusted their entire savings to it. The State contended that the failure was the result of a downright swindle. Nine larceny indictments were returned against members of the Tisbo firm. But the head of it had vanished as if the earth had swallowed him.

His recent arrest was not accomplished by the police. It was the result of the tireless energy and tenacity of another Italian, Joseph Tarantino, who had lost $5,000, and who had sworn to be avenged.

Tarantino visited many American cities in search of Tisbo, but always the clues he had been following up proved to be false. Finally, he went to Italy, located his man's brother and made friends with him. He learned that Vincenzo Tisbo was still in New York, that he had been a bootlegger and was now in the alcohol business.

On a tip he called a telephone number and ordered some alcohol. Tarantino recognized the voice that answered him as belonging to Tisbo. He got the latter over to his house, locked him in the cellar, and forced him to confess. Then he turned him over to the authorities—the score relentlessly evened at the end of 12 long years.

This was a case of private justice, a practice not to be universally recommended because it might be misused by muddleheaded persons and degenerate into lynch law. But it is cited as a unique illustration of resourcefulness and determination, wherein the methods were justified and were brilliantly carried out. It should serve as an example to the police. We must require of our police that they shall always pursue the enemies of society and effectively as Joseph Tarantino ran down his foe, the fugitive banker, Tisbo.

NEEDED REFORM

One of the most needed reforms today is a tightening of the whole structure of criminal law. Measures which have been endorsed by the American Bar Association have been presented to nearly every legislature in the United States. The program has been supported by leading lawyers and judges everywhere, but has been assailed so bitterly in the legislatures that few States have accepted it even in part, and none in its entirety. It would seem that sinister influences are at work through the lawmakers. The remedy, of course, is for the people—of whom you are one—to bring pressure to bear upon your legislators, and to turn out of office at the next election those who will not vote for criminal-law reform.

In short, America's salvation lies in the creation, crystallization, and operation of public sentiment against crime. Such sentiment must then be made effective through fighting organizations. The loyal citizen is weak as an individual in combating crime, but as a member of a militant organization he is strong.

All well-meaning persons are urged to enlist for the war. They can do this by joining one or more of the many societies which have come into existence for the purpose of redeeming our country from the grip of the murderer, the gangster, and the racketeer. The Councils of '76, of the United States Flag Association, are specifically recommended. They are doing a magnificent work under the inspiring slogan of "Crime Must Go."

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Florida, I am about to offer an amendment on page 36, which I think meets with the approval of the committee. The amendment relates to the exemption of localized securities from the over-the-counter provision of the bill. It has been the subject of very careful consideration and of conferences for 2 days, and it is my understanding that the Senator from Florida is satisfied to accept the amendment, on the basis on which it is now proposed, and I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 36, line 12, after the word "obligations", it is proposed to insert a comma and the following words: "or unregistered securities the market in which is predominantly intrastate and which have not previously been registered."

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that amendment, and it may be agreed to, so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to suggest one further amendment, concerning which I think there will be no controversy. I call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that there is no penalty provided in the bill for the misuse of confidential information by any of the personnel of the new commission, which is to be in first-hand touch and often confidential touch with these utterly important sources of information. The only penalty clause which relates to them in any way is found on page 48, subsection (b) of section 23, which is a penalty merely against the disclosure of such information.

I suggest an amendment on page 48, line 22, after the words "Commission", by adding the words "or to use for personal benefit." In other words, we would penalize not only the disclosure of this information, but also we would penalize the use for personal benefit. I am sure there can be no objection to that, and I am certain that it must have been an oversight that it was left out.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment and have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 34, line 17, after the words "United States", it is proposed to insert the words "or of any State."

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, this amendment has been submitted to the chairman of the committee. It makes the language identical with that of the bill on this subject which passed the House. It was presented to my attention by the National Association of Railroad Utility Commissioners. They were fearful that unless this provision as to transactions which are entirely intrastate were inserted, their power might in some way be limited. I took the matter up with the chairman of the committee, and understood that there was no objection to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I did see the amendment, and there may be some objection to it. There was discussion of a similar matter before the committee, as I recall. Indeed, I believe the very question was debated, and the committee did not favor it. I think it had better go over until tomorrow.

Mr. DUFFY. Very well.

RECESS

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, May 11, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and most merciful Father, how grateful we are that we have in Thee the source and the divine disclosure of all those virtues by which we live and by which the home and friendship survive and man is redeemed. We pray Thee that we may control any pride which lifts us above and out of any sympathy with others. O lead us to stand for the rights, the dignities, and the honors of our fellow men. Blessed Lord, subdue those lower faculties, appetites, and passions which make discord in our country. Deliver all men from the sternness, the restraints, and the rigor of winter, and bring them into the joy of spring and the promise of summer. We entreat Thee, our Father, that we may live and labor for liberty, for the prevalence of happiness, and for the diffusion of noble ideas. We praise Thee that some day we shall know how full and glorious is that truth—"The memory of the just is blessed." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for today, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY] is entitled to 30 minutes at this time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request.

The gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, asked me a few days ago to submit a request to the House to transfer District business, which will be in order on Monday next, that being District day, to Thursday, May 17, on account of the fact that the primaries in New Jersey are to be held on Tuesday. Since that time the gentlewoman has been called to her home on account of the very serious and critical illness of her husband. I have not heard from her, but I presume she still wants the request submitted.

I have spoken to the ranking member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the gentleman says he has no objection to it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I may say the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] spoke to me about this matter a few days ago. So far as I know, there is no objection on this side to the request.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentlewoman from New Jersey told me she had spoken to the gentleman from New York about it.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to add to the request, if there is no objection, that on Monday it shall be in order to call the Consent Calendar, and if that is concluded before adjournment, that we take up the Private Calendar for the consideration of bills unobjected to, beginning at the star.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. BACHARACH. I happen to know that the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] has canceled all engagements on account of the very serious illness of her husband. So it would seem that Mr. Norton is still critically ill.

Mr. BYRNS. What is the reaction of the gentleman to letting it go over beyond Thursday?

Mr. SNELL. I think it would be better to let it go over to Thursday and see what the situation is at that time.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a double-barreled request: That business in order next Monday, which is District day, be transferred to Thursday, May 17; and that it be in order on Monday to call the Consent Calendar, and if that is completed before the time of adjournment, it may be in order to call the Private Calendar for the consideration of bills unobjected to, beginning at the star.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course I am, with other colleagues, sympathetic with regard to the situation. While I am very strenuously opposing some bills that will come up on District day, nevertheless I would like to accord any courtesy that is possible to the chairman of the District Committee, and I shall not object. But I want it distinctly understood that the business that will come up Thursday, as District day transferred, will come up under the same rules applying to the consideration of District of Columbia business on the regular District of Columbia day, which is Monday; that must be understood and agreed.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the same rules will apply to the consideration of District business on Thursday as would apply to the consideration of District business on the regular District of Columbia day.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Monday to call the Consent Calendar, and if that is concluded before adjournment that it may be in order to call the Private Calendar for the consideration of bills unobjected to, beginning at the star.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is understood, of course, that there will be no suspensions.

Mr. BYRNS. That was not included in my request.

Mr. BLANTON. There will be no suspensions.

Mr. BYRNS. Not under my request.

Mr. BLANTON. Usually the Consent Calendar and suspensions are considered the same day, is why I seek the understanding, because suspensions would not be in order next Monday under the rules.

The SPEAKER. Suspensions are not in order on next Monday.

Mr. SNELL. The request of the gentleman from Tennessee did not cover suspensions.

Mr. BLANTON. We want to be sure that it does not, because when the Consent Calendar is called on its regular day, suspensions are in order. I want it understood that there will be no suspensions.

Mr. BYRNS. My request simply applied to the call of the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. With that understanding I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Suspensions will not be in order on Monday.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Catawba Indians and to include therein an article written by Jesse S. Cottrell on the condition of these Indians at the present time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not understand the gentleman's request.

Mr. RICHARDS. I asked unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the present living conditions of the Catawba Indians in the State of South Carolina, the only tribe we have there or ever have had. I am very much interested in improving their living conditions. I also asked permission to insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks an article written by Jesse S. Cottrell, who has made an extensive study of the conditions of these Indians. His article has a distinct historical value.

Mr. RICH. Who is Mr. Cottrell?

Mr. RICHARDS. He is a newspaperman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the insertion of the article written by Mr. Cottrell.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not object to that portion of the request pertaining to the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. RICH. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his own remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

NATIONAL LOTTERY

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, your permission to address you this morning is profoundly appreciated. I cannot help but believe that you are ready to give the subject of my remarks the consideration that it justly deserves. It is an interesting subject forming as it does part of the heritage of this great Republic.

The history of the lottery—my subject—cannot but arouse our interest. It played a potent part in our War of Independence, it helped build many of the public institutions of our country and furnished the funds to develop the Capitol of the Nation, where we are now met to legislate for our people.

That there is interest in the lottery as a means for revenue is evident from a letter received a few days ago from an economic institution in the West. It reads:

> We are very interested in your bill proposing a national plan for raising money by means of a lottery.
> Will you kindly send us copies of any material you have prepared in behalf of the bill, and advise us whether or not a transcript of the recent hearings for its proponents has been printed or is available?
> We consider this one of the most important matters now pending at Washington, and, therefore, would be grateful for your courtesy.

The bill referred to (H.R. 7316) authorizes the Veterans' Administration, with the approval of the President, to conduct a lottery to raise funds not exceeding $1,000,000,000 in any 1 year, which would be covered into the Treasury from time to time as a miscellaneous receipt.

The bill pending before the House provides that all rules made by the Veterans' Administrator shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, while the Postmaster General is authorized to place the post offices and postal machinery and facilities at the service of the Veterans' Administration for operating the lottery.

The measure as introduced leaves the details of operation to the Veterans' Administration assisted by the other specified Government agencies, conditioned upon the approval of the President. It would insure generous treatment of all veterans and their dependents.

Every Member of this House, whether in favor of or opposed to a lottery as a revenue-raising measure, could vote for this bill without any scruple, for it will be observed that it does nothing more or less than invest the President with power to say whether or not the Federal Government shall conduct a lottery for public benefit. We have given the President almost every other conceivable power—the power to inflate the currency, remonetize silver, raise or lower tariffs, pay the bonus, do almost everything except resort to the good, old-fashioned way of taking up a collection. And that is all that a lottery amounts to when conducted by Government for the common good.

G. M. B. Hawley, L.L.M., of Geneva, N.Y., an authority on the history of lotteries, writes:

> Historical records and documents show that the gambling spirit entered into but few lotteries. In general, the objective was a public or quasi-public benefit, such, for example, the building and support of churches.

Professor Hawley in a recent letter to me remarked:

> As a lecturer in the law school, 1896–99, and for more than 30 years engaged in writing a book on the Constitution of the United States, I have written and published 197 articles on historical and constitutional matters.
> I have to smile when the history of Federal lotteries is before me to see how righteous the Federal Government has become, attempting to and often sending citizens to the penitentiary and assessing large fines just because they used the mails to send letters and literature on lotteries, when the purpose was a laudable one to raise money for charity.

The lottery goes back to the early days of Rome, when it found favor at the banquets of the aristocracy, much as our "dark horse" does today at lodge, church, and other similar gatherings, for amusement purposes.

In the sixteenth century it was used by the merchants of Europe to promote sales, a practice that has continued in one form or another down to the present time.

Governments soon became interested in the lottery as an available and effective means of raising revenue. In 1569 England employed the lottery to finance its fortifications, and harbor and other improvements. The lottery financed the first adventure in America of the Virginia Co. in 1612. About the same time Italy had recourse to the lottery to provide for its public works. France also saw the efficacy of the lottery and financed its treasury by that means. Later other countries began to raise funds by lottery until today 30 or more countries are gathering needful revenues through government lottery. Since the introduction of my original bill, France has enacted a new lottery law for the benefit of her veterans. England has before Parliament a law for the establishment of a government lottery as an emergency source of operating income, although measures proposing to ban other lotteries are also being considered. And, of course, the United States is contributing heavily to foreign lotteries, although we are heavily debt laden and our Budget is unbalanced.

Perhaps you would like to know how other countries regard their lotteries. I will not tell you. You might not believe me, although you have been exceedingly kind and gracious to me ever since my coming to join you here. I rather will read you testimonials from the governments sanctioning and authorizing lotteries. It is not likely that you will characterize the citizenship or the government of these countries as either irresponsible or vicious for conducting a lottery for much the same purposes as my bill contemplates.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the income to the Government should not be over $1,000,000 a year?

Mr. KENNEY. One billion dollars a year.

Mr. BOYLAN. That is better. I thought the gentleman said $1,000,000. Why limit it to $1,000,000,000 a year?

Mr. KENNEY. I will be satisfied with a billion.

It is certain that a lottery operated by government relieves the burden of taxation. And it has been unbearable taxation that has ruined nations. Does it not, then, seem ethical, as well as expedient, for the government to establish sources of income that are in conformity with the wishes of the masses? I have heard Members on both sides of the House so often at the top of their voices cry out when appropriations came up for consideration, "Where are we going to get the money to pay the bills?" From sheer necessity we are committed to rehabilitation expenses staggering in their proportions, and our Government must be supplied with larger and steadily larger financial support. The ability of the taxpayer to pay is seriously questioned. It became evident to me when you refused to approve a further rise in the income taxes a few days ago, taxes which are paid by only one fiftieth of our adult population. But the bills must be met. So I believe the wishes of the majority will be served if we raise the needed moneys to balance our Budget by a Federally operated lottery. It is obviously true that the Federal laws against the operation of lotteries are not effective, and it is patent that the anti-lottery laws which are not gentle are deliberately and widely violated. Of that I shall speak presently.

May I read you what other governments have to say about this matter? From the German Government I have received the following advices:

> For many years, legalized lotteries have been conducted in various German States under the auspices of the respective governments.
> As to the effect of these lotteries upon the citizenry, I can unhesitatingly state that they have been adding to the contentment of a large part of the population. Thus, their reaction upon the state of mind of the individual citizen has been a favorable one.

From Russia comes this testimonial through official channels:

> The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics does not have lotteries in the normal sense. Only such organizations as the Red Cross, societies for aid to children, better-road societies, etc., have recourse to lotteries. Their collected funds are used for social purposes. Bonds of the national Government bear a provision for lotteries. About one half of some of the issues consist of interest-bearing bonds, the other half carrying the lottery provisions. The lotteries are arranged to give great numbers of comparatively small prizes rather than a few large prizes. Thus, the gambling features of these bonds is insignificant. Participation in lotteries of the above type has naturally no bad effect upon the individual citizen whose participation contributes to some important social purpose.

The Turkish Government has this to say:

> I may say that the Turkish lottery has had no bad effects whatever upon the general welfare of Turkish people, and has in no way increased crimes or misdemeanors.

On the contrary, the lottery, which is conducted for the promotion of aviation, the purchase of planes and the training of pilots, has been beneficial in arousing public interest in the cause which it supports.

This is from the Argentine Republic:

The national lottery in Argentina was created by law no. 3313 in October 1895. It has been in progress since that time except for a short interruption. The liquid benefits of this lottery are distributed as follows:

Sixty percent of it is used for the construction and maintenance of hospitals and public asylums in the Federal capital, Buenos Aires, and 40 percent for the same purpose in the various Provinces of Argentina.

The operation of this lottery has been very successful and satisfactory without affecting the morals, contentment, and happiness of the individual citizen.

Here is testimony from Cuba:

I can say to you that the national lottery of Cuba was instituted by act of Congress in the year 1909, for the main purpose of increasing revenue for charity. Since then it has functioned regularly, although some changes have been made in its administration, which had been subject to severe criticism, thereby placing it on a more sound and economic base.

Among the reasons given by those in favor of the adoption of the lottery law at the time it was being discussed in Congress was that it was almost impossible to eliminate illegal lotteries, which were mostly supported by the poorer class of Cuban people and which did not guarantee any return to them. It was, therefore, considered better to establish an official lottery from which the people generally would derive benefits.

Here is an authoritative message from the Kingdom of Italy:

I want to confirm to you that we have had a national lottery in operation since the organization of the Kingdom. It is conducted with weekly extractions in the 12 most important cities.

The system in question has had no bad results on the general welfare of the people, but has offered, on the contrary, a healthy method of contentment and happiness, with the possibility of drawing a fortune, especially on the part of the people of modest means. The system is under the strictest control of the Government, and since its operation its functioning has been most regular and efficient.

Out of the operation of its lottery, the Italian Treasury has realized a net average income of about 280,000,000 lire during the past few years.

I am informed that Italy maintains her navy out of funds from the lottery.

Direct from the Spanish Government comes its plan of lottery:

The state lottery of the Spanish Republic represents, in the financial economy of the modern world, a truly exceptional case; for it is, in the national budget, an important, steady and almost certain source of income. The estimated receipts from this enterprise in the budget for 1932–33 amount to 420,000,000 pesetas out of a total of receipts estimated at four and one half billions. From this source, the state collected more than 400,000,000 pesetas in 1929 and 1930, as against three hundred millions in 1925.

It must be recognized that the Spanish State Lottery, due to its remarkable organization, has become a real institution in the life of the country.

The organization of the lottery warrants a description first, on account of its size, which is without parallel in any other country; second, because it has contributed, in a large measure and in spite of all obstacles, to the lasting success of the lottery.

In its present form, which superseded the old "lotto" with 90 numbers established in 1763 and definitely suppressed in 1862, the Spanish lottery goes back to 1811; but the legislation connected with it dates almost entirely from the end of the nineteenth century, as well as the general regulations, still in force today, the main provisions of which are given below.

The national lottery is considered as a normal resource of the State budget; as a counterpart, the State guarantees the payment of the prizes.

All other forms of lottery are forbidden, except with special permission.

The tickets of the national lottery are considered as State bonds payable to bearer.

For each drawing, as many numbers must be drawn as stated on the prospectus.

Prizes are represented by a certain percentage of the product of the sale of tickets (70 percent at the present time). This percentage may be changed by a new law.

The dates of the drawings, their annual number, the numbering, the number and the price of the tickets are determined by the general director of the lottery. This official has also the following charges:

(a) To furnish with tickets the sale agencies, taking carefully into account the importance of the demand in each area, in order to avoid any miscalculation and disappointment.

(b) To appoint the various officials in charge of the services of the lottery.

(c) To propose to the Minister of Finance the creation, for the whole country, of first-class "lottery administrations", and to create or suppress, according to needs, a second-class administration.

(d) To witness personally, or to delegate a representative at all drawings.

The sale of tickets and the payment of prizes are made through the "adminstrations" (official agencies) distributed over the whole territory, which may employ, under their responsibility, street vendors, accepted by the Minister of Finance.

Such are the essential principles on which the national lottery is based. It can be seen that they present for the purchasers of tickets serious guarantees, further reinforced by the following rules concerning the drawings.

These are made publicly and by means of two series of balls representing one, the numbers on the tickets (one ball for each number), and the other, the prizes and their amount (one ball for each prize).

On the eve of the drawings the balls have been carefully verified and attached together by groups of hundreds and thousands, which are themselves checked; they are then enclosed into boxes bearing 3 locks, the keys of which are given to 3 high officials of the lottery, these various operations are not made public. Such is not the procedure, however, for the operations which follow, for, in the latter case, the "passive" collaboration of the public is required.

The day of the drawings, the boxes are opened, the strings which hold together the balls representing the ticket numbers are cut, and, under the supervision of the "Junta", committee composed of a president (the general director of the lottery or his representative) and three members, the balls are thrown into a large metallic container where, at a signal of the president, the balls are mixed together thoroughly with the aid of a wooden shovel. After which, to prevent tampering, the balls bearing the ticket numbers are mechanically poured into a drum which is then locked.

The same process is then followed for the balls representing the prizes, which are placed into a second drum, also locked.

After which the two drums are set in motion (the president being careful that they are revolving at the same time) and, by an opening made for this purpose, a ball is drawn from each one, beginning with the ball representing the prizes. In this manner the amount of the prize won by the ball drawn from the second drum is known. Immediately upon being drawn, the numbers are read aloud (three times for the first prizes) by children of the foundlings' home, who then put the balls on a table placed there for that purpose, so that each number shall correspond to the prize allotted to it, a list is established as the drawings progress, then this list is checked against the prospectus of issue.

Inasmuch as all these operations are made with utmost precautions and, except for the last one, under the very eyes of the public, it can be said that they offer all the necessary guaranties of security.

It is in such conditions that the drawings of periodical lotteries, both regular and special, are made. The former occur about three times a month and include, generally, a number of series, of tickets and of prizes very varied. For instance, the first lottery of the month may be of six series of 45,000 tickets (sold at 30 pesetas, or by tenths, 3 pesetas) with 14,000 prizes, the highest being 100,000 pesetas.

The second lottery of the month will have only four series of 34,000 tickets, sold for 40 pesetas (or by tenths) and 6,000 lots, the highest one being 120,000 pesetas.

Finally, the third one will have only three series of 40,000 tickets, sold for 50 pesetas (which also may be divided), with 8,000 prizes, one of which amounts to 150,000 pesetas.

The following are considered as special lotteries: The first drawing in January, the second drawing in May, and especially Christmas drawing. For the first of those the price of the ticket is 150 pesetas, and the first prize 500,000 pesetas; for the second one, the figures are, respectively, 500 and 3,000,000 pesetas; finally, for the third one, they reach 2,000 and 15,000,000 pesetas, not including a certain number of additional premiums.

Moreover, at the end of each regular lottery, the following drawings are made:

First. Five lots of 125 pesetas, for the benefit of young girls admitted into charity homes.

Second. One lot of 625 pesetas, for the benefit of another charity, designated each time.

As for the administrative organization of the lottery, we have seen that it included, in addition to the general director, who is represented by delegates in the capitals of the Provinces, first- and second-class "administrations." Each Province, except that of Madrid, has in addition a central administration.

The first category is made up of administrations the receipts of which are above 50,000 pesetas per annum.

All administrations must be bonded. The bond for administrations of second class is of 2,500 pesetas in cash. But the bond of the first class is fixed by the general director, according to the respective importance of the agencies, and may be made up of cash, State bonds, or real-estate properties.

The remuneration of the "administrations" is represented by a percentage on the sales varying from 2 to 5 percent, according to the importance of the receipts, for regular drawings, and uniformly fixed at 1 percent for the special drawings.

All the administrations are frequently controlled by agents of the treasury, who, in case of error or irregularity, have the power to dismiss administrators and to have them replaced.

Such is the organization which regulates the operation of the Spanish lottery. The brief résumé which has been given makes clear its importance and complexity. It may also be seen that it constitutes a rather heavy charge for the state. However, the ten millions or so of pesetas that it costs the state each year are, after all, very little in comparison with the high returns which the lottery provides and which would be very difficult to replace by any other resource.

The Spanish lottery is for this reason considered as a model.

Mr. Speaker, I have here testimonials from other governments, all speaking in highest terms of the lottery when conducted under governmental auspices.

With our Budget unbalanced, our taxpayers in distress, every dollar is sorely needed, if we are to give our war-impaired citizens the full measure of their country's help, if we are to provide work for our people, if we are to continue our program of recovery. The only revenues that flow into the Treasury are those created by taxation of one type or another. Nobody ever gives money to the Government as a gift. But hosts of citizens, many thousands of persons monthly would cheerfully and gladly contribute small sums of gift money to their Government if they were permitted to do so by means of a national lottery conducted by the Government. The amount would become, I believe, $1,000,000,000 yearly.

Horace J. Donnelly, Esq., solicitor of the Post Office Department, August 23, 1932, in a release from the office of the Postmaster General, made the statement that during the preceding 2 years no less than a billion dollars were kept from going out of the country in support of foreign lotteries. The years mentioned by Mr. Donnelly were the leanest of recent times. And he stated further that operators of lotteries, foreign and domestic, many of them dishonest, did not confine their activities to the large cities but preyed upon those located in every section of the country.

Assistant District Attorney James J. Wilson, of New York City, appeared upon the hearing on the bill before the Ways and Means Committee, stating that he had charge of the prosecution of lotteries in New York County, and that there were certainly 100 lotteries going on in the New York area; that he must have prosecuted 150 cases involving the Italian lottery for tickets sold in that county alone; and he said that according to the figures of Irish authorities, one lottery, the Irish Sweepstakes, took out of New York alone $16,500,000.

It is estimated that $200,000,000 leaves the country every year in foreign lotteries, and, according to our own Post Office Department, $500,000,000 more is willing to be added annually.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. EVANS. Several of the States—in fact, most of them—have statutes making it an offense with a severe penalty to sell lottery tickets in those States. In California it is in the constitution. I am wondering what would be our position in a State like California that really inhibits such traffic as this. Where would we be? California has not reached the advanced state of favoring gambling in any form.

Mr. KENNEY. I submit to the gentleman that the inhibitions in the constitutions and in the statutes of the States have, in my opinion, been directed against private lotteries. I concede to the gentleman that a lottery in private hands may not be trusted; but, regardless of any State constitution or the law of any State, a lottery authorized by the Federal Government would not in any way be affected by them.

Mr. EVANS. But in the State of California any kind of lottery, either public or private, may not be conducted and cannot be authorized under our constitution. I am wondering just how this law would apply in a State of that kind.

Mr. KENNEY. California, in my opinion, could well have the benefit of this lottery for the reason I believe your own courts would hold that there could be no State interference whatsoever with the right of the Federal Government to raise revenue under the Constitution of the United States, and that the States could not prevent the purchase and possession of Federal lottery tickets.

The grounds of my belief are:

First. The Federal lottery is a Federal instrumentality for raising revenue.

Second. The ticket in hands of the purchaser represents a right to participate in a governmental transaction which is not completed until the drawing.

Third. A State law prohibiting possession of a ticket would discourage the sale of the tickets, thereby hindering and placing a burden upon a means employed to carry into execution the powers of the Government. Under the rule established in McCullock v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 1819) the States may not interfere with or burden the agencies and instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman appreciates, I am sure, that it would be embarrasing at least for a Member from California, which State has an inhibition in its constitution against this kind of thing, to support a bill of this kind. In other words, he would be seeking to overcome a statute or a constitutional provision of his State by act of Congress.

Mr. KENNEY. Does the gentleman mean to convey the meaning that the California constitution in so many words prohibits a State or Federal Government lottery?

Mr. EVANS. It prohibits the authorization of any sort of a lottery by act of the legislature or otherwise. There is a statute in California that makes a violation of that provision an offense. I am quite sure that nearly every municipality in California has a law against lotteries.

Mr. KENNEY. Judging from the letters I have received from California the municipalities of the gentleman's State might be quick to repeal the antilottery laws, and so might his State, so that the citizens of California might participate in a national lottery; but even though such laws were not changed, I am still of the opinion that if the act under discussion were construed by the courts of California, its State laws would be found not to apply to a lottery conducted by the Federal Government. After all, this is a revenue-raising measure. I do not think any State in passing antilottery laws ever had in view interference with Federal acts designed to raise revenue for the conduct of the business of the United States Government under its Constitution.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. Is not this lottery simply a sly attempt to shift the burden of taxation to the persons least able to bear that burden?

Mr. KENNEY. I do not agree with the gentleman. I have heard gentlemen on the floor of this House state, and probably the gentleman was one of them, when measures for raising revenue for the Government came up, that it was the poor man who had to bear the burden. I reiterate that all our burdens are borne, in the last analysis, by the so-called "poor man"; and when he is out of employment and the C.W.A. has to take care of him, our expenses are not met and our Budget is not balanced.

I give to the poor man credit for having greater intellect than to take upon himself the burden of carrying on the whole expense of a Federal law; I have high regard for his intelligence and more so than ever at the present time, and his contribution, if I am any judge, would be tempered by his means.

Mr. THOM. Does not the gentleman think that we might meet this financial situation occasionally by voting against expenditures?

Mr. KENNEY. I do not see how we can well vote against many of the expenditures that have come up in this House. We certainly have to give employment, so far as we can, to our people. We have to meet what I regard as necessary appropriations. We have cut the current Budget 25 percent; and if the gentleman has any way he can pare it more than that, it is his duty to offer it on the floor an dimmediately.

Mr. BOYLAN. Is there not also the possibility that the poor man by participating in this lottery may become a rich man?

Mr. KENNEY. Rather a man with a competence. Absolutely. It holds out to the forgotten man practically the only hope he has of becoming comfortable in the near future, and let me also remind you of the fact that the poor men are already contributing to the revenues of other nations. May I exhibit to the House the finest collection of foreign lottery tickets to be found anywhere. I hold up to your view these lottery tickets emanating from foreign countries and sold here. It is "a worthy exhibit", as it is styled, the tickets being mounted on parchment 8 feet long and 2 feet wide. Printed at the top are significant lines:

We should have a national lottery.

There is a billion dollars going into foreign channels each year.

It could be put into our own coffers.

And most of these are frauds.

Your bill should receive solid support from Congress.

I wish you success in this worth-while legislation.

It was sent to me by John Weigand, Jr., Glendale, Long Island. Included in the vast swarm of foreign tickets are government and private lotteries. Our people who have been patronizing them extensively would much prefer, and they are ready and willing, to buy American and help defray the cost of our own Government, including expenditures authorized for veterans and their dependents and other worthy purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the primary purpose of the gentleman's bill to produce revenue for the Government or to make a few poor people rich?

Mr. KENNEY. The primary purpose is to produce revenue for the Government. The funds raised by lottery would constitute a gift from the people to their Government—shall amounts of giftmoney from our millions of people to our Government—and we are not unmindful that ours is a government of, by, and for the people.

Mr. BLANTON. I have another question, if the gentleman will permit. If Congressmen are indifferent about the means of raising revenue, why do we not build here an American Monte Carlo, with every kind of gambling device imaginable in it? This would certainly bring in revenue.

Mr. KENNEY. I will say to the gentleman that if we had Monte Carlos established here by foreign countries, I would much prefer an American Monte Carlo. But that is not the question before us. However, I must remind the gentleman and the other gentlemen and ladies of the House that one of the greatest charitable undertakings that this country has ever known took place only a little while ago, yielding an enormous amount of money for crippled children—a worthy cause. That undertaking had its lottery features. The lottery for worthy purposes has never failed. You, with all the good people of the Nation, contributed, as you and all throughout the Nation have been contributing yearly to similar causes. The Government needs our aid more than it ever did in peace-time annals. Shall we not rally to its need? And I now ask the gentleman please to let me proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman permit just one other question?

Mr. KENNEY. If the gentleman wishes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that the Methodists, the Baptists, the Presbyterians, the members of the Christian Church, and every other Christian denomination in the State of New Jersey, are against lotteries and against national lotteries?

Mr. KENNEY. For my answer, I shall read to the gentleman from Texas the statement of one of the leading clergymen of my State of New Jersey, Rev. Dr. Allan MacNeill, pastor of the Community Church of Ridgefield Park, N.J. Here is what my good friend Dr. MacNeill says:

> I am in favor of the bill on general principles. I can see no reason why there should be any objection to it on the part of anyone. George Washington and Benjamin Franklin played lotteries in their day, and a number of churches in New England were built by lotteries.
> There is too much money going abroad on these lotteries which are sanctioned in other countries. It would be better to have the money in the United States go to our disabled service men than being sent abroad year after year. I sincerely hope that the bill passes.

Many of the States are now considering validating the lottery. New York, Maryland, and Massachusetts are among them. In this country a national lottery is the logical thing. The Federal Government alone should operate it. But the States would be benefited indirectly, for then certain taxes now imposed by the National Government could be turned back to the States. Obviously the Federal Government should act, and act now.

How many of you realize the part that the lottery played in the Revolutionary War? Do you know, with the States not yet organized, the Continental Congress had no means at hand to defray the expenses of the war or the new Government? Has it occurred to you that, faced with failure and defeat, the Congress turned to the lottery as a means of raising money to carry on? On November 1, 1776, it passed a resolution, and it was in part as follows:

> Resolved, That a sum be raised by way of a lottery for defraying the expenses of the next campaign, the lottery to be drawn in the city of Philadelphia, Pa.

Under it the Government was to retain the whole $10,000,000, a gigantic sum in those days, and the prizes issued were to be in Government securities.

It is not known how many lotteries were conducted to carry on the Revolutionary War; but, in view of the sum involved in the first one, the total amount realized for the war was probably tremendous.

When the First Congress of the United States met, it held its session in the city of New York. The war was over, and our independence had been won. But the Congress had not yet a meeting place nor the means to provide one. It was in 1789, and the city of New York offered its city hall for the new Nation's legislative body, which was gratefully accepted. But the city was obliged to alter and improve the building to furnish suitable quarters, which it did. In 1790 the city had not yet paid for the alterations in full, and there was still a deficit of about $65,000. The city could not shoulder the expense it had incurred. It was a post-war period of hard times and high taxes—words weighted with significance to us of today. So the city laid its problem before the State legislature. Quickly a law was passed permitting the city to conduct a lottery, and the city paid its bill.

Lest you should not believe, let me read to you from the preamble of the law:

> * * * The mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York by their petition have represented to the legislature that from a desire to accommodate the Congress of the United States in the most convenient and satisfactory manner they have not only expended in repairing and improving the city hall such money as has been heretofore raised for this purpose but are also indebted in the further sum of 13,000 pounds on this account, a sum far beyond their power to discharge without legislative aid, and have prayed that a law might be passed to authorize the raising the said money by one or more lotteries.

Again Congress found the lottery a solution of its problem when the city of Washington and the Capitol were being established. In 1795 Congress authorized the old city of Washington, then under construction, to operate lotteries for public purposes. Washington was President. John Adams was Secretary of State. At the dedication November 22, 1800, John Adams, then President, in the course of his address said:

> May this territory be the residence of virtue and happiness. In this city may that piety and virtue, that wisdom and magnanimity, that constancy and self-government which adorned the great character whose name it bears, be forever held in veneration. Here, and throughout our country, may simple manners, pure morals, and true religion flourish forever.

Have any of you anywhere read of the self-respecting, sturdy American patriots of that time feeling any shame because their country's lawmaking body raised its revenue by citizens' contributions made in the form of lottery participation? I have not, nor have I found that the guiding sense of social propriety, which may God preserve to us, was damaged by any of the lottery participation that created funds for the building of churches and public edifices throughout our country. Yet it may be that some zealous gaolers of the public will cry out against the spectacle and call it "gambling." We have had always perhaps, doubtless always shall have, sincere, conscientious objectors who counsel extremely because they have not counseled to think straightly.

Nevertheless, we cannot deny, nor lose sight of the fact, that the lottery has never failed the Government. Our Government saw the need for banning the private lottery and early in our history the several States passed laws reserving the right to conduct the lottery within their borders to themselves or under their immediate supervision. When it passed out of the reach of the Government, it fell into hands that could not be trusted and it is because of the private lotteries that it may be frowned upon.

Untold good has resulted, too, when the lottery has been conducted by churches and colleges and public institutions.

I might mention the following advertisement appearing in the New York Gazetteer:

February 8, 1774. Scheme of a lottery (to be drawn under the inspection of a number of reputable citizens).

For raising the sum of 600 pounds toward purchasing a piece of ground and erecting a church thereon, for the congregation of the Church of England.

It is humbly hoped the benevolent and religious of all denominations will heartily concur in promoting this work which will ultimately redound to the glory of God.

Again in the same paper appeared the following month this advertisement:

March 17, 1774. Scheme of a lottery for raising the sum of 600 pounds, to be appropriated toward building a church at Brookland Ferry, opposite the city of New York, under the patronage of the rector and vestry of Trinity Church, in the said city; there being no place in King's County, for the public worship of Almighty God, where the English liturgy is used.

Little need be said in recommendation of the above scheme, as the careful observer will at once see the propriety of becoming an adventurer; there being no more than two blanks to a prize.

Other churches profited by the lottery as did our colleges. Harvard College authorized a lottery for its benefit; Yale also benefited by it; Old South Middle College, which housed the patriot Nathan Hale, was built in part, at least, by lottery. Among the other institutions financed by lotteries are William and Mary, Dartmouth, New Jersey (now Princeton), and Union. And these are not all.

The lottery, honestly conducted for public benefit, has always been an honorable means of raising revenue. George Washington approved of it, and financed his army by means of it, and it is truly part of our heritage. The names of Jefferson, Hancock, Adams, and other American patriots are interwoven with lotteries. It is an old-fashioned theme. It would come to us now like an old-fashioned song. It would thrill the Nation and you and me. [Applause.]

WORLD'S FAIR, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3235) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 40 ayes and 4 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. JACOBSEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 3235. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes. As Chairman of the Committee on the Library, I felt it was my duty to introduce this bill, which is identical with the Senate bill now under consideration.

I did it for two reasons: First, the President of the United States wrote a letter to this body asking that it be considered and that it make the appropriation. I want to read that letter. It is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Commission to the end that legislation may be enacted extending the availability of funds previously appropriated for Government participation in A Century of Progress, the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, in 1933, to June 30, 1935, and also authorizing the appropriation of funds in the amount of $405,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the reopening of A Century of Progress, the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, in 1934.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 27, 1934.

I happened to know that the Director of the Budget had approved of this appropriation.

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. BOLTON. Has any Budget estimate been submitted to Congress?

Mr. KELLER. I am not sure.

Mr. BOLTON. Usually a Budget estimate is submitted when there is a request.

Mr. KELLER. I do not know. The Commissioners for the fair at Chicago consist of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce. Their departments made their estimates and presented them to the Director of the Budget, and the Director of the Budget reported back approving of the estimate of $405,000.

Now, let us get this perfectly clear. The President did not write the letter until the Director had approved of the estimate made by the Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. After sending his own personal letter, it would have been perfectly foolish for the President to have done so, had his Bureau of the Budget sent us any recommendation, because the Budget Director is nothing but the President's agent. The Budget message sent here is nothing more than a statement of what the President wants. The Budget merely acts for the President on finances when the President asks for its investigation and recommendation.

Mr. BOLTON. Has the Director of the Budget sent to Congress his approval of $405,000?

Mr. KELLER. I think it has been transmitted, but whether it has been formally transmitted or not, let us get at the facts in the case, because that is what I want—a plain statement of fact. There has been so much misunderstanding in relation to the bill and the history of it that it is time for somebody to state plainly what the facts are during this debate, and I challenge any man to deny any statement that I may make.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman tell us how much profit was made last year by the Chicago World's Fair?

Mr. KELLER. I will tell the gentleman, but let me tell it in my own way. Here is what happened——

Mr. BLANTON. There were 15,500,000 people attending the exposition and that put lots of money in Chicago.

Mr. KELLER. Chicago came down here and said, "We will not ask for a penny from the Government; we will not ask the Government to contribute a single cent to the World's Fair at Chicago"; and they did not ask a solitary cent, and they have never received a cent. If anybody denies that when I am through making the statement, then I shall show him that he is wrong. What did they do? They, the Chicago fellows, said, "We should like for our own American Government to have its own exhibit there just the same as the American Government has invited the other governments of the world to come and have their exhibits, and in no way different."

Do I make that plain? The United States accepted that plan and appropriated for its own exhibit in an exposition of the American Government, not for the sake of Chicago, not for the sake of anything except the American people. This is the exhibit of the American people, and they appropriated $1,000,000 for that 2 years ago. That was used by the Commission made up of the three gentlemen whose names I have called, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion.

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is a fact that the Government exhibit at the World's Fair in Chicago was cared for and paid for on the same basis as the United States Government exhibit to the Colonial Exhibition in Paris last year was paid for and cared for.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman will permit, I am about to come to that. I am trying to make that point. It is just as the gentleman has said. The American people are carrying on their own exhibit at Chicago, just the same as they have paid for our own exhibits at Paris and London and other exhibits, and just exactly as England and Germany and France and all other countries are doing for their exhibits at Chicago, just the same as the United States is, and in no way different. They are not contributing a penny to the World's Fair; they are only bearing the expense of their own exhibits and nothing else, and that is all that the United States Government is doing.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Are the other governments of the world continuing their appropriations to carry on for this year?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; a large number of the governments that participated in the exhibition last year are continuing their exhibits this year.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that every large foreign government that exhibited last year there in Chicago, while they were exhibiting and receiving American money, was in default of payment to this Government of a debt of honor honestly due the United States?

Mr. KELLER. I do not see that international affairs over what they owe us as a nation has anything at all to do with this bill. Of course, the exhibitors of foreign countries did not receive any money. They constantly paid out money—the natural expense of carrying on their exhibit, the same as the American Government was doing.

Mr. BLANTON. Were they not defaulters at that time?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Which ones were not?

Mr. BRITTEN. Norway and Sweden and Finland and Japan and various other nations. They never did owe us anything.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the big ones, who took in most on their exhibits.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to yield for anything except questions. I shall be glad to answer questions, but I am not going to have this subject mixed up any further while I am talking. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Let me ask just one more question.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman will ask a question and not make a speech, all right.

Mr. BLANTON. At the time that the Republic of France was exhibiting the Streets of Paris last year, was it not in default?

Mr. KELLER. Who?

Mr. BLANTON. France.

Mr. KELLER. The Government of France owed money to the Government of the United States, but not the exhibition in Chicago. We are talking about the exhibition in Chicago, and not about the international debt situation. We are trying to discuss here in a few minutes the facts in relation to this bill, and it is nonsense to rise and undertake to interject into it things that have nothing in the world to do with it. I am not going to permit anything further like that.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to ask one more question, and that is whether we want little American school children to go and see exhibits of a country that is in default of its own honest debts to this country, and will not try to pay a cent?

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman seems to think that the French Government is running "The Streets of Paris", purely a private concession, of course.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman tell the House whether or not the foreign governments have agreed to maintain their exhibits and will pay for their maintenance for 1 more year?

Mr. KELLER. Yes. A large majority have already done so, and I understand that three more that did not exhibit last year will come in this year.

Mr. McFARLANE. Who are they?

Mr. KELLER. I will give the gentleman the names if he desires.

Mr. TRUAX. How many nations exhibited at the fair last year?

Mr. KELLER. Statisticians can give that; but most of the civilized nations, just as we have done in their countries at their exhibitions in the past.

Mr. TRUAX. I saw only 8 or 10.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Does the gentleman know that a lot of the States that last year were too small and picayunish to make exhibits are doing so this year.

Mr. KELLER. Yes; and I thank the gentleman for that suggestion. The gentleman calls attention to the fact that a number of our States that did not consider themselves in position to exhibit last year are going to do so this year, because conditions are better in the country.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. And because they have seen their mistake in not doing it.

Mr. KELLER. Yes; and I thank the gentleman for the observation.

Mr. TRUAX. What States are they?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. My own State for one.

Mr. McDUFFIE. How much profit was made on the fair last year by the fair association?

Mr. KELLER. No profit at all was made. I think something over $4,000,000 was netted, but that was not profit. That was simply paying back the bonds. In other words, the people of Chicago put up the money to build all these great buildings and get the exhibits there. They have paid back to themselves something more than $4,000,000 out of the nearly $9,000,000 which they expended.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Is it not a fact they have paid back about half of what they paid in?

Mr. KELLER. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. No, no; not now.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is the gentleman in a position to say to this House how much the World's Fair in Chicago cost this Government last year?

Mr. KELLER. It cost the Government last year about eight-hundred-and-some-odd thousand dollars.

Mr. McCLINTIC. And how much was appropriated?

Mr. KELLER. There was a total appropriation of $1,000,000. At the end of the fair there was about $172,000 still remaining.

Mr. BLANTON. No; $77,000.

Mr. KELLER. That is what is now remaining at this time, not what was left over at the end of the fair last fall.

Mr. McCLINTIC. How much are they asking for now?

Mr. KELLER. Four hundred and five thousand dollars.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. TABER. According to the tables which I put in the RECORD last night, the fair cost last year $922,625.62.

Mr. KELLER. That is carrying it up to a recent date. The gentleman from Oklahoma asked me how much it had cost at the close of the fair.

Mr. TABER. All I have is this report.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Surely.

Mr. SNELL. This boils down to a practical question. Personally, I have never been much in favor of starting these propositions; but this one is started. The question in my mind is, What is the least possible amount they can get along with during the present season and take care of the exhibit we have there at the present time?

Mr. KELLER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. We have an exhibit there, and it must be taken care of. I understand that they can do it for much less than they have asked for now. If the gentleman is in a position to tell the House the exact amount they can get through with and not waste the money, I am willing to support it.

Mr. KELLER. I am going to suggest to the gentleman that I only have one source of information, and that is from the three Commissioners who made requests for this money. Their statement is that to carry on the fair as it should be it will require $405,000.

Mr. SNELL. That is probably true; but has any information come to the gentleman, such as has been floating around the Capitol, that they could get by with $200,000 and do a reasonable job?

Mr. KELLER. I have been told by a great many gentlemen that they would not vote for more than $200,000. I have not been impressed by it for this reason: The plain facts are these: There is not a man on this floor—and I want the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and every one of the others who criticized me about this to listen—there is not a man on this floor in position to say exactly what we ought to have, whether more or less than this amount asked for.

Mr. SNELL. Now, it is simply a question of finding out how cheaply we can do it and do a reasonable job.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman is right, and I agree with him completely.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. No; not now. I will shortly. I want to answer the question asked by the minority leader. I agree with what he has said. The way we ought to do this, if we are going to be sensible about it, is simply this: There is only one place where these hearings can be had rationally, and that is in the Committee on Appropriations, when you call in these departments before that committee.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman there.

Mr. KELLER. I thank the gentleman for his agreement, because that is correct. There is no man here who knows that, or anybody who can know it, except the Committee on Appropriations, and they only after hearing the facts from men who do know.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. This is simply an authorization?

Mr. KELLER. Nothing else.

Mr. SNELL. These people have to make their case before the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. KELLER. Absolutely.

Mr. SNELL. I think the Appropriations Committee can be depended upon to cut them down as far as necessary.

Mr. KELLER. That is indeed correct, and I will vote for whatever they report.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The gentleman is going to stand for $405,000, is he not?

Mr. KELLER. In this authorization?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Yes. You are not going to yield at all, are you?

Mr. KELLER. Why should I?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. That is what I say.

Mr. KELLER. I would be foolish to yield on that question.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows——

Mr. KELLER. I only yield for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask a question. The gentleman knows that of this money that is provided for in this resolution there is $173,000 earmarked for the Administrator's office alone, is there not?

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman know what that means?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I know exactly. It means entertainment for somebody.

Mr. KELLER. Now, just a moment. The gentleman will have his 5 minutes here, and whenever he gets up here I want him to tell this House what he really knows about it, and not what he is guessing about it.

Mr. BLANTON. All right. I will not ask any more questions if you are going to give me 5 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. You will get your 5 minutes.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Can the gentleman say whether or not this is the last summer of the exposition?

Mr. KELLER. Oh, certainly; any other implication is just nonsense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, there are two questions before us. First, shall we continue an exhibit by the Government at this World's Fair through the following year? Second, how much money shall we spend for this purpose? As to the first question, indulge me if I tell you the history of this matter.

Five years ago Congress authorized the President of the United States to invite other countries to share in this exposition. In response to the invitation so extended a large number of other countries undertook to make exhibits and incur expense. At that point we were confronted with a situation that I can in a homely way illustrate by assuming that my good friend from Texas suggested to a group of his colleagues that they attend a theater party, that the colleagues agreed to go, but that when the party was held the gentleman himself did not show up because he did not care to pay for a ticket. [Laughter.]

Nevertheless we voted to do what we had invited other countries to do and made appropriation accordingly.

You are asked this morning to do the same thing again. You have not only originally invited other nations to make exhibits but you have recently, through your administration, asked them to continue those exhibits. Yet there are gentlemen who now propose that we shall not share in exhibits because we are unwilling to pay for our own ticket.

This is not a decent thing to do; it is not a gentlemanly thing to do. We address each other in this body as gentlemen, the formal method, and we mean what we say. We all try to be gentlemen; and why in a situation like this we should hesitate to act the part of gentlemen I wish somebody would tell me.

I cannot believe that there is a Member of this House who will contest my declaration that to decline by reason of expense to continue our exhibits would not be a decent and an honorable thing to do. If I am correct in this, there remains simply the question of expense.

If I were to put a title on these remarks in the RECORD, it would be "The Confessions of a Chairman." When appropriation was first asked I was the Chairman of the Committee on the Library, which advised such appropriation. Our first bill was lost in the rush at the close of the session. In the course of that summer I had occasion to pass through Chicago twice. Expecting further responsibility in the matter, on my first transit I viewed the exposition grounds and such buildings as were erected, alone, in order that I might not be subject to prejudice. On the second occasion I was shown over the grounds by officials, who explained the whole purpose, plan, and layout of the exposition. I returned convinced that the fair was to be conducted by honorable men, public-spirited, good business men indeed, as we were glad to find out later was the case, and that it was worthy of the sympathetic interest of the Federal Government.

So when the committee met in the next session I shared with my colleagues in reporting again the bill authorizing the appropriation. I did not know the particular purpose for which a single dollar was to be used; I did not inquire; and here is my confession: I did not inquire as to the purpose of which a single, separate dollar was to be used; I made no attempt at a break-down of the proposal. I have been wondering since whether I did the right thing and whether the present chairman of the committee has done the right thing in not going into the details of the expenditure.

This raises an interesting question of political science, a question with which I was familiar before coming here, because in my State legislature I had served as chairman of legislating committees and also as chairman of the appropriating committee. Also I had some part in the introduction of the budget system in my State, and in my first term here took part with the presumption of a new Member in the discussion of the proposed Budget system for the United States. I felt when in the legislature, and I felt when the Budget system was under consideration in this body, that there was a hole in our financial processes to which we ought to pay attention.

Let us see what has happened in this case. The Bureau heads were asked by the Secretaries to tell them how much money they needed to make a decent exhibit. The Secretaries undoubtedly accepted what the Bureau heads advised. The Secretaries advised your Committee on the Library, and I know we accepted without question what the Secretaries advised; and I feel much confidence in saying that then the Committee on Appropriations accepted what the Committee on the Library advised. Therefore, when that bill came on the floor of the House there was no real authority in point of specific details this side of the starting point. Analyze it and you will find that the Bureau heads really determined what should be the amount of this appropriation. I think that is unfortunate.

I thought so when the present measure came before the committee. Once again we either had to accept someone else's judgment or go into the thing ourselves. Look at the situation; your Committee on the Library is composed of five members, all of them members of other committees and burdened with work. For my own part, I am engrossed with the tremendous problems of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Do you say we ought to have brought down here the head of the Bureau of Education and made him give us an itemized statement about what he thought he should spend, devoting several hours, possibly several days of our time to passing judgment upon that one thing? Is it not rather absurd to expect that task from five men with many other duties?

Then how are you going to find out whether these estimates that come along—because this is only a sample, Mr. Chairman—how are you going to find out whether these estimates are sound and reasonable or not?

At the present time we have but one institution for doing such work, and that institution is the Committee on Appropriations. It is made up of 35 men, who, after the general appropriation bills have been passed, have very little to do. It is their job to go into details; it is not the job of the chairmen or the members of the legislative committees. I noticed yesterday that members of the Appropriations Committee, one from each side—my long-time friend from Texas and my equally long-time friend from New York—tried to induce the House, and I expect they will try again to induce the House, to decide as to what is the right total. Yet there is not a man here who has the slightest basis for saying it should be $200,000 rather than $199,000 or $201,000. They are asking us to legislate, to use a familiar phrase, "by guess and by gosh", without knowing anything whatever about the subject. They want us to act upon a hunch that this Government exhibit will need only half of what in fact may prove to be the actual justifiable expense.

I say frankly that I was surprised at the figure in this bill. I thought it unwarranted that $405,000 should be requested. The President of the United States requested this amount of money. No one here thinks that the President of the United States knew anything about the details of the matter. It would be preposterous to expect him to know anything about them. He took the judgment of his Secretaries, and they in turn took the judgment of their underlings.

Here we are about to be asked to make a guess and nothing more than a guess as to what is the right thing. That is not the kind of legislation commending itself to any judicious man. Legislation ought to be based upon knowledge. We ought to have instruments for determining knowledge, and we have one in the Committee on Appropriations. They have in turn access to the Bureau of the Budget. I feel very sure that they might request of the Budget Commissioner an examination of the detail of this expenditure, and I believe they ought to do that.

I helped, as I could, in the passage of the Budget Law. I did it with some objection. I thought it was incomplete and that it ought to have gone further, but I nevertheless voted for it in the hope that it might fulfill expectations. My doubts continued until in that very period when I saw the fair in its early stage, I traveled for 2 months in company with a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations inspecting the activities of the Interior Department in the far West. Incidentally, I might say that anybody who thinks a trip like that is a junket has another guess coming. I never passed 2 more arduous months and perhaps never 2 more useful months. By the way, I may say that among the things we survived was participation in 41 well-meant entertainments by chambers of commerce and like organizations in the course of 60 days. You may imagine the strain that it put not only upon the digestive organs but also upon other parts of the human anatomy. That, however, is unimportant.

I speak of the journey because we were accompanied by one of the assistants of the Budget Commissioner. I found him through 2 months' association to be a man of sound judgment, of indefatigable industry, having a personal acquaintance with all the problems presented, and the experience necessary to aid us in reaching conclusions. I came back with the feeling that in the Budget Office we have an agency to pass judgment usefully upon such questions as the one before us and to advise. Therefore the businesslike way to handle this thing, rather than to assume that by mere conjecture we can decide what is the right amount, is to turn to an agency that already exists for this very purpose, the Committee on Appropriations, in the hope that, either by the use of its own office personnel or that of the Budget, it may be able to advise with knowledge as to what should be done.

To sum it all up, I cannot conceive that anyone desires us to place ourselves in the dishonorable position of refusing to do that which we have invited other nations to do. I cannot conceive that we ought not to await the advice the Committee on Appropriations can wisely give as to what should be expended for this purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. LUCE. With the greatest of pleasure, I yield the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, his is exactly the kind of a speech that I would expect from a statesman from Massachusetts who had been banqueted 41 times by 41 different chambers of commerce on a 60-day junket. If you banquet a Massachusetts statesman 41 times in 60 days you will have him feeling pretty much like taking money out of the Treasury. Banquets are to get him in a generous frame of mind.

Usually the gentleman's speeches are logical. I followed him with a great deal of satisfaction when I was one of those who helped him pass the Budget system for this Government. His speeches then were logical. The only thing on earth he said here in this 20-minute speech this morning was that if the Members do not vote for $405,000 for the Chicago Fair, the second Chicago Fair since last May, they are not gentlemen, and they are dishonorable.

Who votes money out of the Treasury of the United States under the Constitution? There is but one body that can do it lawfully, and that is this Congress. The Members of this House are the only ones who can initiate a movement to take a single dollar out of the Treasury of the United States. The Constitution of the United States says that it it is the House of Representatives, the Members of which are elected every 2 years fresh from the people, that can initiate a bill to take money out of the people's Treasury. It is your vote that must initiate it, and yet the distinguished gentleman from Boston—he lives near Boston if he does represent another district—tells us it is dishonorable if we do not foreclose this question before we consider it, and it is dishonorable if we do not vote $405,000 for the fair in its second year.

Who said it is dishonorable? Who says it is ungentlemanly? Who is it that can make a man a gentleman or a thug by mere word of mouth? It is what is on the inside of a man that makes him a gentleman. It is what is born and bred into him. It is not the gentleman from Boston who determines whether an American is a gentleman or not. It is what is on the inside of you.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry. I do not think the gentleman can give us any light on that subject. [Laughter.] I take that back, because there is not a man in this House for whom I have greater affection and regard than I have for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question now?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman referred to what is on the inside of a man. Is the gentleman referring to the time before the 41 banquets or to the time after the 41 banquets?

Mr. BLANTON. I refer to what is on the inside every moment a man lives, whether he is drunk or sober. A man drunk, if he is a gentleman, is a gentleman drunk the same as when he is sober. You cannot change him.

Mr. BRITTEN. How does the gentleman know? He has never taken a drink.

Mr. BLANTON. I have been with others when they were drunk and I was sober and I observed them.

I want to give you some facts about this matter and I challenge any man on the floor of the House to deny any one of them.

The Chicago officials came to this Congress several years ago and went to the Ways and Means Committee and said—

We want you to pass a resolution authorizing our World Fair and we will promise you it shall not cost the Government one single dollar.

This is what they promised us and when the Ways and Means Committee brought that resolution on this floor, some of us at least who watch the Public Treasury, got upon the floor and asked whether or not we could depend upon that promise, whether or not they would make good on the promise it would not cost the Treasury anything. They promised us and they assured us it would not cost us anything and we passed the resolution.

Then they came in last year and got this Congress to appropriate $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit and you passed it over my vote—I did not vote it—but you passed it and last year your Government, with 12,000,000 men, heads of families, walking the streets without jobs, without shelter, without food and clothing for their wives and little children, spent $922,000 on this fair, and, Fred, 15,500,000 people went to that fair and they spent at least from the time they left home until the time they got back, an average of $50 apiece. Is not this a fair estimate? How much does that make, Fred? Fifty times fifteen and a half million is how much? Hold up your hand like you used to do in school and answer me. [Laughter.]

This meant a tremendous sum of money in profits to the people of Chicago.

Mr. BLOOM. How much?

Mr. BLANTON. You know 50 times 15,500,000 is $775,000,000, that they spent last year going to this Chicago fair. Sol knows it just like that [indicating].

They have paid off already half of their bonds. They had exhibits there from foreign countries who owe us millions upon millions on a debt of honor, and who refuse to make any effort whatever to try to pay us. They have repudiated a solemn debt of honor.

I saw Mr. Viviani, the French High Commissioner, come over to this very House floor during the war, when Germany had France on her knees and when we agreed to give France money and agreed to send the flower of American manhood over there under the guidance of General Pershing and others, including our good general here [Mr. MARTIN of Oregon]. France said, "We will never forget America." I saw Mr. Viviani kiss both cheeks of the Speaker, and I saw tears come to his eyes and run down his cheeks as he said, "We will pay back every dollar with interest. We will never forget you."

France today has repudiated the debt of honor. She had her exhibits there—"The Streets of Paris." You paid 50 cents to get in, and then you had to pay France 25 cents more at about 25 other places inside before you got out. [Laughter.] You first paid to see one lady dressed up in the mist of the rainbow—all mist—and then you paid 25 cents more to see 2 ladies dressed up in the aurora borealis; and then you would go a little farther and see 3 of them; and so on until finally you could see 15 of them if you continued putting up the cash.

The American people were paying tribute on this exhibit to the Government of France, a country which is an ordinary defaulter on a debt of honor.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the distinguished general who led some of the bravest boys in my district across the water.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Was the gentleman at the World's Fair last year?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, of course I was, and I did some checking up on Government expenditures.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Did the gentleman see all of these things?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, of course I did.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I did not see them.

Mr. BLANTON. I always see everything there is to be seen wherever I go. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, this year there are 10,000,000 heads of families still out of jobs, their wives and children without any provision except what the Government pays for out of the Public Treasury in the way of relief funds. I am not willing by my vote to take $405,000 out of the Treasury in this crucial year and waste it in Chicago.

No; if they want a fair let the people of Chicago stand on their own bottoms, Fred.

Mr. BRITTEN. It cannot be done. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Let them pay their own expenses and let these defaulting governments that owe us money, if they want to do so, have their exhibits there at their own expense. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I agree with everything the gentleman from Texas says with one exception; I did not see everything at Chicago; I saw everything that I could, but I was there only 2 days. I agree with the gentleman that this Congress alone has the right to appropriate—to say whether this money shall be appropriated this year. Having had something to do with the appropriation for State exhibitions for 6 years, I know in my own State that when money was budgeted we saved the taxpayers thousands of dollars every year.

I should like to know where the $172,000 appropriated for the Commissioners is going; I should like to know how it is to be spent; I should like to know what the Agricultural Department is going to do this year; I should like to know what kind of exhibits they are going to have.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I quite agree with the statement made here this afternoon that consideration should be given to the opening of the exhibits by the Federal Government at the fair at Chicago this year, owing to the fact that they have invited foreign countries to participate, but I am unable to fathom how, when the appropriation last year of $1,000,000, with $922,625 expended for the benefit of the fair, and the fact that they constructed the buildings for the housing of those exhibits at a cost of $500,000, I understand, how this year they can ask the Federal Government and the taxpayers of the country to appropriate for the display of the exhibits $482,101. That is the amount with the unexpended balance of $77,324 that they want. In other words, they want over 50 percent as much as we had last year and $44,000 more. I think it preposterous that the people of this country are going to be asked to appropriate $482,000 for further exhibits at the fair at Chicago.

I am in sympathy with continuing the exhibits, but how do they arrive at this sum?

The Commissioners asking us to make this appropriation have expended more money in the last 2 years than has ever been expended before by three men in the history of the world. They are making out the budget for this fair, and I say it is exorbitant.

If we are going back to the taxpayers in this country, who are now deluged with debt, and who are being asked at every nook and turn to pay taxes, if we are going to say that we want the Commissioners at Chicago to have $172,000 to wine and dine diplomats who come there on a visit, it is wrong, and I do hope the Representatives in this House will cut down this appropriation at least to $100,000. I would say $50,000 ought to be sufficient for these exhibits. You have the buildings; you have the exhibits at Chicago. I do not think we should be unfair to the employees there who put on the display and are courteous to the people who will visit this fair, but we must realize that we have to go to the taxpayers and ask them to pay the bills.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman think that $50,000 will be sufficient?

Mr. RICH. No; I never ran a fair; but if you are making the money you say in the operation of the fair, then the people who are making the profit should pay for its continuance.

Mr. KELLER. They are not making money.

Mr. RICH. It is said they are.

Mr. KELLER. What they said is that they paid back to themselves half of their investment.

Mr. RICH. If they got their investment back and had anything over, then you can cut down the expense of the exhibits that we are putting there and make it a reasonable amount, not an exorbitant amount.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. I think the gentleman is not quite familiar with the expenditures. The Commission has not expended a single dollar. All of the expenditures have been under the supervision of the Commissioner, who, by the way, is the former Postmaster General, Mr. New, under whose direction all of this money has been expended.

Mr. RICH. If you have expended $922,000 and constructed the buildings at a cost of $500,000, that ought to be enough without coming back here now to expend $482,000. Do you not think that is unreasonable?

Mr. SABATH. The recommendations are that it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PARSONS. If this fair were at Woolrich, Pa., would the gentleman be in favor of it?

Mr. RICH. No; I would not. I am not two-faced. When I think a thing is wrong I say it is wrong because I think it is wrong. I would not spend a dollar of it at a fair in Woolrich, Pa. It would be ridiculous.

Mr. PARSONS. But the gentleman would probably understand more about it if it were there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I listened with real interest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. He repeatedly misquoted the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] when he said that Mr. LUCE had said that the Members of this House would be dishonorable if they did not vote for the $405,000 appropriation. Mr. LUCE said nothing of the sort. He [Mr. BLANTON] referred to Mr. LUCE as having said that Members of this body would not be gentlemen if they did not vote for this $405,000. Again he was in complete error. Mr. LUCE said nothing of the sort.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

Mr. McFARLANE. He made use of the word "dishonorable."

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; he used the word, but he used it in connection with our invitation to foreign governments that we would appear dishonorable and that we would appear ungentlemanly, if we failed to exhibit at a time when they are exhibiting at our request and invitation.

Mr. Chairman, 15,500,000 people attended the fair last year, and on an average they spent something like $1.20 per day within the fair grounds. That was the average expenditure, man, woman, and child. The amount was not generally hurtful, but it did the spenders a lot of good. This was a great educational and industrial exposition. The most money expended by visitors to the fair was expended in your State and in mine and in the adjoining States, where my friend, Mr. BLANTON, says that approximately $50 would represent the expenditure of each person. That was spent for lodging and gasoline and "hot-dogs" and food you eat along the road—and I am not referring to the kind of "hot-dogs" that you have here in the little red house in Georgetown. I mean a real one. Yesterday your distinguished leader [Mr. BYRNS] took the floor and said that the $405,000 is a problematical amount. He assured the House that the Committee on Appropriations would dig into that appropriation and have it thoroughly analyzed. The Committee on Appropriations will determine how much money is to be appropriated for the continuation of the Federal Government's exhibit at Chicago. What more can you ask. The $405,000 is not a positive amount. If the language in the bill makes it positive, let us change it and provide not in excess of $405,000 shall be appropriated, but in the name of Heaven, let us not place ourselves in the ridiculous light of having invited the foreign nations to continue their exhibit, and then not continue our own exhibit. In December 1933 every foreign officer representing the United States in every nation on earth was requested by his superior officer in the State Department to communicate with the country to which he was accredited, and to request them to come and participate in this World's Fair again, and in March of this year another notice was sent out by the State Department importuning the foreign governments to exhibit here. Are we going to be a lot of laggards and not exhibit? I cannot believe that.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I should like to know what is the prime reason for having another fair this year.

Mr. BRITTEN. This is not another fair. It is the same fair.

Mr. McCLINTIC. What is the reason for having it repeated?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois grant me 1 minute to answer the question?

Mr. KELLER. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Frankly it is this: I am willing to admit to gentlemen on the other side of the aisle that the country evidently is much more prosperous today than it was a year ago. More money will be spent this year in travel by people who did not see the exposition last year. It was the greatest industrial educational facility that the world has ever known, and the authorities out there and your President down here in the White House are anxious that more people of this country shall observe that institution. That is the only reason for it. Not one dollar of profit was made by the Exposition Co., and none will be made this year. Not one dollar of profit will be made by anybody except the concessionaires. The exhibitors cannot make any money because they do not charge an admission. No foreign exhibitor can make any money.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Does the gentleman believe that the same people who went there last year will go again?

Mr. BRITTEN. No, not all of them; but I think from 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 additional people—people who did not go there last year—will visit the fair this year.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I think we are losing sight of the principal proposition before us. That is this: Why should the Federal Government spend this money right in the face of the assurance that the management of this fair originally came before Congress and asked for governmental approval they solemnly promised Congress they would not be asking for any money? That is when they wanted to put over this proposition. Now, they are coming back here and asking us to pay out $482,101, to carry on this fair another year. You cannot get away from those facts. Oh, they say, this is just an authorization bill. I was amused at the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] when he passed the buck to the Appropriations Committee. He knows, as we all know, that if and when we authorize the expenditure of this money that in all probability the Appropriations Committee will consider it a mandate and will allow the full amount. If you are in favor of limiting the amount of this appropriation here is the place and now is the time to vote for such a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, the last Congress appropriated $1,000,000 for the different departments to spend in making their exhibits at the fair and of this amount last year they spent $922,625.62, and have $77,374.38 unexpended. If you now allow their request of $404,726.62 it will give them $482,101 to spend, of which amount $172,954 will be allotted to the Commissioner to spend as he sees fit. Last year he spent $493,618.05, and has left unexpended $16,241.95. The other 20 departments of Government displaying exhibits are requesting the balance of the above sum. This fair was planned for only last year. Their managers solemnly promised Congress they would not ask us for any appropriations to help carry on their work. In order to inveigle Congress into recognizing their fair and give it a national status abroad so that they could have our Government inviting foreign countries to bring exhibits to them. The facts show that more than 15,000,000 people attended the fair last year, probably spending more than $50 each, greatly benefiting all business concerns in and around Chicago.

It is a well-known fact that the hotels and many other business concerns in receivership have paid their indebtedness in full. The Government has been very generous with the Century of Progress, much more so than it has been able to be under the present economic conditions, with more than 11,000,000 men unemployed and they with their wives and children hungry and of necessity being fed at Government expense. Because of insufficient funds, the Government has been forced to discontinue and drop from the rolls many hundreds of thousands of families being fed under the C.W.A. It seems that this is a very bad time to be pressing legislation of this kind when our Government is admittedly unable adequately and sufficiently to take care of our people now in distress.

I, therefore, trust that not only this amendment will be adopted but that the leaders of this movement will not press this measure further.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time, 5 minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I only have 5 minutes, so I will have to talk fast and try to answer questions that were asked last night and this afternoon. I want to get the facts before this Committee.

In the first place, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] really placed his finger upon the most important part of this whole argument. The gentleman from Texas stated that the Ways and Means Committee brought in a bill authorizing this fair. The reason that bill was brought before the House at that time, and the only reason, was that the Century of Progress Exposition Co. could invite foreign nations to participate in this fair. That is why we are here today. It was not for any appropriation. It was an authorization, because without that the State Deparment could not have invited foreign nations to participate. The foreign nations were asked to participate, and they are participating. This authorization for an appropriation has nothing to do with the Chicago fair. This is for the Government of the United States to demonstrate 21 different departments of the Government. Twenty-one different departments of the Government have exhibited at this fair. The exhibits are there, and if you will examine the allotments of 1933–34 you will see what this amount, $482,000, is to be used for. That is very easily ascertained. We know what the Government expenditures were last year at the fair. We know how much it was necessary to expend for the State Department, the Justice Department, the Post Office Department, and the other Departments. So this year when they come before the Committee on Appropriations to find out how much appropriation is necessary, they have the figures of what it really cost last year, and that is what it should cost for the remaining time of the fair, outside of taking the exhibits back home and removing the buildings.

You want to know whether this exposition is a success. You want to know whether this year is different from last year. Let me give you some figures. Mr. Henry Ford is spending more money for an exhibit at the Century of Progress this year than any other exhibitor spent last year. Is that not proof positive that this exposition will be as big, if not bigger, than the exposition last year?

Let me give you some more figures, comparing this year and last year. At the different institutions this year the attendance, according to the papers, is four times as great as the same month last year. In fact, people are more prosperous. They have more money to spend and they want more recreation.

Now this bill calls for only one thing, and that is an appropriation of money for the Government exhibits. No one can say that the Century of Progress commissioners ever came before this House and asked for one penny for the Century of Progress. The money was expended for the Government of the United States. This is the only time in history—and I go back over 40 years on expositions—that any city ever held an exposition without asking the Government of the United States to subsidize them or underwrite them. There has not been one cent expended for the Century of Progress.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mrs. KAHN. The Panama-Pacific Exposition held in San Francisco did not ask for Government underwriting.

Mr. BLOOM. But there was money appropriated.

Mrs. KAHN. For an exhibit, exactly as it was appropriated for the Chicago World's Fair, but there was no money appropriated for the expense of the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Mr. BLOOM. Well, the lady may be right in that case, but I am going to look it up. I have the figures.

This exposition could not have been continued for another year if it were not for the fact that the Government of the United States promised to continue its exhibits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. For this purpose the act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, as hereby amended, is extended and made applicable to the continuance of the participation of the United States in the said exposition in 1934 in the same manner and to the same extent and for the same purposes as originally provided in said act, except insofar as the provisions of that act specify the erection of a building or group of buildings: Provided, That there may be expended a sum not to exceed $2,500 for the purchase of a passenger-carrying automobile for the official use of the Commissioner of A Century of Progress.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 2 line 10, after the colon following the word "building" strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I know of no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, one Member tells us that this is strictly an educational institution. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] just said it was a recreational institution, that the people wanted recreation. I presume they are given education through the Government exhibits and recreation in the "Streets of Paris" and the "Streets of Cairo."

I call the attention of the House to the fact that this is the only world's exposition, in my recollection, that did not have an exhibit of the livestock that is raised on our American farms; and I go back to the Chicago exposition of 1893, the St. Louis exposition of 1904, the exposition at Philadelphia, and many others.

The Department of Agriculture last year spent $104,000. What for? I want someone to tell me what will be done with the $172,000 that is appropriated to the Commissioner this year. I want someone to tell me what was done with the $509,000 that was spent last year through the Commissioner's office.

The gentleman from New York stated that the country was more prosperous. If he refers to the farming country that is not true. If, as he said, the exposition itself is more prosperous, that is the greater argument why this Government should not appropriate money for it this year. As you came to your office this morning, did you see the bread line that I saw, those boys who are here looking for their rights, their bonus, feeding at the soup house paid for by the Government?

Do you see, as I see over this country, 10,000,000 men still tramping the streets looking for work? Do you see 3,000 farmers being sold out and having their homes confiscated day by day while we stand here and devote nearly a day to the question of whether or not we are going to underwrite to a certain extent this great institution in Chicago?

Why do you not get your hotels to chip in, hotels charging $7, $8, and $10 for a $2.50 room? How much are they going to chip in this year? Are you going to compel your hotels to get health certificates so people can go to the fair without danger of catching dysentery? What about your business men there who made millions and millions, who enjoyed the greatest prosperity last year they have enjoyed in 15 years; how much are they going to "kick in" this year? Yet you come here and ask the taxpayers of this great country of ours, 90 percent of whom cannot even dig up the money with which to go to Chicago, to have saddled on their backs $405,000 to maintain "The Streets of Paris", and "The Streets of Cairo", the fan dancers, and other exhibits.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I wish to correct the gentleman in his statement with regard to farm animals, and to inform the gentleman that all during the fair last year the greatest exhibit of farm animals in the United States, and probably in the world, was in Chicago. That exhibition was held at a place called the Union Stock Yards.

Mr. TRUAX. Yes; I have been there many times, but the smell drives most people away.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Ohio ought to be accustomed to that.

Mr. TRUAX. I am; that is the reason I go [laughter], but the gentleman is not. The regret I expressed was that there was no exhibition of American livestock at the fair. There was no effort made by the Government at the fair to tell the farmer how to get the most out of his livestock. It matters not whether the old brindle cow got foundered in the cornfield or whether the little farmer's humble jackass was doubled up with the colic—nothing was done to help the farmer learn how to meet the situation.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I desire to state to the gentleman that I am informed that arrangements have been made whereby a livestock show will be made part and parcel of this exhibition. In addition to that, I wish to remind the gentleman that the continuance of this fair will give employment to 5,000 or 10,000 unemployed.

Mr. TRUAX. I do not doubt my colleague's statement, but I want to see the money budgeted for a livestock exhibit before I will believe it.

If some of us are determined to spend $405,000 for educational expositions, why not appropriate this money for the State fairs. The amount that we are asked to appropriate for the Chicago exposition, if made available for State fairs, would provide 40 of them with an appropriation of $10,000 per year.

This appropriation would be a godsend to them. Every State fair is having a hard time of it. They are having to reduce their expenditures and admissions. Why not give part of it to county and independent fairs and expositions, of which we have approximately 2,500 in this country. These county and independent fairs are practically every one of them an agricultural educational institution. They face a Herculean task in raising funds to properly finance their expositions. They have been compelled to reduce their admissions from 50 to 25 cents. They have a difficult time to get along. Many of them are dropping out of existence year by year.

An appropriation of this size distributed among these county agricultural institutions would be the means of rehabilitating and perpetuating those institutions, whereas under present conditions they are foredoomed to failure and oblivion.

In my judgment it is time that this Congress cease spending the taxpayer's money for non-essentials of life. If left unmolested, the tax-spender will always keep ahead of the taxpayer. This seems to be the trend in many phases of Government activity today.

At a time when farmers everywhere from Gulf to Lakes, from coast to coast, are being strangled to an economic death by those human hyenas known as money lenders, at a time when 10,000,000 men still wear out shoe leather and hand and heart and soul seeking a job that becomes ever more distant, ever more a mirage, at a time when schools are closing by the score for lack of funds, at a time when dimpled babes cry for milk and the sorrowful mother is in need of food and clothing, it is time that this Congress quit spending the people's money for the benefit of the private business interests of Chicago.

At a time when this Congress refuses to consider such meritorious bills as the Frazier-Lemke bill, which will save the farmer from ruination and damnation, which will save the farmer from the further encroachments and abuse of the most despicable bureaucracy ever created in the Federal Government, known as the Farm Credit Administration, it takes superabundant gall and unadulterated, triple-distilled intestinal fortitude to ask this Congress to make this appropriation.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] inferred in his remarks that Members who refused to support this bludgeoning of the taxpayers were not "gentlemen", that it would be "dishonorable" to vote against this bill. In the eyes of some, Mr. Joseph Nutt, former treasurer of the Republican National Committee, and former chairman of the board of the defunct Union Trust Co. of Cleveland, would be a gentleman, but only 2 days ago he was indicted by a Cleveland grand jury on the charges of making false entries in the accounts of the bank, and of using the mails to defraud.

Brutus was considered by some an honorable man. Yet he slew his best friend, the mighty Caesar, with the assassin's dagger. So, if to be classed as honorable gentlemen by some Members of this House, we must agree without even a murmur of protest to plunder the taxpayer for the benefit of the tax collectors at the Chicago Fair, then my vote will be cast in the negative.

The contention is made that the United States Government collected more than a million dollars revenue from taxes on admission tickets to the exposition, and that therefore we ought to appropriate a second time so that we can collect more toll and tribute from thousands of our citizens who can gather together barely enough coin of the realm to make the trip to Chicago.

It is not enough that these citizens of ours, who have the same desires for education, the same desires for entertainment, the same desires for recreation that my friend from New York [Mr. BLOOM] mentions, have to dig and scrape and rake all their nickels and dimes together to make the journey to Chicago, but the Federal Government itself must make their lot even harder by taxing them for the privilege of entering the gate of this educational institution.

The argument is also used that because the motorist who travels by that method to the World's Fair leaves additional tribute and toll in the States through which he passes, that that form of extortion justifies this Congress in making further appropriations for the Chicago Exposition, which I admire and praise, but which should be financed by the men who are reaping the rewards, who are scooping in the dollars.

In the first place, neither the present high amusement tax or gasoline tax can be justified. The first is a nuisance tax pure and simple, a yoke about the necks of the wageworkers, the farmers, and unemployed of this country, a tax upon these toilers merely because we do not have the courage to tax the public utilities and to tax wealth the way it should be and some day will be taxed.

Some of us cackle like the dunghill rooster at the break of dawn, and we thrust our chests out like pouter pigeons, because we have discovered that in our great wisdom and beneficence we have taxed the people who were spending the last dollar they can rake up to see this World's Fair. We are taxing them a million dollars so that when they arrive at the front portals of this great institution they shall have to deposit their nickels and their dimes in the amusement-tax box, so that their Congress will be justified in making further appropriations for the exposition and will be justified in imposing nuisance taxes on these people who will visit the fair this year.

It has been said that thousands of dollars have been left in States by motorists passing through on their way to the exposition and that that is a good argument why every Representative of every State should vote for this unjustifiable gift to further finance the business men of Chicago, to further enrich the once debt-burdened hotels of Chicago, to further enrich the beer barons and the liquor kings and the proprietors of la danseuse, commonly known as the "dance of the streets of Gay Paree, the dance of the streets of Cairo, and the fan dance" so ably exploited by one of our distinguished female citizens, Sally Rand.

Someone else had it that our way to future prosperity lies in the path of spending more and more and more. Spend money for gasoline so that your State and the Federal Government will exact their toll. Spend money for admission tickets to the Chicago fair so that the Federal Government could wring a nickel or a dime out of the fifteen and one half million sojourners there last year.

My reply is that for every dollar left in any single State $50 will be left in the city of Chicago. It will be left with the merchants. It will be left with the hotels, which have not only hijacked their rates, but which in some cases infected their guests with a deadly disease which has already exacted its toll in many sections and has made of many citizens helpless invalids.

Instead of crowing about the gasoline taxes which we take from the masses of the people, we should be doing something to scale down that tax and place it upon the sleek and fat public-utility barons. Instead of shouting to the housetops that we collected over a million dollars from the visitors to the Chicago exposition last year through nuisance and amusement taxes, which fall with equal burden upon the

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, instead of shouting to the housetops that we collected over a million dollars from the visitors to the Chicago exposition last year through nuisance and amusement taxes, which fall with equal burden upon the shoulders of the unemployed, the bankrupt farmer, the toiling wage worker, the little child who has a dime to spend at the movies, we should be repealing that infamous tax and placing its burden upon centralized plutocratic wealth.

We could repeal every amusement tax in this country today and levy a 5 percent additional tax on all personal incomes over $100,000 a year, and collect more than we are now collecting from the poor by the vehicle of the amusement tax.

The most obnoxious of all the nuisance amusement taxes is the tax on the traveling circus. The traveling circus is an American institution—an American tradition handed down from the generations that are now gone. Is there one among us who does not remember the immortal words of P. T. Barnum when he uttered his famous adage "A sucker is born every minute." Is there one among us who does not remember the little one-ring circus of our boyhood days, of earning an admission to the show by carrying water for the elephants. If there be one who has missed that boyhood thrill, then he has missed something that has served as an ennobling influence down through the decades.

Is there one so callous, so hardened, so immune to the impressionistic stage of youthful life that he cannot see now the coming of the circus to town, that he cannot visualize the elephants pushing the heavy trucks, the big "cats" commonly known as lions, tigers, and leopards, pacing restlessly back and forth behind their iron-barred cages?

Can you forget the circus band; the red lemonade; the peanuts; the side-splitting clowns; the bareback riders; the high-wire performers; the aerialists in their marvelous twists, turns, side-slips, and nose dives? Has the ear become deaf to the inspiring chords of the steam calliope; the ringmaster's cracking whip; the equestrian director's throaty announcements; the grunt of the trained pig; the chatter of the monkeys; the roar of the lions? Is the modern eye obscured to the blazing, dazzling, florescent side-show banner depicting the bulging curves of the fat lady; the spangles of the Egyptian dancer; the tattooed man; the bearded lady; the three-legged calf; the courageous sword swallower; and the heroic snake charmer?

Few can recall even the names of all of the Presidents, but the names of Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey, Buffalo Bill, Pawnee Bill, Carl Hagenbeck, Wallace Bros., John Robinson, Sells-Floto rush to the lips of the kiddies like a song learned at the mother's knee.

Other forms of entertainment and amusements may have their questionable features. They may depict wrecked morals, perversion of character and of sex, but the circus, as we have known it in the past and shall know it in the future, is the one outstanding amusement and entertainment that never yet has been censored and never yet has been the cause of legislation and enactments of laws in State or in Nation to compel adherence to the principles of common decency and the proper regard for safeguarding the morals and character of our youth.

The circus is, and always has been, an amusement where the whole family can be entertained. Father and mother, with the kiddies trailing along hand in hand, and even grandpap and grandma can laugh with the youngsters and enjoy the show.

The crowds that flock to the circus today to be entertained are not made up of the high-browed, hifalutin' aristocracy of wealth, the male species of which must be garbed in white boiled shirts, long-tailed coats, and a breath disguised with cloves or chewing gum; the fat female dowager, of which are attired alike unto Solomon's wives, in all their glory, with mattressed fronts, poodle dogs, and lorgnettes. If you doubt the wisdom and truthfulness of these words, just attend the circus this summer; get there early and observe the class of people who enter the marquee.

There is the worker, who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow, who has not of worldly riches, but who possesses the boundless wealth of a good wife and healthy, bright-eyed children. There you will see the farmer, who braves the chill of wintry, icy blasts, so that beef and pork and poultry may be produced, and who bares his brawny arms and chest to the sun's scorching rays to harvest the wheat so that the people may have bread. With 3-cent hogs and 4-cent cattle, his income and his earnings are at the zero point, yet when he goes to his one favorite amusement, the circus, he is taxed 10 percent for the privilege of enjoying his day of pleasure and recreation.

Go to the circus and you will see there the small business man and producer. He may be wearing a celluloid collar. He may have a day's growth of whiskers. He might flash a red bandana; but here he is to see the circus and to spend his money for the sideshow, the peanuts and pop corn, and the red lemonade.

Watch the parade that moves along Main Street. See the throngs standing by. Note the automobiles parked in every available foot of space. See the craning necks. Join the crowd and watch the procession go by. See the prancing menage horses. The comely and attractive equestrians; whooping cowboys from the far-off plains; Russian Cossacks; Arabian riders of the deserts; the copper-hued Indians; the acrobats, aerialists, high-wire artists; the long-necked kangaroos; the hippopotamus; the homely ships of the deserts—the camels—ending up with the clown band and the caged animals. Capt. Clyde Beatty, the world's greatest animal trainer, a resident of my own State of Ohio; "Poodles" Hanneford and the famous Hanneford family; Jess Adkins, Eddie Vaughn, and all of the rest of the "big shots" of the show. Then you, too, will feel that old surge and urge to follow the crowd and see the circus once again as you did in your boyhood days.

When you stop at the ticket office you object, however, and rightly so, to the payment of a 10-percent amusement tax. I object to it; thousands of other Americans object to it. It is an impost on the pocketbook of the poor man, so let us correct this indefensible tax by repealing it. Let us give the struggling masses a break. Let us give the little kiddies a break. What the Federal Treasury may lose through repeal of this section of the amusement tax it can easily gain by a heavier tax on the rich.

I am introducing a bill to preserve and encourage a declining national institution which has been of great educational and recreational benefit to the people of the Nation, popularly known as the "circus", to accomplish this end by removing the tax on admissions thereto as provided by section 500 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 500 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, be, and is hereby, amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and substituting therefor a semicolon and adding the following: "or (3) any admissions to any performance of a traveling company exhibiting miscellaneous shows, performances, and entertainment consisting of menageries, acrobats, horsemen, etc., performing in 'rings' or 'sideshows'; in other words, that class of educational and recreational amusement known as the 'circus.'"

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion offered by Mr. BLANTON: "Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to give you one view to show that some of these Government exhibits are not worth while and are not in the interest of the people.

I went to the Chicago fair last year and went into the exhibit of the Department of Agriculture. They had what was called the "Chamber of Horrors", one of the special pets of Dr. Rex. Tugwell. He had in it various things that he thought were deleterious to the public health. I noticed, and I happened to have some friends with me from my part of Texas, a product of my own district that every reputable doctor in the United States who knows anything about it will say is a splendid product that has brought health to many people. It is Crazy Crystals, manufactured in Mineral Wells, Tex., in my district.

Mineral Wells is one of the greatest health resorts in the United States. Many Congressmen have been there. Why, our good friend, Mr. Sproul, of Illinois, used to go there every summer for his health. I have seen men go there on crutches, men who had to be helped into hotels, so crippled up with rheumatism that they could not walk unaided or raise their arms, go away cured in a few weeks' time. Fifty, sixty, and seventy-five years ago the Indians used to go there, whole tribes at a time, and camp for months in the summer, to take advantage of the health properties of the mineral-wells water.

The crystals which are produced from those mineral wells down there were in the Chamber of Horrors. It was stated there that they were nothing in the world but a fraud, that they were Glauber salts that could be sold for so much a ton. Any posted physician on earth knows that Glauber salts are not palatable, and that they are distasteful. You cannot drink water containing Glauber salts. It would be nauseating.

The crystals from the health-giving waters of the mineral wells of Texas are palatable and pleasing to the taste and reputable physicians all over the land have sent patients to Mineral Wells for the benefits to be derived from this water.

We told Dr. Tugwell that he was going to have to take Crazy Crystals out of the Chamber of Horrors. He said he was not. After a hearing on the matter finally he was convinced he had been in error about the product and took it out. There were thousands of people from that part of Texas there seeing an exhibit put there by their Government that did them and their country an injury. Why, it would take years for that legitimate company down there to overcome the loss occasioned by the error of Dr. Rex Tugwell, and may I say that there are lots of those exhibits sometimes that do not do much good after all.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois said that they spent only about $1 a day in the fair grounds on the average. The gentleman from Illinois knows that most of those big hotels there in Chicago were in the hands of the receivers when the fair started. During the fair last year you had to wire most of them 2 weeks in advance in order to get reservations. I stated that $50 was about the average amount that each person spent on the entire trip to the fair. Why, some friends of the gentleman from Illinois when they went there I dare say would spend $50 a day for their suite at the hotel. I understand these hotels have gotten out of debt and out of the hands of receivers. God pity you if you ever get into the hands of a receiver.

Mr. Chairman, I think we should strike out the enacting clause of the bill and save this $405,000 for the people.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's motion.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that the country has derived a great deal of benefit from the gentleman's section, and especially his district. I recognize the wonderful qualities of the waters of the springs in the gentleman's district, and the good they have accomplished. Not only are these wonderful waters, but Texas has given the country a wonderful legislator, a man who is always ready and willing to fight not only for his district, but for the best interests of the country as a whole. He is sincere, he is brave, he is able, and he is courageous, but sometimes even the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes a mistake in opposing an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am almost inclined to withdraw my motion.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will agree to do that, I am willing to desist right now.

The gentleman from Texas should not blame the fair for any Assistant Secretary of Agriculture or even the Secretary of Agriculture himself. Chicago is not responsible for either of them, and we are hoping that in the course of time we will be able to have a Secretary of Agriculture who will be able to please every farmer in the United States.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is the gentleman convinced that $405,000 is needed?

Mr. SABATH. I may say to the gentleman that I feel that perhaps the Commissioner might be able to get along with about $200,000, together with the balance that was left over from last year. I am informed, however, that this is merely an authorization and that it is not an appropriation. I have the utmost confidence in the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and that great committee consisting of 35 Members.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. Last year we authorized an appropriation of $1,000,000, which was passed by this House. This year we are asked to appropriate $405,000. What does the gentleman think as to whether this will be passed or not?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know.

Mr. MILLARD. Does not the gentleman think we had better pass on the matter here?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know what the Members will do; but may I say that this is simply an authorization? I feel when it comes to the Appropriations Committee it will make a thorough investigation; and from what I have seen in the past, I am satisfied that it will not come in with a larger appropriation than is absolutely necessary. They might be able to cut it down below $200,000, but I do not know about that. I want to be on the square with all the Members that are here, as I always try to be. Notwithstanding the fact that the recommendation is for $405,000, I feel that the Government might be able to get along on less; and in view of the fact that this is not an appropriation but merely an authorization, I feel that this bill should be passed as it is, leaving it to the Appropriations Committee to bring in an appropriation which its members, on examination, find is required.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. The House will have another opportunity to vote on whether they agree to that amount or not?

Mr. SABATH. That is correct. The House will have a chance to vote on the amount that should and eventually will be appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 36, noes 87.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. In addition to the sum of $1,000,000 authorized by the aforesaid act to be appropriated for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) and appropriated under section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes", approved July 7, 1932, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $405,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 22, after the word "of", strike out "$405,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$200,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, surely no one in the House who wants to save money for the taxpayers would vote against this amendment that will save $205,000 in cash for the taxpayers. Even with this amendment passed they have available now $77,000 left over, which they can spend under the provisions of this bill, and in addition they will have $200,000. This will give them $277,000, or more than a quarter of a million dollars, to spend in the second year.

Mr. McFARLANE. Two hundred and seventy-seven thousand.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; $277,000 in all. Is not this enough? Do you not think they can get along with this amount? I know these big fair fellows, these exposition fellows, like our friend from New York [Mr. BLOOM], would have the Government engaged in expositions all the time. He is an exposition man, and he is a good one. If he were in charge of this fair at Chicago, I would believe the money would be well spent. Sol gave more to the school children of the United States with the little money he had during the last 2 years than they ever got out of the Federal Treasury since they were born. [Applause.]

However, I am not willing to spend money indiscriminately in Chicago on the second year of the fair. This will make them cut off some of that great, big amount of $173,000 that the Administrator is going to entertain with. Oh, he will entertain our former Chairman of the Library Committee from Massachusetts when he goes out there. He will be royally entertained if they get through this $405,000. Such ex-Chairmen of the Library Committees always get well entertained. It will be a continuation of the 41 banquets he enjoyed on that 60-day junket.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Always, because we have no more delightful companion on this floor than ADOLPH SABATH.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the fact that the gentleman is one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations and this matter will come before his committee, does not the gentleman think we should leave it with that great committee of his to find out how much money should be appropriated. I have confidence in the gentleman and in his committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to tell my friend from Illinois this: I am one member of the Committee on Appropriations. I consider a bill like this passed by the House of Representatives is a mandate to the committee. I am a servant of the House on that committee. I do not ever intend, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, to try to override your will. If you pass this bill and say that $405,000 shall be appropriated, you will find me voting in committee for $405,000 because I am a servant of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. If you want to save this $205,000, now is the time to do it. You can save $205,000 by passing my amendment. I know the Committee on Appropriations. There is not a man on the committee who would override your will, definitely expressed by mandatory legislation like this measure. There is no partisanship in that committee. We are not Democrats and Republicans in the Committee on Appropriations; we are American citizens, Members of Congress, carrying out the will of the Congress. You are passing a bill now to give us a mandate, and I hope you will not approve more than this $200,000. Pass my amendment and you will save the huge sum of $205,000 for your constituents back home. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Either today or tomorrow a measure will be passed authorizing an appropriation of $400,000,000 for public roads. There is no chance under the sun of either the Appropriations Committee or the President approving any such amount. A nearer amount will be $100,000,000. This will not be a mandate on the Appropriations Committee, and, although the House will pass the bill, the committee will never appropriate the $400,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I would much rather spend money building permanent highways that will be worth the money for many years to come, and at the same time give honest jobs to American heads of families who now cannot get jobs, and let these Americans retain their self-respect, their self-reliance, their own initiative, than to waste it in the way money is now being wasted in Washington, granting relief to 25,000 people here who are not entitled to relief.

But, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that my colleagues here will pass my amendment. It will save $205,000 in cash. Is not $205,000 worth saving for the people? You can save $205,000 by passing my amendment and still allow $277,000 to be spent this year in continuing on the Government exhibits. I know just how beset the President was when the Illinois delegation wanted this $405,000. I know that it was hard for him to turn them down. He is human, just like the rest of us. The influence of this great Illinois delegation is tremendous. I imagine that when they overwhelmed him and he wrote that letter he knew that there would be enough Members on the floor of this House, who help him watch expenditures, who would put up a man's fight on this floor to prevent more than the minimum amount needed to be appropriated. Let us save this $205,000. We can do it by passing my amendment.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, although the committee has shown its intention to have an exhibit at the exposition, I would make it clear lest I was misunderstood that not only the original invitation to other nations binds us in all decency but also that on the 19th of last December the Department of State, anticipating action by the Illinois Legislature, sent out invitations again and repeated these invitations on the 19th of March of this year.

Also, I would correct the misunderstanding on the part of my friend from Texas to the effect that I charged there would be something dishonorable or indecent in the matter of the appropriation. At the very opening of my remarks I said there were two questions: First, should we make an exhibit, and, second, how much we should spend on it. As to the first of them it seems to me these statements now made about the invitations warrant the somewhat extreme language which I may have used. As to the amount of the appropriation, it has been repeatedly said—but I would emphasize it again—that we should leave the determination of these things to the Committee on Appropriations. The legislating committee authorizes a maximum, the legislating committee does not appropriate, and the allegation that I have asked this House to appropriate $405,000 is not justified by what I said or by the facts of the case as they are known to every man who has served here even but a few months, and ought to be known to the gentleman from Texas, who has served here for many years. I recognize the magnitude of his knowledge, but some things escape his memory, and he should have remembered that legislating committees do not appropriate but authorize, and when he says that he considers an authorization to be a mandate, he makes us, for the first time, waver in our complete confidence in his omniscience. [Laughter.]

I ask, therefore, that you leave the amount to be spent to the committee whose job it is to determine how much shall be spent, and that you will not guess, conjecture, or surmise what is the right sum, but permit the maximum to go to the Committee on Appropriations to be considered in an orderly businesslike fashion, for that is the right way to do the work of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I am sorry that during the course of our debate this afternoon some Members have, because we are trying to economize in the affairs of the Government, claimed that we are opposing anything for the interests of the city of Chicago and the interests of the people of this country.

I have no such thought in my mind in trying to put forth the argument that I believe the expenditure of a fund, say, of $100,000 is too great to carry on the fair that is to be conducted in Chicago this summer.

If we adopt the amendment fixing the sum of $200,000, which is now before you, with the $77,000 they already have from last year, that will give them $277,000 for the purpose of the exhibits and the display. It is simply a disposition to help the taxpayers back home that I am interested in opposing the sum of $400,000. Now, I want to read the philosophy of a former President of the United States, Mr. Coolidge:

> I favor the policy of economy not because I wish to save money but because I wish to save people. The men and women of this country who toil are the ones who bear the cost of government. Every dollar that we carelessly waste means that their life will be so much the more meager. Every dollar that we prudently save means that their life will be so much the more abundant. Economy is idealism in its most practical form. The wisest and soundest method of solving our tax problem is through economy.

I do hope that Members of Congress will allow someone to stand up here who does not agree with the above expression without saying that we who oppose exorbitant expenditures are opposed to the fair at Chicago.

I do not oppose the Chicago fair; I think $100,000 will be sufficient. If you adopt the amendment, you are going to have $277,000. I hope the Members of Congress will do that, because I think it is the right thing to do, and they should not be criticized for taking that position, because they have the right to think in terms of economy, and need no advice from others that they should not do so.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have great regard for the gentleman's opinion, but I should like to ask him what specific knowledge he has that $275,000 will be sufficient?

Mr. RICH. I think so, because you have the buildings, you have the exhibits out there. The fact is you want to send a lot of people out there to have a good time. This I am opposed to.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. RICH. I think I have answered the gentleman's question. Learn to economize in governmental activities.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 seconds to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Would the gentleman vote for this authorization of $405,000 if he thought the Government would make that sum back?

Mr. BLANTON. Would I vote for it now?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I would not vote for $405,000 at all. I believe over half of it will be wasted.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Even if the Government were to make it all back and more?

Mr. BLANTON. I think that is so problematical and so speculative that it would be worse than the lottery speech that we heard this morning.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, last year the Government received in revenue in excise taxes from the sale of tickets to the Chicago World's Fair $1,125,000, or three times the amount authorized to be appropriated in this bill. I venture to say that if we authorize this appropriation the Government will make another half million over and above the amount.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman not know that, except as to taxes, which come anyway regardless of our exhibits, the Constitution forbids the Government receiving any money of that kind at all in the way of profits, and that it would take an act of Congress to put that money into the Treasury?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Oh, I refer to the revenue obtained by the Government in excise taxes from the sale of tickets.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the tax? That is revenue that we expect to get from every exposition, whether we exhibit or not.

Mr. PETTENGILL. In addition to that the Government is going to get income from the income taxes that will be paid by everybody on the profits made, from the fair concessionnaires, from the hotels, from the railroads, from the filling stations, and the gasoline distributors. Why, in my own State of Indiana there was $3,000,000 additional from the sale of gasoline. I am in favor of this authorization.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. And it will put more money in circulation.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; everywhere in the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. And that means prosperity.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Certainly; and it is worth $400,000 to get us to stop thinking about the depression. That is only one third of 1 cent per capita to all the people of the Nation, or one ninth of the cost of a single postage stamp. It is cheap medicine and good medicine against the depression.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come when we ought to begin to think soberly. If the things that my good friend the gentleman from Texas, TOM BLANTON, saw up yonder, and that he has detailed here today, exist, then this fair ought to have closed 3 months ago. Here is a proposition now to take $405,000 out of the Treasury of the National Government, when just a few days ago the Government had to withdraw its support from the men who have been on the pay roll for a few days, to take them out of dire distress, and they are today thrown back on the cities and counties all over this land, with no chance to get work. We have it in our power today to vote this money and to let them suffer; but I stand here as one man, as a representative of my people, to say that I do not propose to do it, regardless of who wants it. I am going to vote for that which I believe to be right. Here is a proposition voted on a moment ago for the Commissioner there to have another $2,500 car, and that is a fair sample of what they are going to do with the rest of it. It is camouflaged and covered up as to what they will do with it. What they want is the cold cash, and they will do the rest of it. The proposition now before the committee of cutting it down to $200,000 is simply a proposition to get that much money—if they cannot get $405,000, then they will take $200,000. If you will stay with this proposition and vote to adopt this amendment, and then stay with the next vote and vote to cut out the balance of it, you will do a service to your country that will be worth while. I should like to know how any of you will go back to your suffering people, which you will have to do in a few days, and look Bill Jones in the face and square yourselves. You will have him asking you why you did not do anything for him, and you will have to tell him that you voted $405,000 to carry on another World's Fair at Chicago. He will then tell you where to go and tell you where to head in, and that is coming now, boys, do not forget that. You are face to face with it in a few days, and I am glad of it, and I say further to you that we will have a record vote on this; and if you want to go down on the record as doing that kind of thing, well and good, but you will not find my name on the record with you in doing it—voting to take away from the suffering people and giving it to this rich city that has prospered so much.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Does the gentleman realize that he is asking one third of 1 cent from every person in the United States?

Mr. GLOVER. I realize that you have gotten about $50 from every man that has ever gone there. You have had enough, and you ought to be satisfied with it.

Mr. TRUAX. Was not that the Hoover policy—to spend ourselves into prosperity, and spend it in Chicago?

Mr. MILLARD. Oh, that is the Roosevelt policy; not the Hoover policy.

Mr. GLOVER. I do not care whose policy it is; I am against it. I am against wasting the money of the American people in such a way as this proposition would have us do.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I purposely refrained from making any remarks relative to the World's Fair appropriation until this particular time. I have listened attentively to the arguments advanced pro and con, for the approval or disapproval of this expenditure, and as a Member of Congress from the city of Chicago, naturally I am primarily interested in seeing that the amount of $405,000, as stated in the resolution, remains intact; but before I voiced my sentiments I desired to get the consensus of opinion of Members of the Congress representing districts all over the country relative to the advisability of the adoption of this resolution.

I was particularly interested in the argument advanced by my distinguished colleague from Texas, a man for whom I have the most profound respect as a parliamentarian, and whose opinion I value very highly, but I could not follow the logic of his argument when he insisted that because some foreign nations have defaulted in their payment of debts to the United States, the United States Government should forego any appropriation to making this World's Fair a success in Chicago.

Let me ask you Members of the House, Is it reasonable or just, because some of these foreign countries have failed in their obligations, to deny the people of America, to prevent the millions of school children in Chicago and throughout the entire United States, from having an opportunity for the great educational enlightenment which these exhibits of foreign nations gives them? These displays will afford them a privilege of inspection and an occasion to profit from their study and analysis.

From an educational standpoint alone I say that America owes an obligation to the school children and to the people of our Nation to pass this appropriation at this time. Taking it from an economic argument alone, as the distinguished gentleman from Indiana so forcibly stated a few moments ago, that during the World's Fair period the amount of gas tax collected by the State of Indiana amounted to $3,000,000.

This is not only an expediency proposition from an economic standpoint, which will benefit every State in the United States, but it is a patriotic duty to pass this appropriation. Let me make this appeal to the great farm bloc of America. When legislation comes before this House every Member from Chicago, every Member from the metropolitan areas throughout the United States supports measures to aid the agricultural sections of this country. I need not recall to your mind the question of flood control, the matter of drought relief, all questions pertaining to the advancement and betterment of the agricultural industry always find a sympathetic response from the Membership of the House residing in the large cities throughout the country.

I do not desire merely to speak in parochial terms, for this measure will not only benefit Chicago, it will not only aid the farming industry throughout the Nation, but it will be a monument of greatness in America. I daresay from a patriotic standpoint and from a standpoint of true Americanism this appropriation should not be reduced, but we should do our duty and authorize the expenditure of $405,000, as stated in the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KELLER) there were—ayes 79, noes 70.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. BLANTON and Mr. KELLER to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 92 and noes 90.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS of New York: Page 2, line 22, after the word "appropriated", insert "not to exceed"; and after the figures "$405,000" add the words "Providing, That no amount of money be expended by the Government for exhibits of the A.A.A., N.R.A., T.E.R.A., C.W.A., C.C.C., P.W.A., T.V.A., or other emergency relief administrations."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. The amendment mentions $405,000. It should mention $200,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment does not mention any figure.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it mentions $405,000. It should mention $200,000, because the bill has been amended.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I accept the modification.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be modified accordingly, without objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again read.

There being no objection, the Clerk again read the amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS of New York.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KVALE. The point of order is that the amendment is not in order for the reason that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas provided that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. BLANTON. No, the amendment is in order; but there is no debate permitted on it.

Mr. KVALE. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDREWS of New York) there were—ayes 15, noes 120.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the special Resolution No. 360, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker, having resumed the chair, Mr. FULLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3235) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes, and pursuant to House Resolution 360, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to the last section of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 22, strike out "$405,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$200,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Blanton amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 78, noes 77.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 181, nays 130, answered "present" 1, not voting 118, as follows:

FIRE PREVENTION

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, the Director of the Budget has just informed me that he is sending forward through appropriate channels a supplemental estimate of $600,000 to be expended throughout the various States in further carrying out the provisions of the Clark-McNary bill dealing with fire-prevention work. The Director of the Budget is taking this step because of the fire hazards of a dry spring, and it is going to be welcome news indeed to those States.

I sincerely trust the President will expedite the transmission of the recommendation to Congress in order that it may be quickly enacted into law and these funds made available. [Applause.]

EQUALIZATION OF TAXES

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing, I send to the desk a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 38

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 18,000 additional copies of Public Law No. 216, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes", of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate document room, 2,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

REVISION OF AIR-MAIL LAWS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 373.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3170, an act to revise air-mail laws; that after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] the usual 30 minutes on the rule for him to control.

Mr. Speaker, I shall consume very little time in presenting in its initial stage this resolution to the House. The legislation which this rule makes in order is a measure with which all the Members of the House are familiar. As I understand it the bill was reported unanimously. If I am in error about this I wish to be corrected.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; if he can hear what I am saying.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand that since the committee reported the bill unanimously there has been a radical change in the bill. Is not this a fact?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was not familiar with that fact. I did not become acquainted with the change in the situation. My recollection is that when the chairman of the committee appeared before the Committee on Rules, asking for this resolution, it was stated that the bill then under consideration and which had been reported was reported unanimously by the committee. If subsequent developments have changed that situation, then, of course, I withdraw the statement that it is a unanimous report.

The whole air-mail controversy, of course, is a matter that has aroused a great deal of interest in the country, and I think that, rather unfortunately, some phases of the discussion with reference to it aroused unjustified bitterness and passion. I trust that the atmosphere has in a measure been cleared away by the passage of time and by a calmer opportunity to consider the real controversy involved; and I hope that this bill which will shortly be presented by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will be considered by this House as free as possible from the kind of consideration that characterized the original discussion upon it. It is a matter that has been very acutely debated, and long and extended hearings have been held on the question of whether or not the Postmaster General by authority of the President was justified upon the facts presented in canceling these air-mail contracts. This will probably continue to be a matter of great controversy, particularly upon the stump in the coming elections.

I want to take the broad position, because I have undertaken to give some consideration to the study of the record in this case that, upon a calm and dispassionate examination of the facts that were laid before the Postmaster General and the President, they were fully and adequately justified in canceling those contracts.

I know there are many who will disagree with his statement, but I believe that if the facts that were presented to the Senate investigating committee were presented to any jury of 12 impartial and disinterested jurors in any section of the United States of America, such a jury would undoubtedly have justified, upon the facts presented, a verdict of guilty of collusion and fraud with reference to those contracts. As I have stated, however, that will be a matter that we cannot settle in this forum.

The House has given this matter very careful and very detailed consideration, although by the information just imparted by the gentleman from Massachusetts there may now be some sharp division of opinion with reference to this legislation. I feel sure that the chairman of this committee and his associates will be able to explain to the satisfaction of the Members the details of this legislation. The purpose of the rule, of course, is merely to make this legislation in order.

This is an open rule providing for 1 hour of general debate, then absolute freedom of action under the 5-minute rule of the House. I trust there will be no opposition to the adoption of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear most of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and I am sorry, because he is generally worth listening to and generally knows what he is talking about. The only part of his remarks that I heard was to the effect that the air-mail contracts had been canceled for fraud and collusion and if the question was submitted to any 12 men upon the facts that have been developed in the Senate investigation the charge of fraud and collusion would be upheld. Of course, that opens up a very wide argument, and somewhat political.

Before indulging in such remarks, may I say that as far as my limited observation is concerned I think the bill before the House under this rule is a 100-percent improvement over the Senate bill and that the House cannot give too much credit to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Each one of them individually knows 100 percent more about aviation than the Postmaster General ever will know no matter how long he remains in office. These two Members of the House together with their committee have written a bill that is fair, honest, honorable, and nonpartisan, and one which I believe, with the exception of a proposed amendment, will be welcomed by the American public who are the disinterested parties. I am inclined to support this bill. However, I make one reservation. I desire to hear from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], who is the highest authority on this legislation on our side of the House. He objects to any ratification of the temporary air-mail contracts by act of Congress. In my own estimation the other parts of the bill outweighs that, particularly the part which repudiates Postmaster General Farley and his high-handed and dictatorial action in canceling the air-mail contracts without a hearing or trial, and upholds the contention of Colonel Lindbergh and others who claimed that those contractors who had their contracts canceled should have a right to a court review.

That is now written into this bill. It also repudiates the Postmaster General and upholds Colonel Lindbergh in the contention that those officials whose company contracts were canceled should have the right to rebid for the new contracts. Those two provisions are written into this bill; and, after all, that was the main contention over the cancelation of the contracts, which was simply that the contracts were canceled on the claim of fraud and collusion without a hearing and without a trial, which those of us who oppose that procedure say is unjust and un-American. Evidently the committee thinks likewise, because they have seen fit to write into this bill a clause giving the right to a court review and also to prevent the disqualification of those air-mail officials who attended the 1930 conference.

If the Postmaster General had acknowledged this in the beginning there would have been no trouble whatever.

If when he had attempted to cancel these contracts on the ground of fraud and collusion, and had been forced to prove fraud and collusion by going to court, then there would not have been this great uproar from one end of the country to the other that has not downed. The arbitrary action of Postmaster General Farley is resented by all Americans who believe in the constitutional right to a fair hearing and trial. Instead the air-mail contractors were tried and condemned by Postmaster General Farley on grounds of favoritism without a hearing under the act of 1872, which permits cancelation of mail contracts for fraud and denies the contractor the right to rebid within 5 years. The original gigantic blunder that resulted in a most unfair, arbitrary, and dictatorial concelation of the air-mail contracts without hearing and without trial, has been succeeded by a series of blunders in a vicious circle, each trying to remedy the original blunder and each increasing the previous blunder until we get back to this fairly constructive measure that may undo the wrong and injustice that has been done.

As you all remember, after the air-mail contracts were canceled, the air-mail routes were turned over to the Army Air Corps without even asking the Secretary of War, a Democratic member of the Cabinet, whether the Army Air Corps was qualified to handle the air mail or asking the Chief of Staff his opinion.

It was transferred to the Army Air Corps overnight, with the result that 12 gallant young Army officers were killed carrying out the orders of their Government in a useless and unnecessary sacrifice of life because of a series of blunders.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. These Army officers have gone to their death largely because of the original blunder. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEARIN. May I ask the gentleman to tell us whether or not he thinks the Army Air Corps was qualified and capable of carrying the mail?

Mr. FISH. I shall be very glad to answer the question. I think the blame ought to be fixed, because it has been placed most unjustly on the Congress and "upon a Democratic Congress", because this House has had a Democratic majority for the last 4 years.

Here is an editorial from the Seattle Star, and I do not know whether this is a partisan paper or not. It reads as follows:

Congressman HAMILTON FISH cries loudly that is is a crime to send half-trained Army aviators out in defective planes to carry the mails.

What Congressman FISH forgets is that if the Army flyers are not properly trained, and if they haven't enough modern planes, then the fault is not the President's, but lies right in front of the door of Congress.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have not answered the previous question yet. I just read the charge made against a Democratic Congress.

Mr. TRUAX. I thought the gentleman would yield when he finished the editorial.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman has to go a long ways from New York to Seattle in order to get an editorial substantiating his position.

If there is any fault anywhere, is it not in the preceding administration's weakness and the failure of that administration to properly equip and properly train the Army air pilots to fly blind and failure to furnish the planes with the instruments that every plane should be equipped with?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is playing right into my hands. I think I can answer him very aptly and very decisively, and I do not do this necessarily in a partisan way, although it will be interpreted as being partisan. The fact cannot be denied in spite of the fact that we are in the midst of a government by propaganda. I doubt if what I say will even be mentioned in the press, but in any event it is merely a statement of the fact and not the usual propaganda that emanates from the publicity agents paid out of the Treasury to cover up the facts.

The Congress of the United States a year ago, after careful consideration of the needs of the Army Air Corps for maintenance and operation, not for the purchase of planes, but for maintenance and operation, including flying time, the training of the members of the Army Air Corps to fly blind, to fly by means of the radio, night flying, and so forth, after committee hearings in the House and after consideration on the floor of the House and then in a committee in the Senate and then again by consideration in the Senate, Congress appropriated for that purpose the sum of $15,195,814.

This was the deliberate and careful action of the Congress for maintenance and operation of the Army Air Corps. Now, what happened? Under the provisions of the economy bill the President of the United States, together with the Director of the Budget, cut this appropriation more than 50 percent, down to $7,393,416.

Mr. TRUAX. Did the gentleman vote for the economy bill?

Mr. FISH. These are simply the facts. The Congress did its full duty. It is unfair to the Democratic Congress and to the Republican Members in the minority to place this blame upon the Congress of the United States because the President cut the congressional appropriations for the maintenance of the Army Air Corps. It must be self evident that the President, using this power, which was given him by the Congress, but certainly not for this specific purpose, helped to destroy the efficiency of the Army Air Corps and provided a maximum flying time of only 25 minutes per day, and then we wonder why the Army Air Corps pilots could not fly the air mail as well and safely as the commercial pilots.

My time is limited, but anyone could talk for half an hour on the subject of why the Army air pilots were not able to fly the air mail without great loss of life and planes.

The main reason was lack of appropriations, because the Budget Director and the President made a serious blunder and applied false economy.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. TRUAX. Did the gentleman vote for the economy bill?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman yielded to me. The Air Corps Act went into effect in 1926, did it not?

Mr. FISH. I believe it did.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; the act to strengthen the Army generally, and also the Army Air Corps, and what the gentleman is talking about with respect to the economy bill happened in 1933. What happened during the other 7 years?

Mr. FISH. I am telling the gentleman what happened.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What happened from 1926 to 1933?

Mr. FISH. The Army Air Corps was built up and new planes provided. It had larger appropriations and under those appropriations, of course, it was more efficient; but let me remind the gentleman that of the 12 young Army officers who went to their death flying the air mail, 8 of them had less than 1 year's experience from the time they were graduated from Kelly Field.

Every one of these Army pilots, or, rather, 8 out of the 12, the others having had only 2 years' experience, were operating under the present appropriations. You cannot deprive pilots of time and experience in flying and then expect the highest efficiency.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Leaving out that end of it with respect to the young men who were killed, what were the conditions prior to 1933 of the Army Air Corps for 7 years under Republican administration?

Mr. FISH. In the first place, we have had 4 years of a Democratic Congress, if the gentleman wants to go into that, and if the gentleman desires to place the blame on Congress, he has the right to his own opinion, but the facts do not warrant it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am placing it on a Republican administration.

Mr. FISH. I am placing it at this time where it belongs, and it is undeniable, whether this is partisan or not, we did our duty and appropriated the sum required, after proper consideration, but the appropriation was reduced 50 percent by the President.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. ELTSE of California rose.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] wants to know if I voted for the economy bill. Certainly, I voted for the economy bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Then the gentleman is just as much responsible for this as anyone else.

Mr. FISH. Not at all. I believed as much in the President of the United States as the gentleman did, and I believed he would use that authority wisely, justly, and properly. He was badly advised in cutting the appropriation just as he was badily advised by Postmaster General Farley and his mystery men to cancel the air-mail contracts.

Mr. TRUAX. But the gentleman did vote for the very thing about which he is complaining.

Mr. FISH. I voted to give the President the power to make economies, but not to destroy the efficiency of the Army Air Corps.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. ELTSE of California. As a matter of fact, the gentleman is discussing the question of the ability of the Army men to fly the air mail rather than to act as Army aviators, and is there not a vast difference between them?

Mr. FISH. Of course, as I just told the gentleman, if that subject is to be discussed, it would take at least half an hour. Everybody knows that the Army Air Corps is trained to fly in formation and trained in combat work, machine-gun fighting, and bombing, and not to make long-distance flights, which require an entirely different type of machine and experience in cross-country flying. They have not had practice in this type of flying. This was the reason, together with the lack of appropriations, for the fatalities that occurred.

Mr. ELTSE of California. And the conditions that had prevailed before were entirely different.

Mr. FISH. Let me quote here a great aviation authority. This is the telegram that I tried to get in the RECORD from Colonel Lindbergh to President Roosevelt, and is his original protest, explaining his views against the cancelation of the air-mail contracts. It demonstrates a complete understanding of the air-mail situation and is the real American point of view.

Your action affects fundamentally the industry to which I have devoted the last 12 years of my life. Therefore I respectfully present to you the following considerations:

"The personal and business lives of American citizens have been built up around the right of just trial before conviction. Your order of cancelation of all air-mail contracts condemns the largest portion of our commercial aviation without just trial.

"The officers of a number of the organizations affected have not been given the opportunity to a hearing and improper acts by many companies affected have not been established.

"No one can rightfully object to drastic action being taken, provided the guilt implied is first established; but it is the right of any American individual or organization to receive fair trial.

"Your present action does not discriminate between innocence and guilt and places no premium on honest business.

"Americans have set their lives in building in this country the finest commercial air lines in the world. The United States today is in the lead in almost every branch of commercial aviation.

"In America we have commercial aircraft, engines, equipment, and air lines superior to those of any other country. The greatest part of this progress has been brought about through the air mail. Certainly most individuals in the industry believe that this development has been carried on in cooperation with the existing Government and according to law.

"If this is not the case, it seems the right of the industry and in keeping with American tradition that facts to the contrary be definitely established. Unless these facts leave no alternative, condemnation of commercial aviation by cancelation of all mail contracts and the use of the Army on commercial air lines will unnecessarily and greatly damage all American aviation."

The only answer to this telegram to the President was a short telegram from Postmaster General Farley to Colonel Lindbergh virtually telling him he did not know all the facts, or, in other words, what he was speaking about. The American public have been waiting for 3 months, all in vain, to have the Postmaster General tell them the facts and substantiate his claims of fraud and collusion.

Mr. McCORMACK. Without regard to the share of responsibility, the gentleman favors this particular bill?

Mr. FISH. I do. But I want to listen to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]. I believe this bill is 100 percent better than the Senate bill, and 0.9 of the provisions are sound. It repudiates the contention of the Postmaster General as to the cancelation of the contracts without permitting a court review.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] is not going to offer an amendment. As a matter of fact he is opposed to the amendment that will be offered.

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman very much. I cannot agree with the distinguished gentleman from Alabama over the air-mail cancelations. I am convinced the cancelations were the result of politics and a desire to smear the party that was in power in 1930. Not being able to develop sufficient facts as to fraud and corruption, not one man the Postmaster General claimed as guilty has ever been put on trial.

(The time of Mr. FISH having expired, he was yielded 5 minutes more by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].)

Mr. FISH. Now, you ask us on the other side to believe that there was no politics in the cancelation of the air-mail contracts. Who recommended the cancelation of the contracts? It was not the President of the United States. It is not fair to blame him, because he was misled by Mr. Farley, the Postmaster General of the United States. He is chairman of the National Committee of the Democratic Party, the dispenser of patronage and favoritism, day in and day out, except when he is a statesman and a member of the Cabinet on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No. I am afraid the gentleman might go further than I want to go, and I want to protect Mr. Farley. [Laughter.] The chairman of the national committee and likewise the chairman of the State committee in New York, Mr. Farley, saw the big opportunity and he misled the President. The President, of course, has not the time to consider the details and ferret out the facts of every issue and permitted cancelation without a full knowledge of the facts. That has been the whole trouble from the beginning. I am also inclined to believe that Mr. Farley was misled by selfish interests and by Silliman Evans, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, a former vice president of the American Airways. It is all sheer politics, followed up by vindictive, partisan reprisals, all of which constitutes a radical departure of American practices.

Political reprisals have become the order of the day against any critic of the administration. The former Secretary of the Treasury under three Republican administrations, Andrew Mellon, who reduced the national debt from $26,000,000,000 down to $16,000,000,000, is the most recent political sacrifice. He was selected to go to trial in order again to smear the Republican Party and possibly to influence the primary election in the State of Pennsylvania next week. This un-American policy is a new form of terrorism that has no place in our country. It is a kind of American inquisition or a transplanted Soviet chekka to intimidate American citizens who dare to criticize the administration or to express their views publicly. Mr. Mellon recently said, "Had I not been a member of the Cabinet of the last three administrations, I would not now be the object of this extraordinary procedure."

It is obvious to fair-minded people that the administration tried in every way to discredit Mr. Mellon. But the American people, represented by the grand jury, are not so easily misled and refused to be a party to such a frame-up. That is only one example of what followed from the cancelation of the air-mail contracts. It was simply a question of making might superior to right. The Postmaster General and the Attorney General, both former national chairmen of the Democratic Party, decided they could do almost anything with their autocratic powers, even to setting up a novel system of terrorism. Why, even Colonel Lindbergh had his income tax investigated after he criticized the administration. That was not sufficient, so, of course, now they have turned to Mr. Mellon. Mr. MacCracken was investigated in the Senate and condemned, I think, to spend 10 days in jail; whereas his partner, a man named Frederick Lee, of the law firm of MacCracken & Lee—the man who actually turned over the letters to Colonel Britten when he came in their office, the man who permitted Colonel Britten to take those letters which the Senate committee complains about—has just been appointed by the Democratic Party as chief counsel in the Federal Alcohol Control Administration as a part of his reward, whereas MacCracken, a Republican, gets his by a little quiet rest in jail.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question on the bill?

Mr. FISH. I would prefer to have you submit your question to a member of the committee.

Mr. MOTT. I thought the gentleman might be able to answer the question.

Mr. FISH. I think I could.

Mr. MOTT. I want to know if there is any material difference between the provisions of this bill and the provisions of the law under which the private air-mail operators were operating?

Mr. FISH. Oh, yes. This provides for only a 1-year contract and for the lowest bidder. Oh, there is lots of difference, particularly as regards a right of court review and permission for officials of companies whose contracts have been canceled to submit new bids.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS].

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to another of those frantic tirades against the present administration such as we have been hearing so frequently here on the floor during the last few weeks. You have heard characterizations of this bill which do not apply to it at all. The statement is made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that this bill, recommended to you unanimously by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, repudiates the action of the Postmaster General. If this bill were in any respect a repudiation of any action of Mr. Farley, the Postmaster General, I say to you that it never would have received the requisite supporting votes of the loyal majority membership of our committee. I presume the clause in the bill to which the gentleman refers, when he says it repudiates the Postmaster General's action, is the one that allows these contractors who had their contracts annulled to sue if they choose in the Court of Claims of the United States. That clause is in the Senate bill, as well as in the House bill, and it has the approval of the Post Office Department. It is not merely a permissive clause for these suits to be instituted; it virtually dares them to sue. That is what it does, and I do not believe any one of them is going to take the dare.

I, for one, am perfectly willing, if this is to be put upon the basis of partisan politics, to have the record of the present administration in air-mail matters compared with that of the past administration; and we now have ample experience to count upon to obtain the record of both of them. Heretofore we have had only predictions of what would happen in the event of a reletting of these air-mail contracts, but within the last few weeks a convincing reality has transpired. We on this side have always maintained that excessive payments were made to the old operators. In the last year of the Hoover administration that part of the cost of the Air Mail Service paid out to the carriers alone was over $19,000,000. In the first year of this administration that was cut to $14,000,000, and on the basis of the contracts which are now being let by the Postmaster General, the cost for the service for next year will be reduced to about $9,000,000. Not only is the cost cut down to less than half what it was 2 years ago, but the service will be greatly extended. Upward of 3,000 miles of air-mail routes are provided for under these new contracts over that which you had in 1932. Four additional States which have never had air-mail service will now have it provided for them, and the route mileage has been increased from 25,248 to 28,548 miles. Never before has the Nation been so well provided with air-mail facilities. Oh, they will say that there are fewer schedules. There are less frequent schedules on some of the lines but there is adequate service on all of them.

In those frequent schedules on the old lines we find one of the tricks of the old law—more frequent service was provided than many communities or lines needed—and the mail shipments were divided into more than one trip in order to get more pay for the contractor. The new bill guards against further abuses of that kind.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. ROMJUE. I suggest that 21 additional cities will be served under the present system.

Mr. DOBBINS. I am very glad that the gentleman has brought that out. Service is now provided for many cities that never had it before, and still we have cut the cost to less than half of what it was.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, that is especially true of West Virginia. For the first time in the State's history we are to be served. We are almost up against the Nation's Capital, yet in the previous administrations we have been entirely forgotten in Air Mail Service. Under the new set-up West Virginia at last comes into its own.

Mr. DOBBINS. I thank the gentleman for his comment, and am glad that his great State is to benefit by this new deal for the air mail.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is there anything in this bill to prohibit an air-mail carrier whose contract was canceled for violation of law from coming in and bidding for a contract and receiving it, if his bid is the low bid and the best one?

Mr. DOBBINS. Instead of there being anything in the law to prevent it, I will say to the gentleman, in line with the prediction I made in debate on the temporary Army bill, this bill expressly provides that the former carriers may bid, notwithstanding the provisions of the law of 1872. It removes the disqualification from all of the lines throughout the country, so far as anything that has occurred in reference to past contracts is concerned.

Mr. MOTT. Then why were those contracts canceled if, under this law, everyone is guaranteed the right to come in and carry the mail again?

Mr. DOBBINS. The reason this provision appears in the law, notwithstanding the fact that those contracts were annulled, is because of the fact that the fault in the fraudulent contracts let in 1930 lay more with Postmaster General Brown than it did with the contractors. [Applause.] They were invited by him to come to the Post Office Department and divide up this appropriation among themselves as they saw fit. They would have been more than human if they had not yielded to his enticing liberality.

Mr. MOTT. Under this law you propose to invite every one of those violators to come in and get another contract.

Mr. DOBBINS. We permit them to try for one on their merits, in clean competitive bidding, and not collusively as they did before. We invite them also to come to the Court of Claims and sue for damages for annulment of their former contracts, if they dare.

Mr. MOTT. But you guarantee in section 5 that they shall have this right?

Mr. DOBBINS. We do. We remove the disqualification created by the law of 1872.

Mr. MOTT. And you let them come in now. What was the purpose of putting them out, in the first place, if 6 months after that you are going to invite them all in again?

Mr. DOBBINS. You seem to overlook the fact that we do not propose to restore their fraudulent contracts [applause], where they came in without competition, and where the contracts were let to the high bidders instead of to the low bidders. Let me read something that tends to explain why the old contracts were not very much favored by the present administration when the light of day was turned on the practices resorted to in obtaining them. Here is a letter written by the former Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Irving Glover, to his deputy in Washington. This was written in September 1930 when he was speaking about an offer—the high bid, mind you—which he had accepted in defiance of the fact that a much lower bid had been received by him. This is what he said:

> Halliburton is going after Letson, and even Letson's stockholders do not approve of this action.
> Do not know what you have told the Postmaster General, but there is no use recommending the award be made to the high bidder and then getting cold feet and saying you will agree that we should throw out all the bids. We had all better stick together or we will all hang together.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Glover was something of a prophet, because it was not very long after that until they did all hang together. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. I am not interested in Mr. Glover, but I am interested in what this law provides.

Mr. DOBBINS. Let me finish. Continuing, he said:

> Believe we could make award to the Western Air and T.A.T., and make a statement along with it that no one would object to except the unsuccessful bidders.

He felt he could fool the country, but he knew the unsuccessful bidder would see through his deceptive statement.

Mr. MOTT. It is these same bidders you are letting back into their contracts by the provisions of this bill. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that at the time the air-mail contracts were canceled it was stated by the Post Office Department and by the President that no carrier whose contract had been canceled for violation of the law, would be allowed to carry the mail again? Is that not correct?

Mr. DOBBINS. No. I do not think that is exactly the statement of the Postmaster General. The President made no statement on the subject. The statement of Postmaster General Farley, after these contracts had been canceled because they had been entered into in fraud or collusion, was made in response to an inquiry as to whether those whose contracts were annulled would be permitted to bid again. He merely referred, without comment of his own, to the previous law of 1872, which provides that where a contract has been so annulled the contractor cannot bid again for 5 years.

Mr. MOTT. Well, whatever the contract was, he said they could not bid.

Mr. DOBBINS. He did not say that directly. He merely called attention to this law.

Mr. MOTT. But in this bill you are guaranteeing him the right to bid again, notwithstanding the provisions of the law of 1872. Is that not correct?

Mr. DOBBINS. I think that is substantially correct.

Mr. MOTT. Let me ask the gentleman one more question: If in defending this bill now you are not repudiating every contention that was made by the Postmaster General and by the administration at the time the contracts were canceled?

Mr. DOBBINS. Oh, if I have not been able to convince my friend that the annulment of a fraudulent contract and then giving the right to the person who held that contract to come in and bid upon a clean, competitive, honest basis is proper as an act of amnesty, and if the gentleman calls that repudiation, I suppose we will have to let him take what comfort he can in his own peculiar interpretation of what this bill proposes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS] has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. ROMJUE. What the administration did say was that it did not intend to award contracts to men who were engaged in fraud. That is what the administration said.

I may say to the gentleman from Oregon that this bill simply leaves the matter open for bidding purposes. There is no assurance carried by the bill that any man who committed fraud is going to get one of these contracts.

Mr. DOBBINS. I have tried to make that plain to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ROMJUE. The trouble with the gentleman from Oregon is that the gentleman does not want to see it in this light.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill permits all who have equipment and experience to bid upon a fair and equal basis.

This same man Gove, Deputy Second Assistant Postmaster General, is the gentleman to whom one of the officials of a favored air line loaned $10,000, taking a note which he tore up. Gove, during the progress of the collusive proceedings, in a confidential telegram to his chief, referred to the low bidders as "second-story men."

In other words, the men who proposed to do the business of the Government at a reasonable cost in that heyday of corruption were looked upon with contempt and were classed as burglars. Then the contracts were awarded to the high bidders with the thought in the minds of these unfaithful servants that they could frame up some statement to put before the country that would seemingly justify their action. That is very much in contrast with what is being done under this administration. We have proven it by the fair and open competitive bids that have been received and acted upon, and will continue to prove it throughout the long and happy years that this administration and its successors of like political thought and personal honesty will continue to manage the business of the Post Office Department.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman referred to "second-story crooks." They are usually regarded as the lower grade of crooks, yet these fellows who got the spoils were the big burglars. I am glad the Air Mail Service is now under a Postmaster General who makes them submit honest, competitive bids.

Mr. DOBBINS. Indeed, they are going to have to put in honest bids; and they are going to be honestly treated in the consideration of their bids, and they will be required to render honest service when they get a contract. But a more important thing is the fact that there will be a new deal for the taxpayer by giving him a break in the matter of the cost of this service. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. WEARIN. It seems only fitting and proper that we should adopt this rule at the present time, for it is a formal proposition to make the consideration of this legislation in order.

I was interested in the statement of the gentleman from New York in answer to my question as to whether or not, in his opinion, the Army Air Corps was capable of carrying the mails. He failed to make a satisfactory reply. Regardless of what happens to this bill, we ought to keep before the country the fact that something is wrong in connection with the charge that the Army Air Corps is unable to carry the mail. I think it is high time that we find out if it is true; and if so, why? I hope that before we go very much farther the answer will be forthcoming.

There was a time a few years ago when a certain gentleman from New York named Thomas L. Hill made serious charges with reference to the activities of the Air Trust in selling improper equipment to the United States Government for the use of the Army Air Corps. If there is any reason why our Army was unable to render the service it was called upon to render in this emergency, it was due to that very fact, and to nothing else.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman know that a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, under the leadership of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] has been sitting mornings, afternoons, and almost into the evenings, day after day for about 2 months, studying this very problem? We are not yet fully ready to report, but we hope to be soon.

Mr. WEARIN. I understand so.

Mr. KVALE. This is only the second time in almost 2 months that the committee members have been able to attend the sessions of the House.

Mr. WEARIN. I am very glad the committee is doing so much good work.

The gentleman from New York referred to the economy bill and the reductions made with reference to the appropriations for the Air Corps. Mr. Speaker, that was a peculiar statement, in my opinion, for the gentleman to make, for if the Air Corps was unable to carry the mail it certainly was not occasioned by that cut; it was occasioned by what happened a long time before, during the 12 years preceding. We ought to keep this fact before us.

Now, going on a little further into the matter of these charges that have been placed against the Air Trust because of its activities in the United States Government, I want to say that the said charges were placed on file with a committee of the United States Senate under the chairmanship of Senator CARAWAY, but, strange as it may seem, they and the statements substantiating them have never been located in the last year or so, although many of us have been endeavoring to find them. I happen to have, though, in my files the original charges that were made. To my knowledge they have never been answered.

A special dispatch from Washington to the November 9, 1929, issue of Air Transportation, an authoritative aeronautical magazine published at 34 North Crystal Street, East Stroudsburg, Pa., with editorial offices at 1265 Broadway, New York, contained, in part, the following statement:

Charges associating Senator Hiram Bingham, of Connecticut, and the White House itself with an Air Trust lobby have been made by Thomas L. Hill, president of the American Society for the Promotion of Aviation, in a letter to Senator T. H. Caraway, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee.

The letter declares that Senator Bingham, who is president of the National Aeronautic Association, is the "mouthpiece" of the air lobby and that an inquiry into the activities of the lobby will show it has political, financial, and social connections that will astound the country.

In the same story Mr. Hill was quoted as saying:

I therefore publicly charge that—

1. A gigantic Air Trust has been built up in America and that this trust is operated through the workings of the National Aeronautical Association, Aircraft Manufacturers Association, and Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce. A powerful lobby has been created, of which Senator Bingham, of Connecticut, president of the National Aeronautical Association, is the "mouthpiece", as per exhibit A.

2. The Air Trust and its lobby have worked for the passage of legislation that diverted millions of the Government's money to the pockets of the trust despite public protests, as shown by exhibit B.

3. Inferior aircraft, which has taken the lives of scores of pilots, has been forced on the Army and Navy Air Services by the Air Trust, despite the fact that superior and cheaper airplanes could have been secured from independent aircraft manufacturers (exhibit C). Recent developments absolutely substantiate this assertion.

4. Senator Bingham's position as head of the National Aeronautic Association was manipulated by interests profiting largely from Government aircraft contracts. Exhibits D and E.

5. A person publicly denounced for the part he played in diverting aircraft contracts in 1917–18 is now securing large contracts from the Government and is constantly associated in a social manner with those of the Army and Navy Air Services who are in a position to give his company contracts. Exhibit F.

6. Advertising contracts for Government airplanes were not advertised as per House bill No. 10827—Public, No. 446, Sixty-ninth Congress—and this fact was so reported in the February (1927) issue of Aero Digest.

7. Advertising contracts with aviation magazines were used by members of the Air Trust to control the policy of these magazines, and there is public evidence that the refusal of a magazine editor to meet the wishes of one of the group resulted in advertising being withdrawn from the magazine. Exhibit G.

8. As a unit of the Air Trust the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce did strive to prevent members of the aviation industry from participating in the aircraft show, held in New York City, February 1929, by the Aviators' Post, American Legion, No. 743. This post is composed of war-time flyers, and their past or present patriotic interests cannot be questioned.

9. An investigation of the activities will show that agents of the Air Trust have been placed in positions of honor and trust in the service of this Government and have used these positions to obtain advantages for the group. This is best exemplified by the giving of contracts to the Air Trust of higher figures than offered by independents. Exhibit H.

10. Confidential information relative to aircraft inventions and developments for the past years has been taken from Government departments by agents of the Air Trust, and that independent inventors will not send their products to governmental laboratories for testing, fearful of publicity relative to their work, which they know, from past experience, will be stolen by agents of the organized air group. Exhibit I.

11. Test by the Department of Commerce which would allow independents to manufacture aircraft and aircraft engines has been purposely delayed to allow favored companies to secure licenses on their products and put these products into production and sale. Millions of dollars' loss has been caused to small independent manufacturers by this work. Exhibit J.

12. The use of Government air fields, equipment, and soldiers has been used for private purposes, and that paid admissions were charged at these fields in direct opposition to the law.

13. In general, members of this group not only have placed their representatives in positions of honor, trust, and profit in the Government but have used the machinery of the Government for propaganda purposes that serve to convince the taxpayers that they, the Air Trust, are giving genuine service to the Government.

14. Through Nation-wide paid propagandists they have in many cases duped the press, and their paid representatives, through the use of money, liquor, and other means, have influenced officers of the Army, Navy, Department of Commerce, and representatives of the press.

15. To support my charges I herewith hand you a list of names, with the suggestion that these men be subpenaed immediately to prove the truth or falsity of my statement. Exhibit K.

Where are the statements referred to? Let us find them. The committee of which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] has spoken should find them and call Mr. Hill, of New York, before it if he still lives to justify or disavow his charges against former Senator Bingham and other people in connection with the United States Government.

The gentleman from New York who preceded me a few moments ago and the lady from Massachusetts have had considerable to say today, as usual, about the pilots who were killed carrying the mail. We all regret that very much, but why do not they have something to say about all of the 63 fatalities that occurred in the Air Corps from March 18, 1933, through March 7, 1934? I have in my files the following letter from Brig. Gen. O. Westover:

MARCH 19, 1934.

Hon. OTHA D. WEARIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. WEARIN: In compliance with your telephonic request made to Maj. Asa N. Duncan on Saturday, March 17, 1934, there is attached hereto a list of fatalities in the Air Corps as a result of airplane crashes for 12 months starting March 18, 1933, and ending March 17, 1934.

Thanking you for your interest in the matter, I am,

Yours very truly,

O. WESTOVER,
Brigadier General, Air Corps,
Acting Chief of the Air Corps.

(R.A.) Regular Army.
(MO) indicates accident which occurred on scheduled mail run.
(MA) indicates accident which occurred during mail administrative flight.
(MT) indicates accident which occurred during mail training (in the above list, all training accidents were on assigned routes).
(ME) indicates accident which occurred during testing of flying equipment.

Mr. WEARIN. Now, why does not the gentleman from New York and the lady from Massachusetts talk about the 53 fatalities not connected with flying the mail that occurred during the 12-month period preceding the date of March 17? Can it be they are afraid their attempt to do so may bring out the fact that the charges of Thomas T. Hill, just quoted, are true? Can it be they are afraid the present administration may discover that the Air Trust has had a "hook-up" with officials during the past 12 years through which it has sold a lot of improper equipment to the Air Corps? If that be true, then there is some real illegal murder.

Now that some of my colleagues insist upon talking about accidents to flyers in the Air Corps, let us stop and have a look at accidents occurring in the field of private and commercial flying. The complete stories with reference to the above wrecks are available and would be inserted here in the record but for the fact that I think a summary is sufficient and much more economical.

It should be evident from the above that what some people want to do when they begin talking about the few accidents occuring in the air corps during the time it carried the mail is not to express real sympathy for the men or facts but to drag a red herring across the trail in order to deceive the public. They want to raise a smoke screen to hide the graft the Air Trust has been garnering until such time as Mr. Farley canceled their contracts in accordance with the terms provided therein.

Certain interests have cooperated and spent millions of dollars aiding in one of the most infamous campaigns of propaganda that has ever been directed at the people and Congress. I have in my files literally dozens of copies of editorials from various newspapers that have been sent to the Members of this House in an effort to warp their judgment and place the administration in a false light. Most of the stuff was received in my office in envelops bearing the return address of the Transcontinental & Western Air Corporation. What business, other than an ulterior one, does that outfit have in aiding in such a campaign? If their efforts to imply inability on the part of the Air Corps to carry the mail because of improper equipment is true then lets find out who sold us the stuff, who bought it, and what reason they had for doing so.

Mr. Speaker, the question of whether or not the United States is in a position to legislate with reference to air mail is the matter which is to be discussed under the bill made in order by this rule. I am inclined to be of the opinion that we should have permitted the Air Corps to continue carrying the mail until we complete our investigations and settle upon a method of punishing the offenders; but the question now before the House is whether the bill revised under the leadership of the able Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is of the type and character which warrants the support of this Congress. Much can be said in its favor. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this rule will pass and be accepted by the Congress in order that we may take up consideration of this all-important question at the present time pending completion of the work undertaken by our investigating committees, at which time I hope it will be possible for the taxpayers to recover any improper subsidies that have been awarded to the interests back of the big air-transport companies.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the rest of my time to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The Chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. BANKHEAD, said that we should not speak about this problem with bitterness in this debate. It is impossible not to feel bitterly about what has gone on in the past. It is not because I am a Republican or because you are Democrats. Our cry has always been, "If fraud be found, punish the guilty, not the innocent." Many Democrats may feel just as bitterly for the blunders in connection with the ruthless cancelation of the air-mail contracts without warning and without a hearing. They feel just as badly as I do for the fallen pilots. What do you think of the bitterness of those families? What do you think of the bitterness of those men who have been flying the air mail over unknown routes, the men who went out in bad weather unequipped in any way? They did so without complaint. They had a remarkable record in spite of all this, and you on the other side know that. It was very tragic for them. The experiment cost the lives of 12 men; their tombstones bear mute testimony for all time of tragedy and the folly of the administration in this matter.

I should like to pay tribute to the Army pilots who have flown the mail. I have talked to commercial pilots about the matter, and there has not been one who has not agreed with me that the Army men have done a remarkable job in flying over unknown routes with unequipped planes. The Army men fly well, and you know that as well as I. In formation flying and in combat flying they are among the best in the world. We have every reason to be proud of them. We have every reason to be proud of Lieutenant Quesado, who flew the last mail across the country in almost record time. I have flown with him and have the greatest admiration for his ability.

Some weeks ago, rather than entertain my joint resolution on this subject, the Democrats adjourned the House in 13 minutes. People have written me from all parts of the country, stating: "Thank Heaven, you have the courage to say what you think. We have been living in fear and do not dare say anything." That means that business is living in fear. It means that business men do not know what the Government may do in the cancelation of their contracts. They feel that the honor of the Government in business may be a thing of the past.

The people of the country, the taxpayers who pay the bills, do not need to be reminded of the cost to them in the loss of Government property, the destruction of expensive airplanes and the expensive operating costs under the Army's carrying the air mail. They are conscious of the damage done to aviation and to the airplane industry.

I remind the Members that since the Army took over the air mail they have flown four times less mileage, which, of course, was not their fault. The following Government statistics prove this:

	Total route mileage	Daily trip mileage	Annual trip mileage
Service prior to annulment of contracts	25,248	111,381	40,653,907
Service performed by Army beginning Feb. 20, 1934	11,543	40,830	14,902,950
Service performed by Army beginning Mar. 19, 1934	7,049	24,698	9,014,770
Service performed by Army beginning Apr. 8, 1934	7,457	25,514	9,312,610

The Post Office Department could not give the amount of mail that was flown in the past month, saying that it did not have the statistics compiled, which is amazing. My colleague suggests that there has not been enough to record. Anyway, I know on account of lack of quick delivery of my own letters which were sent by air mail the present inefficiency of the service. Millions of dollars have been lost to business men, bankers, big and small, and business generally, due to the crippling of the air-mail and passenger service. When I speak of business I do not mean the Mellons that the gentleman on the other side talks about. And, by the way, it was interesting to note that the courts vindicated Mr. Mellon in a tax case. The jury, made up of men in every walk of life, felt that justice should be done to an American citizen. Americans always want fair play, no matter who the person is. I am not holding a brief for Mr. Mellon or anyone else in that regard, but the administration was proved wrong in that matter, just as it was in error in this matter.

It is not necessary to remind the House that every nation in the world has given its air-mail carriers a subsidy in order to develop and perfect aviation, and that Congress authorized the payment of a subsidy to our mail carriers for that purpose also. As a result, our air mail was the best in the world. I am sure we all realize the value of our commercial air service to the national defenses of our country. I am going to vote for the rule. I am not satisfied with this bill. It should be amended, but something must be done to defeat the Senate bill, which is infinitely worse and more unfair. Too late Congress is acting to try to restore a very valuable national activity.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the statement of the gentleman from New York, Mr. FISH, in regard to these air-mail contracts and his statements regarding the bill at this time. I think the most significant thing before us right now in regard to this question is the record made by the Democratic administration on air mail.

What did we find in March 1933, when the Democratic administration took charge? We found exorbitant air-mail rates. We found fraudulently extended contracts by the previous administration. We found most all these airline companies operating on extended contracts that they knew they could not go into court and enforce. We find now this great "hullaballoo" that has been raised by those you have heard on the floor of this House from day to day on this question. Yet, Mr. Speaker, under a Democratic administration you find for the first time we have had really honest competition in the letting of air-mail contracts. We have lowered the price for carrying of the air mail more than twice. We are getting the air mail carried today for about 29 cents a mile, whereas under the previous administration it was costing considerably more than that amount.

Mr. FOSS. Forty-one cents.

Mr. McFARLANE. Under the Hoover administration for 4 years, I will be glad to insert in the RECORD what it cost, and if my memory is correct as to the figure it was more than an average of 70 cents per mile. The average cost per mile for air-mail transportation for 1929, $1.094; for 1930, $0.978; for 1931, $0.722; for 1932, $0.619; for 1933, $0.54, the amounts being computed from June 30 to July 1 of each succeeding year.

Mr. FOSS. At the end of the administration, 41 cents was the average.

Mr. McFARLANE. From June 30, 1932, to June 30, 1933, the average cost was 54 cents per mile.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman may be right as to the average.

Mr. McFARLANE. That shows what honest competition will do when it is applied to the letting of air-mail contracts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], said something about these men not having their day in court in connection with the cancelation of these contracts. We are all familiar with the provision of the law under which these contracts were canceled. I do not think there is a doubt existing in our minds as to the right of the Postmaster General and the officials of the Government doing as they did in the cancelation of these contracts. If you will study the record and carefully note the different steps that were taken by Postmaster General Brown leading up to the spoils conference that was had at which these contracts with the different airline companies were hawked around, I do not think there will be any doubt in your mind as to whether or not there was a conspiracy existing in the letting and extension of these air-mail contracts. That being true, there is not any doubt but what the Postmaster General and the President acted very wisely and for the benefit of the taxpayers in the cancelation of these contracts.

WERE THE AIR TRANSPORT COMPANIES DEPRIVED OF THEIR DAY IN COURT?

Oh, they have not had their day in court! We have heard that argument from Members here day after day. This bill specifically gives them their day in court, if they want to take advantage of it. Under the law they have always had the right to file suit in the Court of Claims against the Government if they feel they have been wronged in any way. They knew when they were acting as they did that they were violating the law and that they were not entitled to the consideration that they have been asking from day to day, and that different Members of the House have been hollering "legalized murder" and playing cheap politics about here from day to day; yet this bill very wisely, I think, and very liberally opens the gate and invites them to take advantage of the law and have their day in court; and I dare say there will not be very many, if any, of them that will come in and take advantage of it. These concerns have always had this right, and they have not yet filed any suits seriously trying to contest this matter.

If I had the time, I should like to call your attention to a number of other facts, and I shall ask leave to place in the RECORD in regard to this fraud and conspiracy question a series of events accurately collated as to the time the events happened, showing exactly what took place in the letting of the contracts and in the cancelation of the contracts. It will cover very little space.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert this collection of facts in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the matter desired to be inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. McFARLANE. A statement of facts in regard to the events leading up to the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, those remarks are not by that Mackenzie O. Kennedy?

Mr. McFARLANE. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who prepared the facts?

Mr. McFARLANE. They are a part of my minority views prepared in my report on the investigation our committee made regarding aircraft procurement. We sat as a committee for some time to investigate whether or not the Government was securing its naval aircraft and accessories at a reasonable price.

Mr. MILLARD. Where did the gentleman get the information?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not need unanimous consent if they are his own remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CONSPIRACY AND FRAUD IN LETTING THE AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL BROWN

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, there should be no doubt left in the mind of anyone, after reading the debate in the passage of this legislation in the Senate, and particularly the remarks of Senator BLACK covering this question. There is no doubt but what there was the rankest kind of fraud in the granting and extending of these air-mail contracts by Postmaster General Brown and the officials working under him. In support of this statement I submit the following facts as bearing directly on this question:

First. March 4, 1929. The organization of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware was in process on March 4, 1929, when Walter F. Brown became Postmaster General, and the following day, upon his retirement, Harry S. New became director and adviser of the company.

Second. May 10, 1929. Formation of Inter-Departmental Committee on Airways suggested by President Hoover, to hear and determine questions relating to the extension of the civil airways system of the United States, was announced by Postmaster General Brown. Personnel of the committee: W. Irving Glover, Second Assistant Postmaster General; Earl B. Wadsworth, Superintendent of Air Mail, Post Office Department; William P. MacCracken, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aeronautics; F. C. Kingsburg, chief of Airways Division; and Harry H. Blee, chief of Airports Division, Department of Commerce.

Third. Aviation Corporation acquired route 1, route 2, route 16, route 20, routes 21, 22, 23, 24, 28, 29, and 30, totaling 4,354 miles of air-mail routes.

Fourth. June 15, 1929. Postmaster General advertised for bids on route 32, from Pasco, Wash., to Spokane, Wash., to Portland, Oreg., to Seattle, Wash., a distance of 490 miles; a clause in the advertisement provided "upon the expiration of service already contracted for or that may be extended under the certificate plan on route CAM–5, the terminal of this route that is now being advertised may be changed to Salt Lake City or such point on the transcontinental route as service of the Northwest is supplied to and from." It was also provided that it might be extended to the Canadian border and that the successful bidder have 6 months to begin service.

Fifth. September 23, 1929. Contract on route 32 was awarded after a delay of over 3 months to Varney Air lines, Inc., a subsidiary of United Aircraft & Transport Corporation. Route 5 was operated by the same company and the transcontinental route by another subsidiary of the United Aircraft & Transport Corporation.

Sixth. Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, after an extended airplane trip with United Aircraft & Transport officials, called a conference of all operators and notified them that they must work out a "yardstick" for the revamping of the Air Mail Service. The time limit on all air-mail contracts was expiring and the operators were told that in order to have them renewed they must do what he wanted them to do. To enable the Postmaster General to carry out his plan and get the Watres Act passed it was necessary for him to extend the time limit under the contracts for a temporary 6-month period. The status of the air transport service companies on March 4, 1933, is evidence that his will had been carried out as they had been consolidated in the hands of only a few operators.

Seventh. January 14, 1930. Postmaster General Brown startled the industry in announcing in a speech before the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce his well-laid scheme for new legislation to enable him to complete his plan.

Eighth. Conferences with air-mail operators prior to passage of Watres Act.

Ninth. April 29, 1930. McNary-Watres Act became law.

Tenth. May 3, 1930. Route certificate issued to Varney Air Lines (United) on route 5, which included route 32, that had been bid in at 9 cents a pound. The rate fixed was 83 cents on certain trips and 98 cents on other trips. (Note.—Under terms of the contract operator would only be required to operate 2 months at the 9-cent rate. Contract on route 5 expired Oct. 28, 1929, was extended 6 months to enable the Watres Act to be passed and carry out this deal with the United.)

Eleventh. Spoils conference, about May 15–20, 1930.

Twelfth. Adjusted contract held by Aviation Corporation upwardly to the extent of $108,001.87 per annum. This has been greatly increased since the adjustment.

Thirteenth. Arranged change in Postal Regulations to cut out bidders and to permit the Pennsylvania Railroad to become joint bidder.

Fourteenth. August 2, 1930. Advertised for bids on routes 33 and 34, and included clauses not provided in the Watres Act, to restrict the bidding to one combination.

Fifteenth. September 15, 1930. Awarded contract for route 33 to Robertson and Safeway at maximum rate with the knowledge the contract was to go to the Aviation Corporation and that the companies would not bid against each other on routes 33 and 34, advertised the same day. The circumstances surrounding the advertising and award of these two contracts indicate clearly the Postmaster General and the company who obtained the award knew in advance who would get both contracts and the amount that would be bid.

Sixteenth. September 30, 1930. Awarded—after protest by low bidder—route 34, New York to Los Angeles, to Pennsylvania Railroad, Mellon, and General Motors combination.

AIR TRUST LOBBY DISAPPOINTED

The high-priced Air Trust lobby that has duly installed their representatives here in Washington since Government money has been easily available in subsidizing them in carrying the air mail have become more arrogant and open in their operations all the while. The disclosures recently made on the lobby activities of the different companies holding valuable air-mail contracts fully discloses to what extent these paid lobbyists and former Government officials are willing to go in carrying out the will of their masters. This pernicious practice of rushing through legislation wanted by the moneyed powers and of defeating legislation opposed by them will not be curbed unless and until Congress enacts legislation that will turn the spotlight of pitiless publicity on their every act and deed. We should enact legislation that will require all paid lobbyists before being allowed to appear before any congressional committee or contact the Membership of Congress to register in a permanent bound volume kept by the Clerk of the House and/or the Secretary of the Senate, which book shall record their name, address, occupation, nature of their employment, by whom employed, whether contingent or not, the nature of their remuneration, the amount received or to be received, who pays expenses, all legislation in which they are interested, and whether for or against the legislation. This information should be a public document, always available for public inspection and always attended by Government officials. The names of such paid lobbyists and the information required should be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD each week while Congress is in session and published in pamphlet form at the close of each session, in order that the public generally may know who it is influencing legislation before Congress.

The furnishing of this information to Members of Congress would permit the Members to then and there carefully weigh and consider the merits of the arguments advanced pro and con on any and all legislation in which these lobbyists are interested. At the time these lobbyists are required to register and give complete information in regard to themselves and their employment they should be given a card showing that such information has been given by them.

This card to be presented to any Member or committee upon request showing such compliance with the law. Proper penalties should be provided for failure of the lobbyists to register. We have found that it has cost the Government many millions of dollars because of the conspiracy and fraud perpetrated by these paid lobbyists and their masters in the granting and extensions of air-mail contracts. There is no doubt but what the same representatives of the same Air Trust will do and have done just as effective work in selling the different departments of Government aircraft equipment.

In the recent aircraft investigation conducted by the aeronautics subcommittee of the House Naval Affairs Committee the record of the hearings and the report of the committee will show that only Navy and former Navy officials and the representatives of the different aircraft companies selling the Navy equipment were allowed to testify before this committee. I requested that other parties independent of the Navy, including those companies not doing business with the Navy, be called and that expert aviators and aviation engineers, including Gen. William Mitchell and Mr. C. J. H. Mackenzie-Kennedy, be called before the committee to testify, and after considerable debate finally the committee agreed to allow General Mitchell and Mr. Kennedy to file written statements, which they did, but which statements were not read nor considered by the committee before adopting their report, favorable in every way to the present plans of operation of naval aircraft purchase. Each and every one of these witnesses so testifying all were opposed to competition in the procurement of warplanes, engines, and aeronautical accessories.

THE AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT ACT OF 1926

The debate that occurred during the passage of the Aircraft Act of 1926 clearly shows the intent of Congress in its enactment in regard to the purchase of future aircraft equipment for the Army and Navy. The intention expressed by those handling this legislation representing the conferees clearly shows that it was their intention as well as the provisions of the law itself that competition should be had under this law in the purchase of all future aircraft equipment, after it had passed through the experimental stage. I find the Judge Advocate General of both the Army and the Navy have repeatedly and continuously from the date of this act to date so held in construing this law. Yet, because of the discretion given under this law to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, it has allowed them the exclusive right to pass upon the intent and made their decisions final, and this law took away from the Comptroller General the right to pass upon whether or not there had been competition in such procurement, a right the Comptroller's Office has had for all departments of Government for more than 100 years.

We find by checking the records of the contracts of the Navy on file in the Comptroller General's Office, that 91.3 percent of the Navy's aircraft equipment since the enactment of the Aircraft Act in 1926 has been purchased without competitive bids, and that 92 percent of the Army contracts have been so purchased without competitive bids.

MR. KENNEDY AND MR. WARNER

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] in reserving the right to object to the extension of my remarks asked whether or not Mr. Mackenzie O. Kennedy was the author of my remarks. I have been rather severely criticized by certain members of the Naval Subcommittee Investigating Aircraft Procurement because I insisted upon the "At-a-Glance Charts" and the statement of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy being considered by the committee for what they are worth.

At first the subcommittee voted unanimously to receive this information; then later the committee voted against permitting his statement to be received, and insinuations were made in the committee that Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy was and is a British spy. Because of the wide-spread notoriety that has been given to these charges and to Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's "At-a-Glance Charts", comparing warplane engines and warplane performance and the information contained in his statement, I believe that Congress is entitled to full and complete information on this subject.

Mr. Edward P. Warner, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics (July 10, 1926, to Mar. 15, 1929), who was in charge of Navy aircraft procurement from the time this office was created under this act and for some time thereafter and who started the system of purchasing Naval aircraft without competitive bidding, seems to be very much worked up over the charts and the data contained in these charts of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy, for if these charts are true, it is very evident that there is something radically wrong with our system of aircraft procurement, for our Government is spending more money than any other government in the world on aviation; and according to these charts, comparing performance of all warplanes and engines throughout the world, the performance of our warplanes and engines in all except one category, bombers, we stand at the bottom or near the bottom of the classifications.

Dr. Albert F. Zahm, Director of Aeronautics of the Congressional Library (20,000 volumes, the largest aeronautical library in the world) says, after carefully checking the charts, that Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy "does not seem to understate the case for America though indicating that her warplane engines are deficient in power, especially at combat altitudes."

At the request of Navy officials and others, Dr. Albert F. Zahm has checked and compared these charts to Mr. Grey's Jane's All the World Aircraft of 1933, with the result in comparing Mackenzie-Kennedy's charts to these charts the engine powers on all engines compared, differ by an average, 3.58 percent, which is called substantial agreement. The war-service ceiling comparison shows 4.5 percent difference. Warplane-engine performance for United States falls below those of Jane's by an average, 1.75 percent. Warplane speed of United States warplanes falls below Jane's 0.8 of 1 percent. At 10,000 feet ceiling the figures agree with Jane's. The chart figures for war-service ceiling differs with Jane's 3.45 percent. The comparisons as above stated are based on known records of performance on figures available not later than 1933.

The only person who has seriously questioned the accuracy of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's charts as above is Mr. Edward P. Warner, and according to the newspaper articles in which he is quoted the basis of his authority in questioning the accuracy of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's charts is Mr. C. G. Grey.

Who sent to Mr. C. G. Grey in London, England, a copy of the CONGESSIONAL RECORD of March 7, 1934, in which I had inserted on pages 3853–3862 the charts or tables by Mr. C. J. H. Mackenzie-Kennedy, of the leading warplane engines and warplanes of the world as at the end of 1933? These charts showed the United States to be the most backward of the nations manufacturing warplane engines and warplanes in the design of those in service and projected. Mr. C. G. Grey is a British subject, editor of the weekly known as "The Aeroplane" and of the annual known as "Jane's All the World's Aircraft", and aviation editor of that daily newspaper of enormous circulation, the Daily Mail, all of which are London publications.

I have asked the above question because its answer, which I am about to give, completes the revelation of a series of quite improper and unpatriotic maneuvers by several prominent American citizens to discredit my efforts to improve the air defense of the United States and grievously to injure my recent minority report of the subcommittee on aeronautics of the House Naval Affairs Committee. Although these maneuvers did not attain their objective, still they hampered me very materially and wrought appreciable injury to another who has served the United States so truly and well as an aviation counselor that he is deserving of honor, not defamation such as has been meted out to him through the said several American citizens. I refer to Mr. C. J. H. Mackenzie-Kennedy, and I refer to him, not that I care a hoot about him or his country in any personal sense, because I do not, but because I have found him to be an honorable man, and I have not yet found anyone able to prove his findings to be wrong in any way, although I have indefatigably tried to find someone able to do so. In sickness it is not the nationality of a doctor that counts but his knowledge.

At the previous request of that very efficient chairman of the House subcommittee on War Department appropriations, Representative Ross A. COLLINS, of Mississippi, Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy completed his said charts and presented them to Representative COLLINS on February 10, 1934. The latter then inserted the charts in the report of the hearings of his said "subcommittee on the War Department appropriation bill, 1935", pages 493 to 512. In the latter part of February 1934 Representative COLLINS referred me to Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy. The secretary of the Air Defense League of Philadelphia also assured me that his league was quite satisfied with the accuracy of the charts. This is borne out by the Philadelphia Record of March 25 and 26, 1934, confirming the adoption of the charts by the league. It was wise in so adopting the charts as Dr. Albert F. Zahm, Chief of the Division of Aeronautics of the Library of Congress, subsequently approved them in his written report to me of April 25, 1934, as above stated, made in the light of his detailed comparison of the charts with Jane's All the World's Aircraft 1933, issued after the end of that year. This report by Dr. Zahm is to be found on pages 1490 and 1491 of my said minority report.

When Representative COLLINS referred me to Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy, as aforesaid, he also gave me a copy of the latter's charts. I was so impressed by them that I got in touch with Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy and invited him to submit a written statement relating to United States air defense for incorporation with his charts in the report of the hearings of my Subcommittee on Aeronautics of the House Naval Affairs Committee. He then gave me the said statement, which statement is now to be found adopted by me on pages 3864–3869 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 21, 1934. After Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy gave me his statement, the subcommittee approved that it, together with the charts, should be incorporated in the report of its hearings. In fact, the subcommittee's chairman, JOHN J. DELANEY, of New York, telephoned and told me during the afternoon of March 7, 1934, that he quite agreed that the statement and charts should be incorporated in the said report. Representative DELANEY did this immediately after he had Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy call on him and discuss with him the statement and charts.

Then, at the meeting of the subcommittee on the following morning, March 8, 1934, Representative DELANEY publicly, and in the presence of the press of the country, charged Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy inter alia with being a British spy, with being an agent of many British companies, and with the intention of having his "statement put into the record and have it sanctioned by the Committee on Naval Affairs. Then take that report and send it broadcast to South America and other countries with whom the United States is doing business, and say 'Here is the condition of the American market regarding airplanes, and its own committee says they are no good'"; see page 1127, and other pages from 1117 to 1136 of the report of the subcommittee's hearings. Representative DELANEY overlooked the fact that Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's statement and charts do not show the condition of the American market regarding airplanes, as these documents are restricted to warplane engines and warplanes, the export trade in which between country and country is perforce small and scattered. The press published Representative DELANEY's said charges against Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy throughout the country, and caused me a great deal of trouble apart from whatever harm it did to Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy. Representative DELANEY has since been totally unable to substantiate a single one of his said charges although by their means he had great weight on the actions of the subcommittee in the barring of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's statement and charts from the report of its hearings.

I promptly gave Representative DELANEY and others an opportunity to substantiate said accusations against Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy by offering House Resolution No. 300 of March 14, 1934, to investigate them. Any and every critic of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy was at liberty to take advantage of this resolution. It was referred to the House Foreign Affairs Committee. However, this committee wrote informing me that it had the resolution under consideration and had postponed further action indefinitely. Thus, Representative DELANEY and all other critics of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy failed to use this opportunity to substantiate any charges against him.

Instead, underhand criticisms of him were instituted in the press. On page 2 of the complete final edition of the New York Sun of April 14, 1934, an article antagonistic to Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy was published under the heading "Army Air Testimony Disputed." It is stated in this article with reference to Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's figures that—

> Not only were the figures he gave the congressional committee grossly inaccurate according to high authorities in both French and British air ministries, but the whole aviation picture he painted for the Members of the House was just the opposite from that offered by C. G. Grey, British aeronautical writer, who wrote in his publication, Aeroplane, recently that American aviation was far ahead of that in any other country in the world.

The last statement does not necessarily involve warplane engines and warplanes.

On page 2 of the complete final edition of the New York Sun of April 19, 1934, another article antagonistic to Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy was published under the heading "Holds United States not inferior in air. Edward P. Warner assails Englishman's charts. 'Dangerously misleading.' Ex-Air Secretary's wire read to House Naval Committee." The telegram of April 18, 1934, from Mr. Warner to Representative GEORGE BURNHAM, California, a member of my said subcommittee, is quoted in the article. The New York Sun subsequently corrected somewhat the impression hostile to Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy given by its said articles. Upon receiving the said telegram, Representative BURNHAM read it to the subcommittee. The telegram is as follows:

> Glad to accede to your request, as I have been deeply concerned over wide circulation of these charts, which have appeared to me as likely to be dangerously misleading to American people through giving wholly false impression comparative merits American and foreign products. Upon first appearance of charts in print I sent copies to correspondent of mine who is eminent in British aeronautics and especially versed in military aviation. His cabled reply reads in part: "British figures fantastically inaccurate. Top speed errors 35 miles per hour and more. Ceiling errors 12,000 feet and more. Ludicrous overstatement throughout. Impossible cope all errors. Ceilings as given ridiculous. Scarcely a figure correct." He follows this with many citations of particular figures in error as compared with official British Air Force performance data. Similar request for information from France brings reply in part: "Kennedy figures of French machines are distinctly misleading." Certain American performances on other hand appear materially understated in charts. Many structural and other factors having important bearing on merits of military aircraft omitted from charts. Performance data latest American types of course not available for public discussion.—Edward P. Warner.

There is nothing specific—technically—in this telegram save Mr. Warner's anxiety to discredit Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy. He acknowledges sending printed copies of the charts to his correspondent in England, and also, apparently, to another in France.

Concurrently with Mr. Warner's said telegram the following article appeared on page 672 of The Aeroplane, London, of April 18, 1934.

A REVENANT

Mr. Chessborough J. H. Mackenzie-Kennedy has recently appeared in the United States as expert adviser to the United States Congress Committee on Air Affairs. The New York correspondent of the Daily Mail reported on April 16 as follows:

"Charts presented to the committee by an Englishman, Maj. C. J. H. Mackenzie-Kennedy, startled the Congressmen. These purported to show that the Hawker Fury, the standard British pursuit (fighter) aeroplane, had a speed of 230 miles an hour and could climb 35,000 feet. The Americans were also told that the Hawker Super-Fury could fly at 250 miles an hour.

"Interested experts cabled to the British authorities, asking if the figures were correct.

"The reply was that the performances of British aircraft as presented by Major Mackenzie-Kennedy were 'fantastically inaccurate.'

"It was stated that the tests of the Hawker Super-Fury were not completed.

"The speed of the Hawker Fury is given as 205 miles an hour, with a climbing power of 29,000 feet.

"French authorities described Major Mackenzie-Kennedy's figures on French military aviation as 'misleading.'"

Actually his figures for the Hawker Fury and Super-Fury are not wildly wide of the facts, but some of his figures as shown in the congressional report which has been sent to us might reasonably be called "fantastic."

Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy will be remembered in this country as arriving from Russia early in the war, where he claimed to have worked with Mr. Sikorsky in producing the world's first four-motor aeroplane. He interested certain wealthy munition makers in this country in his plans and established himself in palatial offices in Cromwell Road, where a large staff of technicians prepared the designs for the vast four-motor biplane which was built at the works of the Gramophone Co., Ltd., at Hayes, and was assembled at the R.F.C. aerodrome at Northolt. Eventually Mr. Frank Courteney endeavored to fly it, but only the front wheels could be persuaded off the ground.

After the war a big firm in Newcastle, John Dawson & Co., Ltd., financed the building of another great ship of his design, but this unfortunately never reached the stage of being fully assembled. At or about that period he lodged a claim with the Committee for Awards to Inventors as the inventor of the gun pit in the tail of large aeroplanes. And newspaper reports at the time said that he was awarded the sum of £31,000 for it.

Thereafter he turned his attention to air transport and ran a service to Paris, called "The Air Post of Banks", with Westland limousines. After a few trial trips this ceased, and he disappeared from aviation till this latest activity in America.

It will be seen that this article contains an acknowledgment of a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD having Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's said figures. The only CONGRESSIONAL RECORD having them is that aforesaid of March 7, 1934. The article is quite vague and almost entirely untruthful, according to record evidence shown to me. However, the article goes back upon Mr. Warner's said telegram and does not support him with regard to the figures for the Hawker Fury and Super-Fury. This article and Mr. Warner's said telegram and his statements to the New York Sun reveal his British correspondent to be Mr. C. G. Grey, a pressman of no particular technical training, and provide the answer to the question at the beginning of these remarks. It appears, therefore, that Mr. Warner's French correspondent is also a pressman.

In his said article Mr. Grey could not be other than extremely vague because, as Dr. Zahm's aforesaid report to me of April 25, 1934, amply shows, Mr. Grey, a British subject, would then have had to destroy his own figures in Jane's All the World's Aircraft of 1933.

That portion of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's said statement which is on pages 3864 to 3869, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, suggests some reason for Mr. Warner's anxiety to discredit him. It shows that Mr. Warner is not the reliable aeronautical authority he is made out to be. This is further evidenced by the still current Aviation Handbook, by Mr. Edward P. Warner (editor of Aviation) and Mr. S. Paul Johnson (assistant editor of Aviation), published as late as 1931 by the McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., New York. The price of this big book is $7.50. It consists of some 715 pages, with an extensive index from page 695 to page 715, inclusive. Aviation engine superchargers are not even indexed therein, which helps to explain, perhaps, why American high-powered aviation engines began to be supercharged at all only well on in 1932.

It is thoroughly discreditable that such a prominent American as Mr. Warner should so promptly send the said CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 7, 1934, to foreign countries and in a manner emphasizing the importance of the figures therein to American aviation. This is made worse because it was done while Representative DELANEY was erroneously proclaiming to the world as aforesaid that Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy wished to distribute such publications in foreign countries, whereas in fact, Representative DELANEY has been unable to substantiate other than that Mr. MacKenzie-Kennedy has never sent any congressional document out of the United States nor discussed his work in any such document with anyone other than an American citizen in the United States. Thus it was the honored American citizen Mr. Warner (and not the British "spy" Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy) who instituted the broadcasting in foreign countries of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy's figures in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which is complained of by Mr. Lauren D. Lyman in the New York Times of Sunday, May 6, 1934.

Based on Representative DELANEY's aforesaid unsubstantiated accusations of Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy, Mr. C. B. Allen wrote a big feature article in the New York Herald Tribune of Sunday, April 29, 1934, pages 11 to 15, which is not truthful. I note that this newspaper has not yet published the registered letter of May 1, 1934, that Mr. Mackenzie-Kennedy sent it. Must also our most prominent newspapers hit under the belt a man who has done this country only good?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of the bill it shall be in order to consider the committee substitute amendment as an original bill for the purpose of amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think gentlemen on both sides are very anxious to conclude the consideration of this bill, if possible, and the suggestion has been made that although the time for general debate is quite limited, an agreement might be reached to shorten the 1 hour provided in the rule. Has such a suggestion been made to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; it has.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I may say to the gentleman I believe we could possibly get along with 20 minutes if the gentleman could do the same thing on his side.

Mr. MEAD. I believe we can do likewise over here.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman expect to complete the consideration of the bill today?

Mr. MEAD. We should like to do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that he ask unanimous consent that the provision of the rule be modified to provide for 40 minutes of general debate instead of 1 hour.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the provision of the rule providing for 1 hour of general debate be modified so as to provide for 40 minutes of general debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, with Mr. PARKER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I shall attempt very briefly to outline the provisions of the pending bill. I want to say that our committee in the revision of the bill, from what was known as the original administration bill to the present bill, known as a temporary measure to provide 1-year contracts, made the revision in order to comply with the administration's request that we create a commission to study every phase of aviation. That commission is to report back to the next Congress. We felt, as the result of the creation of this commission, that it would be unnecessary to enact in a temporary bill the permanent features contained in the original measure. That is the answer to the statements advanced as to why the changes were made.

The bill provides for 1-year contracts to be awarded as the result of competitive bids. The bill sets up a commission to study commercial, military, naval, manufacturing, experimental, and every phase of aviation, and to recommend the adoption of a national aviation policy. And that, I believe, will be very helpful to the industry and to the country. [Applause.]

One of the amendments we shall offer allows the Department to extend for 9 months the present 3-month air-mail contracts under the terms set forth in this bill. In other words, the Department may extend these contracts under the authority which permitted the call for bids in the first instance, and if the Department should extend the contracts beyond the 3-month limit, they will have to be extended under the provisions of this bill.

As an illustration, the air-mail companies, in securing these 3-month contracts, may see fit to effect economies. It may be difficult to effect economies insofar as fixed charges are concerned; that is, equipment, landing fields, and so forth. Therefore the economies may in great measure be effected by a reduction in salaries and working conditions of the personnel. The adoption of the committee amendment will offer a degree of protection to the pilots and mechanics in the Air Mail Service.

Another amendment will permit companies who have not had 6 months' experience on lines at least 250 miles in length to qualify. This amendment will give companies recently organized a chance to bid.

The bill likewise gives these companies their day in court, as was well stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS], a member of our committee.

Now, under the present set-up, from figures given to me by the Department the cost of the Air Mail Service will be 29.6 cents a mile, as compared with 44 cents a mile, the cost of the service prior to the cancelation of the contracts. This saving will be used in part to give air-mail service to cities that have not had such service in the past. A real expansion of the Air Mail Service will take place.

Under the new air-mail set-up, four States, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and West Virginia, will enjoy services denied them in the past, and approximately 20 cities will, for the first time, have air-mail service. The old lines that bid on the 3-month contracts were reorganized, which action vindicates the position taken by the Post Office Department in that connection. All but three of the old lines were successful in securing contracts and there is still a number of bids yet to be awarded, and they all may, sooner or later, participate in the Air Mail Service again. The attitude of the present Department officials as compared with that of the previous administration, which made a political football out of the Air Mail Service, is to clean house and eliminate politics from the Service. Such action should be refreshing to Members of Congress.

The new administration has not increased the subsidy either in the air or ocean mail; it has decreased the cost in both cases. It has issued no new contracts, except in the case of the air mail, and then at a great saving to the Government. The present administration is anxious that this entire question of air mail be turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission or some similar agency, in order that it may be taken out of politics. So we hail a new deal for the air mail; we hail the coming of the opportunity when there will be less politics; when a broad national policy will permit aviation to expand and develop. That new day, in my judgment, is at hand; and in the passage of this bill we hasten that day.

We have heard some talk about the Army. I defended the Army Air Corps on one previous occasion. I say again the Army Air Corps took into the air last February better planes and better equipment than the Army had in the air when it originally pioneered the air mail from 1919 to 1927. Everybody regrets, and no one more than I, the deaths that occurred to the Army pilots. There is no doubt in my mind that much of this talk about the Army is just partisan politics.

The spirit of partisanship has crept into this debate, and again the deaths of the Army pilots are charged to the administration. Everyone had the right to believe that the Army Air Corps could carry the mail, and everyone agrees that it was the severity of the weather and the dauntless spirit of the pilots that contributed to some of these crashes. When I hear one of these partisan speeches, I think of the many deaths that occurred in this country from 1929 until 1933. That was during the administration that promised us prosperity, that promised employment and contentment to our workers, and even laid down the specifications as to just how it would be done. Yet we found thousands facing actual starvation. And that administration gave them no relief except the promise that prosperity was just around the corner. But relief was not forthcoming until we had a new deal in Government. So, when the spirit of partisanship creeps out on the floor and the administration is charged with inefficiency and irresponsibility, I cannot become excited about it.

I heard Members stand on this floor and implore the Government to save the men and women of this country who were suffering the pangs of destitution and starvation in every section of the land. Some of those who shout "murder" today were not found pleading for the rights of the people then; they were extolling that administration's do-nothing policy.

Mr. Chairman, there is no politics in this bill. I regret that the spirit of partisanship was injected into this debate. The bill establishes a new deal in aviation, and will result in a real national aviation policy. That is what the administration aims to do, take aviation out of politics and put it where it would not be if the last administration had been continued in power.

The President of the United States and the Postmaster General will cooperate with Congress in effecting a permanent settlement of this problem. In a short time we will lead all the world in every branch of aviation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, some day in the future the unwritten history of the past 90 days in the life of the air mail will be written, and many interesting things will be developed at that time. Among those things one fact will stand out, and that is the herculean efforts of the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], to remedy the mistakes which have been made in connection with air mail. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] has worked like a Trojan, and I have been one of his helpers in the committee. There has been no partisanship there. There has only been a sense of regret over the conditions which have developed in the past 90 days. We have witnessed one blunder after another, and there is no use denying it. It began with the sudden cancelation of every air-mail contract without a hearing. To this good day nobody is on his way to jail. I assured the Postmaster General that if he could prove that anybody in connection with any of these contracts had been guilty of crime I would help send such guilty persons to the penitentiary, but so far nobody has even been put on trial. After cancelation the Army was given the job, and in the first month 12 boys lost their lives. I stood here and urged the passage of the bill to authorize payment to the Army of money from the air-mail appropriations. Some of my friends refused to so vote, claiming it was making them responsible for the Army operation. I did not so regard it. I regarded it as a fact that had to be met by legislation.

Then the next step was the discontinuance entirely of every plane flying the air mail. For the first time in years no air mail was carried at all because the Army planes were taken out of the skies. Then after a period the Army planes were put back on a modified schedule, and a severe blow was struck to the Air Mail Service. Then came the first legislative plan, prepared in the Post Office Department and sent over to us here. The Post Office Committee went to work on it and found it was absolutely unacceptable. It contained so many unfair, unjust, and impractical features that that bill went out the window and was disregarded entirely. It set up a blacklist; it provided for 6 months after award of contract for a contractor to sell stock and get planes; it provided injustices of all kinds, and, therefore, that bill was discarded.

The next step was the award of temporary contracts under the law of 1872. The Postmaster General advertised that he would accept bids for temporary contracts, and his authority for it was a section of the 1872 Postal Code, which was passed to cover wagon-route contracts. The only purpose of that law was to provide the Post Office Department with authority so that when a contractor failed to carry out his contract, or when a new service was immediately necessary, the Postmaster General might let temporary contracts without competitive bidding for a period of 3 months, the time to be extended for a period of not to exceed 9 months. The whole purpose of that law was to provide emergency temporary contracts without bidding. Now the Post Office Department legal fraternity say they can use the wagon-route contract law of 1872, for Air Mail Service, and instead of having it "without competitive bidding", they can have it with competitive bidding. If it is possible for the Department to write law like that in the office of the solicitor, there is no use of having Congress here at all. Congress enacted that without competitive bidding the Postmaster General may let certain contracts under certain restrictions.

I have here the printed specifications for the temporary air-mail contracts. It quotes a section out of that old wagon-route contract law. Then it provides that nobody who is guilty of fraud or collusion can bid on a contract. It lays down specifications such as 110 miles an hour. We got past that speed 8 years ago in the air mail. It provides that some companies need not have any passenger facilities at all. We have built up a passenger service in these years that has been a great forward step. Writing specifications like that under a section of the old act, and saying they are going to run the air mail on such a basis. It is absurd. Some of the companies came in with low bids and now we hear that therefore we are going to save 10 millions of dollars. Some of those companies would have bid 1 cent a mile, if necessary, to get the contract, because they wanted to show there had been no fraud or collusion, and that their companies could get the contract and take chances on the future. It was not a matter of getting even enough to pay for the pilots and the gasoline.

We will not save a dollar on this plan when the final balance sheet is made up. Wait until there has been operation under all the contracts before you say we have saved money. Wait until real air-mail service is provided. However, it is the fact that contracts have been awarded under this old law, and we must accept that fact.

Now, this bill before us provides that the Postmaster General may make temporary contracts not to exceed 1 year, and it lays down some needed restrictions. I helped draft the bill in committee and the committee did write this bill. After it was completed I made the statement that I should gladly support this bill as the best thing that we could possibly expect if the Post Office Department would operate under it. All I asked was that it be worth something more than a scrap of paper, and that it would not simply cumber the books with a law that would not be put into force. I said if they would operate under it, I believed it would be the best thing that we could get out of a series of tragic blunders. I called the Post Office Department and learned that they would not operate under this bill; that they were operating under the law of 1872; that they were advertising routes and had awarded some contracts, and therefore they proposed to go on that basis.

Now, where is the logic in Congress writing a temporary contract law when the Post Office Department has already awarded temporary contracts and will not operate under the provisions of this law? I should like to help restore our air-mail service to where we had it—as a great service to the public—but I cannot vote for a bill that will simply be cumbering the statute books, while the Post Office Department refuses to operate under it.

The contract feature is one part of this bill.

The second part provides for a commission to study the whole aviation question and recommend permanent air-mail policy. My friends, under the Sabath resolution in the Seventy-second Congress, we had a commission to study air mail.

Its head was the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD]. We had hearings for weeks. We went into every phase of the Air Mail Service and brought a bill into Congress with the unanimous approval of the Commission. We began hearings on that bill in the special session of the Seventy-third Congress. The Postmaster General informed our committee that he did not want any more hearings because he was studying the Air Mail Service and wanted time to ascertain what the conditions were. Hearings were discontinued in the special session of the Seventy-third Congress, when we could have brought in a constructive bill and made impossible all these blunders that have been made in the last 90 days.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Did I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the Post Office Department said they would not operate under this legislation if it became law?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Post Office Department said that they were operating under the law of 1872, and that they were letting contracts on that basis.

Mr. SNELL. But I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that they would not operate under this law, but were going to operate under the law of 1872.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is exactly the question I asked them; I asked the Second Assistant Postmaster General if they would operate under this new proposal, and his answer was that they had already advertised for bids under the law of 1872, and intended to operate under it.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. DOBBINS. Was not the question the gentleman asked of the officials of the Post Office Department whether they would not throw out the bids they had received under temporary advertising and call for new bids under this new law?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; my question was: "Will you operate under this 1-year temporary law if we pass it?"

They said: "No; we are already operating under another law."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Are printed copies of the hearings available?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I will support any constructive plan, but it seems to me that we ought to meet the situation squarely. If the Post Office Department proposes to operate under the 90-day provision of the act of 1872, let them go ahead and operate under that if they can prove its legality in the courts.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Is the bill before the House a constructive piece of legislation?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This bill, as I see it, is not sensible nor constructive. It cumbers the statute books with a law that will not be used. However, I do not believe these present 90-day contracts are legal. I have asked a great many good lawyers as to whether under an act providing for the letting of temporary contracts without competitive bidding a department can call for competitive bids and issue contracts on that basis. In every case they said it could not be done. On the other hand, if the Post Office Department can make valid contracts with the contractors with whom they are now entering into contracts, we should not add further to the confusion and make the chaos complete by adding another temporary contract law to the statute books.

I should be delighted indeed to use every effort possible to provide authority to let emergency contracts, but we find emergency contracts already awarded. The T.W.A., for instance, is already operating and carrying the mails between Los Angeles and New York.

If the Post Office Department will not operate under it, what is the value of putting this emergency law on the statute books? There may be some advantage in having this bill passed by the House, because the Senate bill is much worse than this measure. The Senate bill contains provisions which I am sure the House would not favor. In conference it may be possible to write some constructive legislation dealing with the air mail and that seems to be the only hope in the situation.

After having gone through weeks of work in the committee, endeavoring to cooperate in every way possible, I am going to cast my vote against this bill. I contend that the Post Office Committee, given a free hand, can write a bill which will meet the need of the present vexing situation. I contend that the Post Office Department should perform its duties under laws written in Congress and not in the Department. [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE].

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes allotted to me I shall not attempt to go into much detail with regard to the merits of the bill. They have already been covered. It is unfortunate, I may say, however, that politics get injected into matters of this kind. Let me point out in this connection that the first condemnation of Postmaster General Brown's administration of the Air Mail Service did not come from the Democrats, did not come from the Democratic Party, or from the Democratic side of the House. Looking up the records I find that under date of August 29, 1931, there was printed in the Washington Herald a statement issued by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, my distinguished Republican friend, a member of the Post Office Committee, Mr. KELLY. The Washington Herald quotes Mr. KELLY himself in this language:

Representative CLYDE KELLY of Pennsylvania, Republican, last night charged Postmaster General Brown is prostituting the Nation's air mail with monopolies and served notice he will force a complete investigation of the Brown air-mail administration by Congress when Congress convenes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I still hold to that idea. I think there were a great many mistakes. I fought with Postmaster General Brown throughout his entire tenure of office. Each of the contracts should have been investigated on its own merits.

Mr. ROMJUE. I may say that what Postmaster General Farley now is doing was charged by Mr. KELLY himself under the Republican administration against Republican Postmaster General Brown.

Mr. KELLY defeated the Postmaster General in this attempt on the ground it would give the Postmaster General autocratic powers over the aeronautic industry, and be "highly dangerous", he said. He declared:

"Although the Congress presumably defeated the Postmaster General in this attempt and included mandatory provisions requiring bids in the final McNary-Watres Act, it is obvious the Postmaster General is administering that bill to an end not intended by Congress.

"I shall force an absolute and uncompromising probe into the reasons for this the minute Congress convenes."

EXPLAINS CLAUSE

The charges of KELLY, "Father of the Airmail", and his demand for an investigation came as a dramatic sequel to Universal Service's exclusive disclosure that 90 percent of the Nation's $17,000,000 annual air-mail subsidy—designed, according to Mr. Brown himself to "Assist the small operator who now has no contracts and who needs a little help"—is going to four mammoth concerns.

Universal Service also showed that of the 32 contracts awarded by the Post Office Department since passage of the McNary-Watres Act, April 29, 1930, the last 30 have been granted as extensions by the Postmaster General to the alleged monopoly, without being offered for bids.

These extensions were made on the strength of a clause in that act, in connection with which Mr. KELLY said:

"Postmaster General Brown came to me with a bill which he said he wanted passed, giving him absolute power to grant air-mail contracts without bids whatsoever. I considered this a highly dangerous policy, and I refused to introduce or support the bill.

Mr. Brown then took the bill to Mr. Watres, who introduced it for him. Every time the measure came into a committee for hearing, Mr. Brown was there, to argue for it. I opposed it bitterly, but at Mr. Brown's insistence, it was finally reported out, over my minority report to the steering committee, where Brown was again present."

PLANS TO AIR TRUTH

There it caused so much furor that it was sent back to the Post Office Committee, and when it was apparent passage was impossible, Mr. Brown agreed that I should insert provisions for bids as I demanded.

Mr. Brown now completely disregards the intent of the committee when it backed me in insisting upon the amendments, and continues to carry out his original intention of granting these contracts without bids.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Of course, that is what I have been trying to do up until now. The fact that we are getting down now to the point where we should have been 2 years ago when the committee appointed by this House brought in a bill to change the McNary-Watres bill and put it on a solid foundation is what I am arguing for at this time.

Mr. ROMJUE. The gentleman visioned the mistakes that his own Postmaster General Brown was about to make and did make. Subsequent events here disclose that Mr. Farley, when he took charge of the office, found these conditions to exist, and when Mr. Farley charges that these contracts were being awarded without bids, the very thing that a Republican Representative on that side of the House charged, then he, Mr. Farley, is accused of being partisan about the matter.

The reletting of these contracts has disclosed that we are saving over half of the revenue. It costs the public $9,000,000 now, under Mr. Farley, and under the former contracts let under General Brown it cost $19,000,000. The cancelations of these contracts under General Farley were properly done and have effected a tremendous saving of money.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein a newspaper article taken from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch commenting on the air-mail situation.

Mr. TABER. What is the article?

Mr. ROMJUE. An article from the Post-Dispatch of St. Louis.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

LEST WE FORGET

The greatest tragedy of air-mail tragedies is that they have been used to discount air-mail scandals.

The public must not forget these. The trouble is that a considerable number of people do not believe that there have been any scandals. In the Nation-wide ferment over Army air deaths, the important fact has been obscured that the air companies which have been making much capital out of the argument that they were convicted without a hearing have been heard and have been convicted.

The Black committee has already made out a complete case against the commercial aviation industry, and it was plain brass for the spokesmen in the industry recently appearing before a Senate committee to try to pull the wool over the eyes of the people any longer upon this score.

It was a sufficient proof of skullduggery that official records were removed or destroyed when the investigation began. When we add to that the revelation that the sons of United States Senators were retained as lobbyists by the air-mail conspirators when this evil-smelling mess was cooking, we stand face to face with the sort of thing that rots the very taproots of representative government.

The mail contracts were canceled on the ground that they were obtained by collusion. By collusion is meant that they were obtained without competitive bidding, which was required under the statute prescribing the method to be used in awarding them. The Black committee has shown that, in May of 1930, former Postmaster General Brown called to Washington some 12 big operators, that these operators sat around a table and considered among themselves how the 12 air routes of the country were to be divided up. On five of these routes they reached an agreement. On the remaining seven they agreed to let Mr. Brown decide the matters they could not agree upon.

This agreement was discovered in the correspondence of McCracken, who was Brown's assistant. It was confirmed by the testimony of every one of the operators, all of whom were cross-examined by Senator BLACK. In awarding mail contracts, it was shown that Brown carried out the operators' agreement on five of the routes without a hitch. On the seven that the operators left for him to decide, he awarded them in the most high-handed and dictatorial manner. In the interest of the Pennsylvania Railroad, whose business he favored, he forced Western Air Express, a profitable line, to merge with T.A.T., the unprofitable aviation subsidiary of the Pennsylvania, thus giving it a chance to cut in on the earnings of the former.

In numerous other cases he dictated mergers at will through threatening to withhold a mail contract if not obeyed. In reading the testimony it is impossible for any fair-minded person to discover the slightest trace of honest, competitive bidding.

Establishing collusion in the award of contracts, the Black committee then probed the financial affairs of the large air companies. This brought to light a tale of graft so revolting as to be almost incredible.

Incidentally, it sustained another ground for canceling the mail contracts. The last Congress authorized the President to cancel the mail contracts if he found them contrary to public interest. All the many devices of corporate business since the war to loot the investor and demoralize business, which have turned up time and again in other congressional hearings, were shown by the Black committee to have reached a hideous fruition in the aviation industry.

One official of a company—a young man of 25—was shown to have started with an investment of $40, which in 2 years had been manipulated by inside stock watering and stock-exchange machinery into a market value of over $5,000,000. Selling part of his holdings, this insider reaped a cool million at 27 years. In another case among many, an initial investment of $253 was manipulated rapidly by the same practices into a market value of $35,000,000 and partially liquidated at a profit of over $9,000,000.

While unloading their watered stock on the public aviation officials helped themselves in addition to incredible bonuses and salaries, though the outsiders who invested in the companies are still waiting for dividends. They gambled in the stocks of their own companies, staging pool battles like all those of merited odium.

They organized or gained control of investment trusts of other people's money to generate a demand for holdings they wish to unload. They held controlling interests in companies supplying equipment to the operating companies which they also controlled. The head of one great aviation company invited a bank, of which his brother was president, to cut in on the swag by using the bank's affiliate to underwrite the company's issues at an exorbitant rate.

By 1932 the industry had been efficiently plucked. In that year the aviation industry had 18,585,000 shares of stock outstanding, and on this stock only $30,000 in dividends was paid.

The public must not forget the air-mail scandals. It must not lose sympathy with the efforts of the administration to make the aviation companies reorganize for the elimination of such practices before obtaining more millions of taxpayers' money.

The casualties which have resulted from cancelation of these contracts are regrettable, but they do not make right what was palpably wrong.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, my entrance on the floor in this debate is the first time any member of the Military Affairs Committee throughout this whole controversy has taken the floor. It is not my purpose to take the floor to enter into any of the controversial issues that have been made, and to defend or to deny them, because the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs at the proper time will do that and report to the House as already ordered by the House.

May I point out to the chairman of the committee that in section 17 it is stated that the President is authorized to appoint a commission composed of five members, and so forth, and to report to Congress its recommendation "of a broad policy covering all phases of aviation and the relation of the United States thereto." Here is provision for the appointment of a new commission to consist of five members. You have had a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs working 9 weeks, day after day, morning, afternoon, and night, studying this problem. We have had the Naval Affairs Committee studying the problem as related to naval aviation. We come in here and authorize the President to appoint another commission wholly unrelated, and as we sit here this afternoon the Secretary of War has another commission, known as the "Baker board", all of these committees studying all phases, with the exception of the Military and Naval Affairs Committees.

Mr. MEAD. I believe it will be helpful to pool all this information and coordinate the activities of all the committees that have been working separately one from the other.

Mr. GOSS. As far as the Military Affairs Committee is concerned, it is not our business, and we are not proposing to go into the air-mail-contract phase of the matter.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that we were going into phases of the subject that really belonged to your committee in the matter of the interchange of pilots. In that regard this commission will be helpful, because they will call your representatives and our representatives and will work out a solution to the whole matter.

Mr. GOSS. I believe the Membership of this House will pay their respects to this subcommittee headed by Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire when that report comes in. I do not know whether it will be in this Congress or the next. Probably half the work is not done as yet, but we have had hearings in that committee, practically entirely in executive session, and have brought out things that probably no other committee will bring out. And here, may I point out again, that in this bill, as proposed by the Senate, they suggest such a commission, and further, they say, "In order to improve national defense, promote the art of flying, and securing for air mail and military and naval pilots", and so forth. They appoint still another commission, including the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Postmaster General, and others.

It seems to me, in all fairness to the House, that we ought to be able to strike out section 17 of this bill. The House has already appointed this subcommittee, and, as I say, we have been working diligently morning, noon, and night for 9 weeks, and probably will be working this summer. There is also the Newton D. Baker board, appointed by the Secretary of War, going into the same phases, and here we come along with another one. Now, we are liable to get a hodge-podge proposition out of the whole business.

Mr. DOBBINS. Does not the gentleman recognize that each one of these commissions has been doing this from a single standpoint? The purpose of this commission is to correlate the views of all the committees. They will study specialties in the aviation industry and put them all in one broad scale and correlate their views as much as possible.

Mr. GOSS. Just as an example, let me refer to the Baker committee. The Chief of the Air Corps sits there day after day. What are we going to get out of that board?

I hope the committee will give consideration to this matter, because I should like to offer an amendment to strike out section 17, which will permit these other committees whom you have already appointed to do the job and report back to Congress.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FOSS].

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, what we have before us now is a bill that has been formulated by the Post Office Committee with regard to the air mail, and I may say, in deference to the Chairman of the Post Office Committee and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], the ranking minority member, this bill should be passed. It is not a satisfactory bill to any member of the committee, but it should go to conference and we should let the conferees write a bill that will be beneficial to the air mail.

There has been a lot said about the cost of the air mail and the amount of money we are going to save. I want to suggest to the gentlemen who are telling us about the immense amount of money we are going to save by this bill to wait until they get the bill from the War Department for their services in carrying the air mail, and I will guarantee that the average cost we have been talking about will be immeasurably increased.

There is going to be an amendment offered to this bill. I am opposed to the amendment. I voted against it in committee and I hope it will not be adopted, but I do want to see the bill go to conference in order that the conferees may bring back something constructive and something that will be helpful to the entire air-mail situation. [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MUSSELWHITE].

THE AIR MAIL IN THE NEW DEAL

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. Mr. Chairman, you have heard a very able presentation from the chairman of my committee, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], and a very enlightening discussion from the other members of the committee.

I want you to know that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of which I have the honor to be a member, has given this problem long and serious and very earnest consideration. The testimony presented before our committee in many hearings, convinced a majority of the committee that the cancelation of air-mail contracts by Postmaster General Farley was more than justified. Employment of the Army fliers, while not wholly satisfactory, was wholly defensible.

Bids recently submitted show that the Post Office Department was being mulcted of unearned millions for the benefit of manipulators of holding companies.

This problem has been one of the most vexing of the present session. The legislation proposed in this measure may not be perfect, but it certainly is an improvement on what we have had. It is designed to meet an emergency that has arisen because of the corruption of the former head of the Postal Service. The bill, whether it is perfect or not, meets the need of the moment. It has the approval, I understand, of the administration. It conforms with the ideals of the new deal. It is positively a square deal to the parties in direct interest, the contracting carriers, the Post Office Department, the patrons of the service, and, finally, the public that pays the bills. I submit that this bill is a fair one and provides the relief needed right now.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the Post Office Department approve this bill?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. I have the assurance that the Post Office Department approves this measure.

Mr. McFARLANE. They approve it, so far as it goes?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. And I join in the expressed wish of the gentleman from Massachusetts who just preceded me that this bill as it stands, with the amendment, meet the approval of this House, and I am sure it will meet the approval of the administration and the public.

Mr. McFARLANE. I noticed in the press that the Post Office Department, if I recall the quotation correctly, favored the Senate bill over the House bill, and I think this is a matter we ought to get straightened out.

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. Originally, and until our bill was changed, I think they did prefer the Senate bill. This is the Senate bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. I know that, but you have stricken out the Senate bill and rewritten it.

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. No; we have not rewritten it; but just put in a couple of little amendments and changed it.

Mr. McFARLANE. It looks to me as if you have rewritten the bill.

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. No; the rewriting was done in the Senate.

THE NEW DEAL

As I have said on many occasions since I have been a Member of the United States Congress, both publicly and privately, the new deal is a square deal. We must not lose faith in it. The time will come, of course, when we shall look back upon it. If we cannot normally believe now that such a time will ever come, we should at least be able to do it from the conviction of experience that nothing lasts forever. After more than a year as a Member of this legislative body, most of the Members of which have carefully and wisely followed the lead and suggestions of our peerless President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, I am happy to assert that prosperity has turned that corner we heard about a few years ago. Looking back over the past 15 months since the President went into office with the determination to bring the country out of the chaotic condition he found it, I am more than ever convinced that the war is over.

In the session of Congress which is now drawing to a close more constructive and helpful legislation has been passed than in any other session in history. We have heard a lot about the so-called "alphabetic bureaus"; but, ladies and gentlemen of the House, every one of these bureaus or departments was created for a purpose, and that fundamental and underlying purpose was to relieve the citizens who suffered in the depression which befell us a few years ago. The achievements of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress which came into office with him are remarkable. The Public Works Administration has been the medium of employment for countless thousands, and its program has provided improvements that never would have been undertaken except at a time like this. President Roosevelt and the Congress have systematically and effectively brought the resources of the Federal Government into operation to benefit the people of the United States, individually and collectively.

THE N.R.A.

I need not stress the importance of the National Recovery Act. If it does nothing else, it has eliminated cut-throat competition and child labor and has put people back to work so that they may buy more of the products of farms and factories and start our business at a living rate again. Throughout all industry there has been a marked change from starvation wages and starvation employment to living wages and sustained employment in large measure, and I am confident the employers who a year ago were faced with closing down their plants are now willing to agree with the statement that the National Recovery Act is not only a noble experiment but a satisfactory solution.

The depression stole upon us quietly, slowly, and without many of us knowing it was here, but when we realized the situation, we did what any other people would do when a foreign enemy invaded our territory—we fought to a man—we fought to repel it. The depression overran our entire lives, but now, thank heaven, we are on the way to victory. Every man, woman, and child in America knew of its presence, and tens of millions felt its ravages, its cruelties, its utter destructiveness. Emaciated children stared at us in every section of our rich and fertile land. Fear-ridden men and despairing women lined our streets by day and filled our parks at night. Our great middle class—the backbone of our civilization—suffered so heavily that millions lost confidence in themselves, in their Government, and even in life itself. The cost to America was greater in life and treasure than the cost of the World War. The war, with all its horrors and waste of human life and property, of patriotism, idealism, had some compensating factors. It keyed the American people to a high pitch of patriotism, idealism, and unselfish humanitarianism. But the depression brought to millions of our people all but complete loss of faith in the institution of our country and the conviction that life itself was futile. A little more than a year ago there were millions of living dead in the United States, but today there is hope—hope that is certain to restore the confidence of our Government and bring back to our people a renewed faith in the administration of this great Government.

Until a year ago nothing of a positive nature had been attempted to repel the devastating forces of the depression. Now, with a great and aggressive leader in the White House, plans for routing of the enemy have been carefully laid and an offensive war has been and is being waged. Gen. Hugh S. Johnson is the field marshal; and what a warrior he is. The plan of campaign is outlined in the N.R.A. It is your country's plan, passed with a complete absence of partisan politics by overwhelming majorities in both branches of the Congress, and approved by your great Commander in Chief, President Roosevelt. It was formulated by the general staff working with our President, and they know what part every division, regiment, and company must play in going forward to victory. Every citizen of this great Republic is needed as a volunteer to serve under these great leaders in the battle to turn back the economic depression—the most destructive foe that has ever invaded our shores.

When I voted in the House of Representatives for the National Recovery Act, little did I realize the great benefit it would bring to this Nation, but as each day goes by I feel that if I have done nothing else as a Member of Congress I have kept faith with my people and carried out my pledge to work to bring this country back to normalcy.

THE H.O.L.C.

When the Home Owners' Loan Act, for which I worked and supported, became effective, it was my happy duty to establish an office in the largest city of my district, Muskegon. Since that time the office has functioned excellently, has relieved hundreds of people who were about to lose their homes, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I desire to include as a part of my remarks, a letter which came to me, unsolicited, from Mr. Bart D. Buck, cashier of the Muskegon Savings Bank:

APRIL 20, 1934.

HON. HARRY W. MUSSELWHITE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MUSSELWHITE: Recalling that you strongly endorsed the legislation which provided for the establishment of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and that you took an active interest in the organization of the west Michigan office in Grand Rapids and its Muskegon branch, you will be interested in our estimation of the manner in which the corporation has been functioning in the district which you represent.

Since the Grand Rapids office was established, the latter part of July of 1933, we have received 83 offers of H.O.L.C. bonds for mortgages held by us, 80 of which we have accepted. The first 2 loans closed in the Grand Rapids district took up mortgages held by this bank, and 5 of the first 8 such transactions in Muskegon we were interested in. As a result of the activities of the H.O.L.C. we have only four foreclosures in process at the present time, and we have been able to assist all but three home owners to redeem their homes in instances where they had lost title.

We understand that the Muskegon office has closed between 600 and 700 loans of a total of something like $1,250,000. The bonds which have been received by individuals and financial institutions have eased the credit conditions locally. The repairs which are being made to the properties are resulting in putting a considerable number of men back to work, and, most important of all, homes have been saved for the owners and the real-estate market has been benefited in that a large amount of this distress real estate has been removed from the market.

Yours very truly,

BART D. BUCK, Cashier.

ROOSEVELT GREAT LEADER

There has been so much legislation enacted in the Democratic administration since I took office that time will not permit me in the allotment graciously afforded me by the Speaker to discuss. I can safely say, however, that more real accomplishments have been crowded into the Seventy-third Congress than at any time in the history of our Nation. I said before coming to Congress that I would contribute my utmost efforts to aid Mr. Roosevelt in bringing about recovery, and I reiterate that statement now that I am in full accord with the new deal and strongly favor its continuance. Before entering public life, it was always my policy to do a job well or not attempt it at all. During this period of the new deal, while the country has undergone changes greatly for the better, I have served every section of my district with no thought of partisanship or partiality. My duty and obligation has been to my district as a whole. I am anxious to continue for one more term.

There are those to whom the pursuit of office is a glamorous experience. The possession of office is likely to bring disillusionment. Those who may oppose my renomination cannot attack the character of my service, the manner in which I have handled the work of my constituents, nor my fidelity to the administration. If any wish to dismiss me, I ask that they be fair enough and honest enough to openly assign their reasons, in order that I may have opportunity to defend myself and my constituents have opportunity to judge as to the contrasted qualifications of those who seek your consideration.

I very deeply appreciate the kindness shown me by the people of the Ninth District of Michigan, to whose trust I have been faithful. No person can honestly challenge my assertion of fidelity to the interests of the district. It is true that on several occasions I have not submitted to what is commonly called "gag rule", but I have consistently kept my pledges to the people to whom I am responsible; and I have kept faith with President Roosevelt. My record in Congress is an open book, available to anyone desiring to examine it. I have the assurance of administration and party leaders that it is wholly satisfactory to them.

I stand on my record of having supported President Roosevelt in all his progressive measures and policies, and I have neither apology nor regrets for any of my votes in the House of Representatives. I have started out to be one of the Members of the Democratic Congress to help restore recovery and when I have completed one more term, which is the end of Mr. Roosevelt's first administration, I shall gladly and gracefully abdicate with the thought that I have done my duty to my people and in a small measure contributed to the restoration of normal conditions, and will retire with the happiness of having had a hand in the new deal. I did not come to Congress to make a career of it but to serve my district, and I feel that the people of the Ninth District of Michigan, who sent me here, know that I have been faithful to my trust.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, one or two questions have developed during the debate that ought to be answered for the benefit of Members.

My distinguished colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], who, in my judgment, is the best authority on postal legislation in the Congress and who has always been a sincere advocate of air-mail legislation and whose help I have always appreciated, asked the Department a question which was rather difficult to answer sufficiently to satisfy both the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] and other members of the committee. The question asked was would they throw out the present contracts and follow the provisions of this bill? Of course, it is hard for them to say what they will do, because we have one bill in the House and another bill in the Senate. In the House bill we authorize 1-year contracts and little else, and in the Senate bill the air-mail lines may be turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission as quickly as certificates of convenience and necessity are approved. If competitive bidding was to become a permanent policy, perhaps our bill would be followed. The Department cannot determine its policy until Congress passes the legislation. We extend the life of the present 3-month contract for 9 months, showing a necessity for the bill by requiring that all such extensions follow the provisions contained in this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That this act may be cited as the "Air Mail Act of 1934."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. I do not want to delay the passage of this bill, for I expect to support it, and I hope it can be speedily passed.

I overlooked in my remarks a little poetry I had compiled with a great deal of labor, and I think it would be losing a masterpiece if I failed to read it to the House. [Laughter.] It is entitled "A Revised Version of Alice in Wonderland", to harmonize with the Postmaster General in Blunderland:

"Herald, read the accusation!" said the king.

On this the White Rabbit blew three blasts on the trumpet, and then unrolled the parchment scroll and read as follows:

"The Postmaster General, he broke some contracts,
All on a wintry day,
'The Knaves', he said, 'they stole those contracts,
And took them quite away.
What if the charges have no bearing
And are not proven in any way?
I'll cancel them all without a hearing,
Public opinion be what it may.'"

"Consider your verdict", the king said to the jury.

"Not yet, not yet", the Rabbit hastily interrupted, "there's a great deal to come before that."

"Call the first witness", said the king; and the White Rabbit blew three blasts on the trumpet and called out: "First witness."

The first witness was the hatter, James A. Farley. He came in with his certificate as Democratic National Chairman in one hand and his certificate as Democratic State chairman for New York in the other. "I beg pardon, your majesty", he began, "for bringing these in, but I hadn't quite finished dispensing patronage, political and aviation, when I was sent for." "You ought to have finished", said the king. "When did you begin?"

The Postmaster General looked at Solicitor Karl Crowley, who had followed him into the court, and Harllee Branch, the Second Assistant Postmaster General. "I think it was February 9", he said. "February 6", said the Solicitor. "March 4", added the Second Assistant Postmaster General. "At the Chicago convention", said Silliman Evans, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, and formerly an official of the American Airways.

"Write that down", the king said to the jury, and the jury eagerly wrote down all four dates on their slates and then added them up and reduced the answer to 59-cent dollars on a silver basis of 25 percent, in accordance with the new brain-storm formula.

"What about the air-mail contractors who acted under the express provisions of the law, and those who did not sign up for any extensions?" asked Alice.

"What do we care about the Congress or the law?" said the king. "And if they didn't sign up that only makes the matter worse; they must have meant some mischief or else they would have signed their names like honest men."

"That proves their guilt", said the Queen.

But Alice still claimed that was no evidence of collusion or fraud.

"Let the jury consider the verdict", the King said for about the twentieth time that day.

"No, no," said the Queen, "sentence first—verdict afterward."

"Stuff and nonsense", said Alice loudly. "The idea of having the sentence first."

"That's right", said the White Rabbit; "but haven't you ever heard of the spoils system and the Postmaster General's ukase that might makes right and that the G.O.P. is never right?"

This concludes the blunderland hearings on the cancelation of the air-mail contracts. But, in order to see that exact justice is done, each of the companies whose contracts have been canceled have been permitted to submit scrolls, parchments, and left hind feet of white rabbits to General Farley.

The Postmaster General, on being asked by the newspapermen for his version of the trial, issued a special warning to the reporters who asked too many question, and a statement, entitled "A hearing that was never held", or "The magic formula as used by Commissar Farley in Blunderland":

"Good morning, correspondents, good morning one and all,
Don't tear your shoits, I'll shoot the woiks!
This story is no stall.
I'll tell you guys; I'll tell you now
The reasons why and where and how
I busted up the Hoover deal
And made the Transport pilots squeal.

"I didn't like the way those guys
Had made those contracts—is it wise
To make a contract, when you make it
So a big political chief can't break it?
Holy suffering cats! I'll say
That don't make sense, not today.

"The greatest thing in our New Deal
Is the pain we make the Big Shots feel.
We sock them hard and raise a welt
And every sock's below the belt.
You saw how Lindbergh got smacked down,
We put some new thorns in his crown.
We like them big, we like them burley,
They're all alike to Stephen Early.
We're smart as hell, and don't forget
We haven't even started yet.
What you will see before we're through
Will even scare hard guys like you.

"We're on our way to domination
Of every citizen in this Nation.
Your turn will come for asking questions;
What you should ask for are suggestions.
If you don't like them, that will be
Just too bad for boys like thee.
Now, as to all this current squawk
It's coming mostly from New York,
That wicked town so big and tough
Where I learned how to do my stuff.
What to us, is contract abrogation,
In this socialistic administration?"

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Effective July 1, 1934, the rate of postage on air mail shall be 5 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof.

(b) When used in this act—

(1) The term "air mail" means mail of any class prepaid at the rate of postage prescribed in subsection (a) of this section.

(2) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

(3) The term "airplane" includes any lighter-than-air aircraft.

(4) The term "pilot" includes copilot.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 24, strike out all of lines 24 and 25, and in line 1, on page 15, substitute the numeral "3" for the numeral "4."

The committee amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for periods of not exceeding 1 year, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile. The base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 35 cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, plus one tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month.

(b) In case of a determination by the Postmaster General that any bidder is not responsible or is otherwise disqualified under the terms of this act, such determination shall be subject to review in any manner authorized by law.

(c) The Postmaster General shall not award contracts for air-mail routes in excess of an aggregate of 29,000 miles, and shall not establish schedules for air-mail transportation on such routes in excess of an annual aggregate of 40,000,000 airplane-miles.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, as additional paragraph, at end of section 3:

"Authority is hereby conferred upon the Postmaster General to provide and pay for the carriage of mail by air in conformity with the terms of any contract therefor issued prior to the passage of this act, and to extend any such contract for an additional period not exceeding 9 months, at a rate of compensation not exceeding that provided for in the original contract: Provided, That the contractor shall consent in writing to the extension and shall likewise agree to comply with all provisions of this act during the extended period of the contract."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Any person having a claim against the United States arising out of the annulment of an air-mail contract heretofore held by it, may prosecute such claim in the Court of Claims of the United States, if suit therefor is brought within 1 year after such annulment. No person shall be ineligible to bid and contract for carrying air mail under this act by reason of the provisions of section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (act of June 8, 1872; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 432).

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MEAD: At the end of section 5, page 16, line 18, add: "nor by reason of any restriction imposed in prior legislation in respect to air-mail contracts."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of this amendment, prior legislation requires all companies to have 6 months' experience on a line at least 250 miles in length. Recently all of the old companies were reorganized, and none could qualify unless we adopt this amendment. This amendment, therefore, is helpful to all companies.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Under this amendment, that is, under section 5 as amended, will this permit anyone, regardless of prior air-mail experience, to come in and bid on these contracts? In other words, someone not previously carrying the mail, some little fellow who did not have the right or a chance to fly the mail for 250 miles. Would he be eligible to bid?

Mr. MEAD. If he meets with the specifications already laid down in the advertisement.

Mr. McFARLANE. What are those specifications?

Mr. MEAD. They are rather lengthy. They include responsibility, a bond, and other requirements.

Mr. McFARLANE. Do they require flying any particular mileage?

Mr. MEAD. Not necessarily.

Mr. McFARLANE. In other words, could an independent concern, an aviator with equipment meeting the specifications, come in and bid upon it?

Mr. MEAD. Not under the Watres Act, but he could under the advertisements now being published.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does this amendment conflict with that?

Mr. MEAD. No; this amendment will take effect at the expiration of the 3 months' contract, after which they will have to follow the provisions in this bill, but this requirement is not included in the Post Office specifications.

Mr. McFARLANE. What I am trying to get at is this: After this temporary period has passed, are we going to put that 250-mile provision back into the law?

Mr. MEAD. Not during the life of this act. But such a requirement is in the present Air Mail Act. The adoption of this amendment will repeal that portion of the law.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question. I did not get this quite clearly. Does this preclude new companies from bidding?

Mr. MEAD. It does not. This increases the bidding by permitting new companies to bid.

Mr. KELLER. That is what I wanted to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HARLAN: Page 16, strike out lines 10, 11, 12, 13, up to and including the word "annulment" in line 14.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment in what appears to me to be nothing else than a spirit of common sense. Since 1887 we have had section 250 of title 28 of the United States Code. That grants to everybody the right, in the event of a violation of a contract by the Government, if the violation be unlawful, to go into the courts of the United States and sue for damages. That law has been in effect ever since 1887. It was amended in 1911. It has been on the statute books all the time that this question has been before the people. For political purposes there has been a very obvious campaign to convince the American people that these aviation companies have been deprived of some rights to go into court. That right has been in their possession all the time. With that right in their possession, if we come here and at this time reenact and give them something that they already possess, it will give the impression to the American people just exactly what has been handed out here this afternoon, namely, that we are admitting they did not have the right to go into court and that there is some justification for them in filing a suit. They filed one suit in New York, a perfectly clownish and absurd thing. They sued the Postmaster General personally; and for 100 years, ever since the case of Marbury against Madison, everybody has known that that is impossible.

Now, they have a second travesty or farce of a suit pending here in the District of Columbia, again to try to tell the people of the United States that for some reason they are deprived of their rights to come and sue on this contract. I certainly hope the committee will consent to strike out this language. I appeal to you Members on the Democratic side of the House particularly, if you keep that clause in there it will not be interpreted as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS] said on this floor, that we were daring them to file suit. How absurd that is. The dare is already in the statute. It will be interpreted that we are admitting the truth of Colonel Lindbergh's statement that they were being deprived of their day in court. We will be tacitly telling the people that there has been some kind of a pressure on these companies. Otherwise it does not mean anything in there, because we are granting them something that they already have.

To me it seems absolutely absurd to put this clause in unless you want to play into their hands and tell the people that by the action of the Postmaster General we have prevented them from having their day in court, which is exactly what they want.

I should certainly like to hear someone say why that sentence is in here, other than the reason that has been given.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The purpose of this clause in the bill is just as I stated when I was on the floor before, it is just like an invitation that a strong man extends to a weak man to fight. He does not expect the invitation to be accepted. One of the bills offered both here and in the Senate during this flood of air-mail legislation contained a provision barring anyone from bidding upon an air-mail contract if he had a suit pending against the Government. That provision was offensive to the Post Office Department and to the administration. The courts of the land were open to them if they wanted to pursue their remedy. It is a noteworthy fact that notwithstanding this right they have to go into the Court of Claims, no suit has been commenced. If they were wronged as much as they claim they were wronged, certainly they would have filed suit before this time.

This may be only a reiteration of a right they already have. It is put there for the purpose of showing that there is nothing in this act intended to deprive them of that right.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. The amendment pending, being true, does the gentleman not think that we are playing into the hands of the Air Trust in putting this in here? Frankly, I did not know that that provision was in the law. That being the law now, it seems to me we will be admitting ourselves out of court, so to speak, and we are encouraging them and baiting them, and I think we should strike this language out. It looks to me like we should strike out this provision because under existing law they have the right they have been complaining about, and we are playing into their hands by putting it in here.

Mr. DOBBINS. I would say that that argument might very well have been directed to the omission of this clause from the bill when it was being framed. It is in the Senate bill also, but since the clause now appears in the bill for consideration before the House, it seems to me that the action of the House in striking it out would look as though we now intend to deprive them of their day in court, when there is no such intention, I believe, on the part of anyone connected with the administration.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to consume the 2 minutes that I yielded back a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, the section of the act to which I refer applies to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and it reads as follows: Section 250, title 28:

The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims (except for pensions) founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, upon any regulation of an executive department, upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect to which claims the party would be entitled to redress—

And then there is another provision further down that even in cases of tort, where the tort arises from breach of contract, they may sue.

The statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS] that this was here to prevent them from putting an exclusive provision in the bid is certainly not tenable, because without an expressive act of Congress, the Post Office Department could not put that exclusive provision in there, and that is evidenced by the fact that in the Senate bill there was an express authorization to allow that clause to be put into the contract. So that whatever your intentions are, that could not be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] has expired.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of discussion of the cancelation of these air-mail contracts, and the administration and the Post Office Department and the President himself has practically been charged with legalized murder by our friend from New York [Mr. HAMILTON FISH].

I want to cite to you what one of those air-mail companies are doing. I think I can make a clear case of willful murder against one of them if they can sustain any charge of any kind of murder in the carrying of air mail by the Army.

I happened to be on the coast last October and my wife flew from the coast to a point in Indiana. Two days after she had left I picked up a newspaper and saw that a United Air liner, a Boeing plane, had crashed in northern Indiana. According to the papers, it was suggested by the management that a bomb had been placed in the plane in Cleveland by some unknown person, and that that was the cause of the crash. Shortly after I came to Washington and discussed this accident with an aeronautical engineer who was employed here in this city of Washington. I asked him what he thought about the crash of that plane, and whether he thought any bomb had been placed in it. He laughed and said, "There was no bomb." He said that entire line of planes was weak; that the crash was caused by tail flutter, due to a weakness in the tail assembly. He said that what had happened was that the tail flutter had amplified and cracked the frame of the plane in the air.

I did not pay much attention to it until the flying of the air mail by the Army was brought into the question. Then I took the matter up again. I have here a letter from the Department of Commerce practically verifying the story this aeronautical engineer gave me.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert this letter in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

(The letter referred to follows:)

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
DIRECTOR OF AERONAUTICS,
Washington, March 14, 1934.

Hon. M. J. HART,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have your letter of March 12 requesting information on control of speed on airlines, and specific questions concerning speed on Boeing planes.

I will answer your questions in order as follows:

1. The Department of Commerce does have control over the speed of passenger airliners as specified in Aeronautics Bulletin No. 7-E, Air Commerce Regulations Governing the Operation of Scheduled Interstate Passenger Air Transport Service, section 10, which reads as follows: "The Secretary of Commerce may from time to time prescribe uniform instructions pertaining to operations, the issuance of which by the holder of the certificate of authority shall be mandatory."

In addition to this general authority, the Department requires the issuance of an approved-type certificate for any and all airplanes. This certificate guarantees that the airplane in question has passed tests for stability, performance, and strength at specified top and cruising speeds. In the case of the Boeing airliner, type 247, this speed is 182 miles an hour top speed at 5,000 feet, and 152 miles an hour cruising speed at the same elevation.

2. The general authority on the permission given us under section 10 of the Air Commerce Regulations above referred to, has not to date been exercised on issuance of any special order. We have only exercised speed control by issuance of the approved-type certificate.

3. Boeing planes used by United Air Lines between July 1, 1933, and September 1933 were allowed to fly at their maximum rates as shown on the approved-type certificate, and as stated above.

4. The Department of Commerce did not issue any order changing the speed of these planes. At a conference held December 9, 1933, in Washington between officials of the Aeronautics Branch, Boeing Airplane Co. and United Air Lines, United Air Lines voluntarily agreed to reduce the speed of their airplanes, pending the results of tests on this ship to be conducted at Dayton, Ohio, by the Matériel Division of the Army Air Corps. The restricted speeds agreed on applied to altitudes from sea level to 5,000 feet, and were as follows:

Elevation	Revolutions per minute	True air speed, miles per hour
Sea level	1,650	136
1 mile	1,675	140
2 miles	1,690	144
3 miles	1,740	148
4 miles	1,780	152
5 miles	1,810	156

5. The tests of the fuselage to destruction showed requirements far in excess of minimum safety insofar as static strength was concerned. However, the vibration tests developed a possible weakness in the elevator torque tube (member of tail assembly), which, in the opinion of the Department, made advisable a strengthening of this member before permission was given to allow the ships to be operated at normal speeds. While this may not have been absolutely necessary, United Air Lines deemed this a reasonably precautionary measure. They have now replaced this type on most of their ships, and such ships are permitted to operate at their original speeds.

I believe that this should give you all the facts in our possession concerning your questions, and appreciate the opportunity to be of service to you.

Sincerely yours,

EUGENE L. VIDAL,
Director of Aeronautics.

Mr. HART. As a result of the investigation the United Air Lines voluntarily agreed to reduce the speed of their planes from 182 miles an hour at top speed to 156.

Mr. McFARLANE. What was the reason for the reduction in speed?

Mr. HART. To cut down vibration which caused the crash of this plane in Indiana. Several more planes were wrecked and I have in my office a record of them furnished by the Department of Commerce. It was common knowledge among aeronautical engineers and people informed in aviation circles that these planes were unsafe because of a weakness in the tail assembly. They should not have been flown and the company flying them took chances, which they knew.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HART. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Was that fact known to the Department of Commerce?

Mr. HART. I do not know; they do not admit it. I would furnish the name of the engineer to whom I refer except that the same thing would happen to him that happened to Gen. Billy Mitchell when he criticized the Army Air Service.

Ever since the cancelation of the air-mail contracts my friend, Mr. FISH, from New York, has spent a good deal of his time in defending the gentlemen who were engaged in carrying, or who financed, the air-mail companies. If he can get any satisfaction out of defending these people, I am sure he is entitled to it. I assure the gentleman from New York that they need all the defense they can muster. Anyone who is willing to defend contracts on the floor of this House for those who when subpenaed with the records to appear before a legislative committee, hastily burns the records before the Government can get possession of them, has a different attitude toward public service than I have.

I have not been here as long as the gentleman from New York and my head may be a bit thick in understanding and appraising good public service. I understand the gentleman from New York in charging the administration with legalized murder adopted that expression from a statement from that famous ace of the war, Eddie Rickenbacker. I would be the last one to minimize the service of this great aviator to his country during the war. I would not say a word to detract from his glorious record. If his service to his country has been dulled, no one has dulled it but himself when he rushed to the defense of these pirates who controlled the air-mail companies. I say pirates and I am not referring to the pilots. Mr. Rickenbacker since his return from the war has been a promoter. His name was attached to a car which was built in Detroit. The company and the car have disappeared; I presume they have gone on the rocks. Mr. Rickenbacker is now engaged with one of the air-mail companies involved in the present dispute with the Government, and as such, having an interest, is not a competent witness.

The gentleman from New York has told of the large percentage of accidents occurring in a short period of time, due, he says, to "inexperience in flying the air mail." The gentleman from New York, if he has looked into the matter, knows these accidents were not brought about by inexperience in flying air mail in particular but because of lack of training in flying, and because the ships they were given to fly were not equipped with the modern devices for safety and for blind flying. Someone in the Army is to blame for advising the President that the Army was equipped to fly the mail. When the administration discovered that the Army planes were not properly equipped they were grounded and were properly equipped and put back in the service. Since then practically no accidents have occurred.

Our country should pay tribute to these pilots who responded to the call and obeyed their orders, knowing that their planes were not equipped for the duty which they had to perform, but in the loss of their lives they have rendered a great service to national defense. We now know that were we subject to any of the dangers—communism or any other hobgloblin that the gentleman from New York is continually conjuring up in his mind—and the Army air forces had to be ordered to mass on the Pacific coast, we would have made a great exhibition for a foreign enemy. Because at least 50 percent of these planes never would have reached the coast. Instead, we would have had wrecked planes and dead pilots scattered across the continent. We now know the condition our Army Air Service was in when the air-mail contracts were canceled. We know the manufacturers who had a monopoly on the equipment that was not only used in flying air mail but for the needs of the Army and the Navy. The whole industry was absolutely controlled by a few bankers. Independent development of aviation was stifled. That situation will now be corrected.

For the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], I want to give him a list of the loss of lives which occurred last year between October 10 and November 24, 1933. The first fatality in this period was when a United Air Lines plane, Boeing No. 247, crashed at McCool, Ind., killing 2 pilots, 1 stewardess, and 4 passengers. The next crash occurred on November 9, United Air plane, Boeing No. 247, at Portland, Oreg., killing 1 pilot and 3 passengers. The next crash was November 24, United Air Lines, Boeing No. 247, killing 2 pilots and 1 stewardess. Here is a list of 14 lives in 45 days, which will equal the record made by the Army. Notwithstanding the correction made, as indicated by the letter from the Department of Commerce which I have inserted, another crash occurred with a United Air Lines, Boeing No. 247, on February 23, 1934, in which 2 pilots, 1 stewardess, and 5 passengers lots their lives; a total of 8 people.

Here is a loss of life of 22 people in a little over 4 months.

When you take into consideration the fact that the defect of this type of plane was common knowledge and discussed in aeronautical circles and they were permitted to fly and that these air-mail and passenger-carrying companies would risk the lives of innocent passengers, I say this is not legalized murder but is willful murder. The gentleman from New York can defend these air-mail companies, but I intend to defend the public both from their extortion and from the wanton waste of lives of innocent travelers. As the years go by the real value of the cancelation of these contracts will be demonstrated in the unrestricted growth and development of aviation which has now been rescued from a group of avaricious bankers whose sole interest in these companies was profit.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendment thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. All persons holding air-mail contracts shall keep their books, records, and accounts under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General, and he is hereby authorized to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts of such contractors and to require a full financial report under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan charged me, and charged me correctly, with stating a month ago that the carrying of the air mail by the Army Air Corps was legalized murder. But I did not invent that term. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that that term was first used by Col. Eddie Rickenbacker, who knows something about aviation. He shot down 26 Germans during the War. He has devoted his life to the study and practice of aviation and knows exactly what he is talking about. It was a prediction which has come true.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. HART. Does the gentleman know that Colonel Rickenbacker has turned from a flier into a promoter and that promoting is his principal business?

Mr. FISH. While I do not know what he is doing today, I know that he does understand aviation.

Mr. HART. He is a promoter and is more interested in promoting in the field of aviation than he is in the flying end of it.

Mr. FISH. I am going to answer the gentleman's statement and I think I can prove just the opposite. The question in which we are concerned is whether it is legalized murder. What happened? Twelve young Army flyers were killed in a period of 1 month. In the entire flying of the commercial air companies during the period of the whole year preceding that only eight pilots were killed, or a difference in ratio of 50 to 1. Had the same proportion of commercial flyers been killed, there would have been in excess of 600 deaths.

Mr. HART. How many have been killed within the last month?

Mr. FISH. Probably one or two; as a matter of fact, I do not know.

Mr. HART. I think there was not one.

Mr. FISH. I hope the gentleman is correct. The gentleman refers to commercial air pilots?

Mr. HART. No; I am referring to the Army pilots.

Mr. FISH. One reason was that they were unaccustomed to the routes.

Mr. HART. The gentleman means they were not properly equipped.

Mr. FISH. I meant exactly what I said, that they were not familiar with the routes.

Mr. HART. They did not know how to fly the beam.

Mr. FISH. They did not know how to fly the beam, and they did not know the routes.

What are the facts? The facts are that the commercial airplane carriers carried the air mail a total of 109,000 miles a day, whereas the Army carried it only 40,000 miles a day, according to their own schedules, and the schedule was again reduced to 25,000 miles. Carrying the mail these 25,000 miles a day resulted in 12 deaths and many injured pilots, and in the entire year, covering 108,000 miles, the commercial air carriers had 8 deaths among the pilots.

There is no use going beyond the record, because the record speaks for itself. Eddie Rickenbacker made the statement that it was legalized murder and he made that statement before the Army pilots began to fly the air mail, but he proved to be correct, and that is why we took it away from them, not because they are not courageous, not because they could not fly, but because they had not had the experience.

May I also say, as I pointed out before, that of the 12 men that were killed, 8 of them had been out of Kelly

School less than 1 year. They only had a few hundred hours' flying, whereas most of the commercial flyers had from 6 to 10 thousand hours' flying time and had flown the mail from 8 to 15 years. It is just a question of experience, and when Eddie Rickenbacker made the statement it was correct, and it is silly for us to argue about it now. He knew what he was talking about and the proof of the pudding is in the eating. We are not aviation experts. All we can do is to go by the record.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen on the other side will go through the bill and stop this extraneous matter, all right; but if not, I am going to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say that if we can cut out the politics we will get through this evening.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentlemen on the Republican side want their politics in, but they do not want us to answer them.

Mr. SNELL. I made the suggestion to the chairman of the committee a few minutes ago.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield any further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would not want to prevent me from answering the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BYRNS. I will make a point of order against any discussion not confined to this bill after the gentleman from Texas has concluded.

Mr. SNELL. Why not make it now?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from Texas is going to answer the gentleman from New York. But after he concludes, I am going to insist that Members confine themselves to the bill and the amendments under consideration.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. That will not prevent me from answering him, because when we do get a quorum, I will still have the floor, and will then proceed.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to go on with the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] answered the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART]. That is two. Let us stop this business and go on with the bill. We have had two gentlemen discuss politics in connection with the bill and that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART] answered the first political speech made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I intend to answer his last speech, just made, in which he lugged in politics.

Mr. BYRNS. We can get through with the bill in a half hour.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will go through the bill I am willing to sit here, but I am not going to listen to these extraneous political speeches.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of no quorum if the chairman of the committee, Mr. MEAD, will make a motion to close all debate on the section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not permit that to be done, because I have the floor, and such a motion, without my consent, is out of order.

Mr. MEAD. May I say that we have no more amendments, and I think it will take about 10 minutes to finish the reading of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman is going to make a political speech I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to make a political speech. I am going to answer the one made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. SNELL. What is the gentleman going to talk about?

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to talk some about the bill and incidentally answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I will not withdraw the point of no quorum unless the chairman of the committee [Mr. MEAD] makes a motion to close all debate on the section.

Mr. MEAD. I do not like to deprive the gentleman from Texas of the opportunity to proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I say to the chairman of the committee that I have one amendment I should like to have the opportunity to present? I do not want to go along with the understanding the entire bill will be read without giving us an opportunity of offering an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I was recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. DOBBINS. Will the gentleman withhold his request? Will the gentleman from Texas yield to a motion that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 2 minutes?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I want 5 minutes. I will get it the first thing in the morning if we adjourn now for want of a quorum.

Mr. TABER. I do not care anything about that.

Mr. BLANTON. I will agree to take up only 3 minutes, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will withdraw his point of no quorum.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the thing of greatest importance just now to the American people is honest government, honestly administered. If we will eliminate all partisan politics, no American will criticize our President for requiring honesty in air-mail contracts, or for canceling contracts that they ascertained beyond peradventure of a doubt were dishonest and a damnable fraud upon the American people. What was the administration to do when it discovered the fraud and became convinced that the contracts were dishonest? Should the administration have winked at the dishonesty? Should it have condoned the fraud? Was it the duty of an honest, fearless administration to allow fraudulent, dishonest grafters to continue taking the people's money out of the Treasury? No; of course not. Our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, immediately put his stamp of disapproval upon dishonesty, and he properly annulled the dishonest contracts, and he met the resultant responsibility by having the mail carried during the interim.

If we are not biased partisans, we will all admit that the administration was forced to take over this business during an unprecedented continuing blizzard. Very naturally, the ordinary hazard materially increased. But the job was bravely done as well as could have been expected under such unusual conditions and situations. Every red-blooded American in the United States ought to commend the administration for letting it be known that no dishonesty is to be contenanced in the business affairs of this Government.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is too valuable a citizen and too valuable a Member of this House to waste any more of his time in partisan criticism of the present administration.

He was a valuable man in Harvard, he was a valuable football player, he was a valuable man on the battle fronts of France, he has been valuable here in this House, and he was valuable when he was fighting the Communists and I was fighting them with him shoulder to shoulder. Why has he ceased to do good work? Why does he now waste his time? Why he does not use his great talent to better advantage I cannot understand.

This is all I have to say in answering him.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. No contract awarded under this act or any interest in any such contract shall be sold, assigned, or transferred by the person to whom such contract is awarded, to any other person, except with the approval of the Postmaster General; and upon any such sale, assignment, or transfer without such approval, the contract, as well as such sale, assignment, or transfer, shall be null and void.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: On page 18, line 7, after the word "General" strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept the amendment, and I trust we can proceed with the reading of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. The Postmaster General may cause any contract awarded under this act to be canceled for disregard of or failure by the contractor to comply with the terms of its contract or with the provisions of this act or for any conspiracy or acts designed to defraud the United States with respect to any such contract. This provision is cumulative to other remedies now provided by law.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am not going to take more than a couple of minutes and I shall not indulge in any further comment about the compliments of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I modify the request to make it 1 minute.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to answer the compliments of my friend from Texas. I feel he paid me a tribute. I do, however, want to bring out the point here that there has been a great deal said about the reduction in the rates, and the administration has been commended for it. This is what Senator MCCARRAN had to say about this very matter, and he is a Democrat from Nevada:

Is it not true that these temporary contracts are more destructive to aviation than anything heretofore done.

Mind you, this is not a Republican speaking. Senator AUSTIN, a Republican member of the investigating committee, answered as follows:

That is absolutely true. The bids just opened were sacrificial bids. Companies had to bid ridiculously low to get the contracts taken over so as to protect their property even at a loss and in the hope of eventually getting a square deal.

Mr. Seymour, president of the American Airlines, Inc., also denounced the low bids as a source of danger to the flying public and a menace to the financial security of the air transport industry.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. The President is hereby authorized to appoint a commission composed of five members to be appointed by him, not more than three members to be appointed from any one political party, for the purpose of making an immediate study and survey, and to report to Congress not later than February 1, 1935, its recommendations of a broad policy covering all phases of aviation and the relation of the United States thereto. Members appointed who are not already in the service of the United States shall receive compensation of not exceeding the rate of compensation of a Senator or Representative.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

I am not going to take the time of the House. I spoke a few moments ago on section 17, and instead of striking out the whole section I am offering an amendment, in line 18, after the words "all phases of", inserting the words "commercial aviation."

I want to call the attention of Members who may not have been here when I spoke before to the fact that we now have three commissions studying this subject, one composed of members of the Military Affairs Committee and one composed of members of the Naval Affairs Committee and one appointed by the Secretary of War. Now comes a proposal for the establishment of another commission. It is proposed that they shall all report before 1935. It seems to me the addition of another commission will only confuse the issue. So, if we confine this to commercial aviation, which would take in the air mail and anything else that may be pertinent, but exempt naval and military services, I think it would be for the best interests of the country.

Mr. DELANEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. DELANEY. Is it not a fact that the hearings of the gentleman's committee have all been executive?

Mr. GOSS. Practically all of them have been executive.

Mr. DELANEY. Will all of your testimony be printed later on?

Mr. GOSS. I do not think some of the testimony will be printed. I do not think it should be printed in the interest of national defense, but some of the testimony that is pertinent and does not disclose any military secrets will perhaps be published, and, for one, I shall vote to have it published.

Mr. DELANEY. Will he testimony given before the gentleman's committee be available to the commission that it is proposed to establish?

Mr. GOSS. Of course not. We are working under instructions of the House. We are to report proposed legislation back to the House sometime before next year, just as this commission will do; but our testimony cannot be made available to the commission, because it is of a confidential nature involving war reserves and various other matters. The committee is working diligently and it will bring out something constructive, I am quite sure, just as the gentleman's committee has done.

Mr. DELANEY. Our committee met and worked on this matter very seriously.

Mr. GOSS. I know that.

Mr. DELANEY. Our report has been printed and will be available to this commission.

Mr. GOSS. I appreciate that, and, so far as the Army is concerned, part of it will be available.

The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 18, after the words "phases of", insert the word "commercial."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, because this is for all phases of aviation and pooling the information. I move that all debate on this section now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. Such Commission shall organize by electing one of its members as chairman, and it shall appoint a secretary whose salary shall not exceed $5,000 per annum. Said Commission shall have the power to pay actual expenses of members of the Commission in the performance of their duties, to employ counsel, experts, and clerks, to subpena witnesses, to require the production by witnesses of papers and documents pertaining to such matters as are within the jurisdiction of the Commission, to administer oaths, and to take testimony, and for such purpose there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $100,000.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 8, strike out the sign and figures "$100,000" and insert "$75,000."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute for the Senate bill.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PARKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WORK IN TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY (H.DOC. NO. 365)

THE FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address delivered last night by my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. JOHNSON.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following radio address delivered by my colleague, Hon. MAGNUS JOHNSON, over the network of the National Broadcasting Co. Wednesday, May 9, 1934, urging the passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill to refinance agriculture.

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, in discussing the farm-debt problem and possible and workable solutions to this problem which now confronts American agriculture, I want to thank the National Broadcasting Co. for making this time available to me this evening.

Naturally it is impossible for me to discuss fully the complete farm problem or all that should be done by this Seventy-third Congress in saving America's greatest industry, but I shall try to present first the present plight of agriculture, and secondly, the measures now before Congress which if adopted will, in my opinion—and at this point I will say in the opinion of more than a million American farmers, workers, and business men—do more to correct the unfair balance between the cost of producing the products of the farm and the prices paid for these products by the consuming public.

First of all we must ask ourselves, Why does the farmer want the Frazier-Lemke bill? Why does the farmer want rational inflation of the currency? Why is the farmer asking for cost of production? These questions when answered and acted upon will give agriculture the impetus necessary for recovery.

Today our farmers are faced with approximately $8,500,000,000 worth of mortgage indebtedness and with an additional debt of $3,500,000,000 made on other loans. To this they are asked to pay in the way of interest charges for this $12,000,000,000 load of obligations, approximately $875,000,000, which is annually paid out of the gross income; add to this stupendous figure $775,000,000 the farmers are required to pay in taxes, and briefly you have the fixed debt of American agriculture at the end of 1933, when both industry and business were rounding the corner and heading for increased profits and ledgers were showing decided gains in purchasing power of labor. But mind you, farm prices have yet come nowhere within the reach of parity with the things that the farmer has to buy. Unless approach to parity prices between these two factors is made, can the farmer ever liquidate this huge debt that I have just stated that he must pay? Farmers are still required to pay on an average of 6 percent on their mortgage indebtedness, while the banking and industrial enterprises of this Nation are borrowing money at less than 1 percent.

Faced with sagging prices, depressed and speculative markets, rising costs on the things he has to buy, the farmer cannot look at 1934 with the hope that he will be able to share in the new deal. How can their spirits be raised by newspaper talk of recovery, of increased wages for labor, of mounting profits for business when they see all around them farm prices still below the cost of production? How can they speak with hope and courage when they are burdened with mortgage debts and high interest charges that are beyond the hope of ever being paid?

The American farmer of this country knows what he wants in the way of national legislation. Don't ever be fooled about that. He sees all around him the difficulties with which he is surrounded; he knows the constant fight he has had in trying to save his home and farm. He has watched with a bitterness in his heart the foreclosure after foreclosure of his neighbors' farms. He has seen the results of his lifetime struggles with the soil and what has been the fruits of his labors. And again I repeat the American farmer knows what he needs in the way of farm relief, and I tell you the farmer wants the Frazier-Lemke bill.

The passage of this legislation does not mean that we would be passing a bill that will be an experiment in any sense of the word. The Frazier-Lemke measure has been endorsed by 21 State legislatures. It has the endorsement of the National Farmers' Union, the Farmers' Holiday, the Farm Bureau organizations, and similar refinancing legislation along the principles of the Frazier-Lemke bill has been advocated by the Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange. In my own State of Minnesota hundreds of communities, civic clubs, and farm groups have asked for the Frazier-Lemke bill. And may I state here, my friends, this bill has the endorsement of more than a million American farmers. Truly we cannot fail the basic industry of this great Nation by pushing to one side this most beneficial bill.

Mr. LEMKE clearly explains the principle of this bill when he says: "To loosen this strangle-hold upon our people, we propose as a remedy the Frazier-Lemke bill. This bill provides that the United States Government shall refinance existing farm indebtedness at 1½ percent interest and 1½ percent principal on the amortization plan, not by issuing bonds but by issuing Federal Reserve notes secured by the best securities on earth, first mortgages on farm lands; better security than gold or silver, because you cannot eat gold or silver but you can eat the products that grow on the farms; therefore your life depends upon the farms. They are the best security on the face of the earth. If our Government has enough intelligence to do this, it will make a profit of $6,345,000,000 at 1½ percent interest in 47 years, the time required for amortization of the farm indebtedness."

Mr. LEMKE states further. I quote: "Let us compare the Frazier-Lemke bill with the one passed by the special session of Congress, written in New York in the atmosphere of the money changers. Under that bill, if all the farm indebtedness were refinanced, the farmers of this Nation would pay $12,492,500,000 in 39 years to the bondholders. Under the Frazier-Lemke bill the farmers would have to pay just $6,149,500,000 less interest in 47 years and at the same time the Government would make a net profit of $6,345,000,000 and to that extent lessen our Federal tax burden."

In 1929 Congress canceled for our European debtors approximately $11,000,000,000. These were debts contracted between this Nation and Europe, and which were wiped out by Congress, while at the same time the American farmer was watching this wholesale cancelation of foreign debts he also found legislative stumbling blocks in his path and nothing done to solve his own debt problems. These loans which our country made to Europe, amounting to billions of American dollars, came out of the soil. The wealth of our Nation, produced by the laborers and farmers, and money which left our shores was put into the wheels of production in Europe. The foreign countries pumped life-blood into their broken-down system with American capital, and now our people must pay this gift to Europe twofold. The bonds which our country sold to the American people are bearing a high rate of interest and are an obligation which must be met out of the annual income, and, in other words, form a great part of the fixed charges which our citizens must meet each year. In a few words, then, the farmers are being foreclosed and required to pay high interest to help pay the debt Uncle Sam is asking the American citizens to assume and which he has released the nations across the sea from meeting.

The money that would be put into circulation through the passage of this bill, it has been said by Wall Street, would cheapen our currency, would ruin our financial structure, and break down industry. This is not so. For when a people have been subjected to starvation, humility, and relief aid from the Federal, State, and municipal Governments, then we cannot say that they are a happy people. How can our citizens be honestly happy when more than 10,000,000 men and women, willing and able to work, walk our streets without jobs and without the means to buy the essentials of life? This deplorable and abnormal condition has been brought about by the centralization and accumulation of the country's wealth. Money has become dear and has been taken out of the hands of our masses and now serves only the rich. If the interests of selfishness and greed are to be defeated, if special privilege is to vanish, if the captains of industry are to be told that they must relinquish capital and share the wealth that is produced by the farmer and worker, then we must decentralize our wealth. Money must find its way into the pockets and purses of the masses if we are to have a happy and contented people. The worker must be paid wages for his labor that will assure him a good standard of living. The farmer must be assured a cost of production for his products so that he may educate his children, feed and clothe his family, and maintain his property. This can help to be brought about through a rational inflation of our currency, so do not take fear at what the propagandists from the financial centers of this Nation have been saying about the evils of fresh money.

Much can be done yet to insure the passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill by this Congress. With all of the support behind this measure that I have stated a few minutes ago, this bill is still resting in the committee. A petition has been started by the author, Congressman WILLIAM LEMKE, of North Dakota, asking that it be considered by the whole House of Congress, and to have this done it is necessary that Congressman LEMKE secure 145 signers to his petition. As I speak to you tonight 134 Members of the House have signed this petition, 11 more out of the total membership of 435 Members of Congress are yet needed before the Frazier-Lemke bill will be considered by the House of Representatives. If this vital and beneficial legislation is to become a law, immediate action must be taken, and I urge every one of you to write or wire your Member of Congress to sign the Lemke petition now on the Speaker's desk.

Congress also has before it the Swank-Thomas bill to guarantee cost of production to the farmers. This measure is of widespread interest, the passage of which will guarantee just what the bill's title states: To insure the farmer the price for agricultural products of not less than the cost of production thereof. Other very important and much-discussed measures are the Thomas and Wheeler silver bills, which in substance provide the establishment of a bimetallic base for our currency. The passage of these silver measures will in my opinion aid in restoring silver to its proper place.

With an effort to bring this Nation out of the depression and with a desire to increase wages and commodity prices, the President has asked the Seventy-third Congress for certain emergency legislation. Congress has responded, not always willingly and many of the President's major administration bills were bitterly fought by the Republican wing with the intention of using this as issues in the forthcoming campaigns. May I say, as a member of the Farmer-Labor Party, that the third-party delegation has given the President every support in passing all of his major administrative bills and the Chief Executive is to be congratulated on his untiring and courageous efforts in helping to bring about national recovery. Not only has he received the genuine and patriotic cooperation from leaders in public life throughout the country, but is better loved by the great masses of our good American citizens and he will always be remembered as a great leader during a trying time.

Thank you and good night.

MONETARY USE OF SILVER

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there appeared in yesterday's New York Herald Tribune an article by Walter Lipp-mann on silver. I think it ought to go in the RECORD. I desire to read, however, a single paragraph from it:

The reason why the single gold standard worked as well as it did was that there were huge gold discoveries during the nineteenth century, and also because the development of modern banking caused the available gold to be used more efficiently. But the single gold standard has never worked well for any long period. From the seventies to the nineties it was unsatisfactory and in very bad repute. After that and until the World War it worked well, for there was much new gold from South Africa. Since the war it has never worked well, and it is perhaps no coincidence that the world depression began about a year after it was reestablished throughout the western world.

It is theoretically possible that there is enough gold in the world to sustain a tolerable price level, if the existing gold stocks were properly distributed and efficiently used, if no gold were sterilized by central banks or hoarded by individuals. But the fact is that gold is concentrated in three countries, that much of it is sterilized or hoarded. This has made gold abnormally valuable in terms of goods, which is another way of saying that world prices are abnormally low.

I ask that the entire article be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, May 10, 1934]

TODAY AND TOMORROW—SILVER

By Walter Lippmann

Whatever view one takes of the silver policy that is now being formulated, there is no reason to be astonished that there is to be a silver policy. In his message of January 15 the President made it quite plain that the gold bill was only "a further step which we hope will contribute to an ultimate world-wide solution" and that he was then "withholding any recommendation to the Congress looking to further extension of the monetary use of silver, because I believe we should gain more knowledge of the results of the London agreement and of our other monetary measures." But he left no doubt that he regarded silver as "such a crucial factor in much of the world's international trade that it cannot be neglected."

Since that declaration it has been certain that there would be a silver policy. There has been uncertainty as to what form it would take, when it would be adopted, how it would be applied. For there are as many different theories about silver as there are about gold. What appears to have happened in the past week is that the President has succeeded in formulating a program which he believes can be successfully administered.

The essential principle of the program, as indicated by the newspaper reports from Washington, is that silver is to be transformed in the United States from a commodity like coffee or zinc into a monetary instrument like gold. This is not a mere matter of raising the price of silver so that silver miners will have more income. It is not a price-raising scheme such as is being used to help wheat, cotton, or hogs. This is a change in the legal status of silver which establishes it as basic money in the United States.

For that reason it will, if adopted, mark an epoch in the history of money. Its effects will be world-wide. For it reverses the course of monetary policy during the past hundred years.

From the close of the Napoleonic wars to the onset of the present depression, silver, which from time immemorial has been money, has been progressively demonetized in one country after another. Step by step the single gold standard has been set up practically everywhere except in China. England was the first great country to abandon silver. That was, I believe, in 1819. Until 1873 England was the only important country on the single gold standard. Then Germany and the United States gave up silver in 1873. By 1878 the Latin Union had given it up. Also the Scandinavian countries. In 1893 the free coinage of silver was discontinued in British India. After the war virtually all the European countries which used silver for small change debased their coins. In the middle twenties India began to get rid of some of its silver. In 1929 a delegation of experts advised China to turn from silver to gold, though that has not been done. Thus for more than a hundred years the world has been engaged in discarding an important part of its monetary metal, namely silver, and has been proceeding to base all currencies and the whole credit of the world on gold alone.

The reason why silver was abandoned in the nineteenth century is that it could not be kept in a practical ratio with gold. In terms of gold it was either too dear or too cheap. If it was too dear, silver went out of circulation; if it was too cheap, gold went out of circulation. Bimetallism did not work, and because nobody knew any other way of using silver and gold except at some fixed ratio, silver was given up.

The reason why the single gold standard worked as well as it did was that there were huge gold discoveries during the nineteenth century and also because the development of modern banking caused the available gold to be used more efficiently. But the single gold standard has never worked well for any long period. From the seventies to the nineties it was unsatisfactory and in very bad repute. After that and until the World War it worked well, for there was much new gold from South Africa. Since the war it has never worked well, and it is perhaps no coincidence that the world depression began about a year after it was reestablished throughout the western world.

It is theoretically possible that there is enough gold in the world to sustain a tolerable price level, if the existing gold stocks were properly distributed and efficiently used, if no gold were sterilized by central banks or hoarded by individuals. But the fact is that gold is concentrated in three countries, that much of it is sterilized or hoarded. This has made gold abnormally valuable in terms of goods, which is another way of saying that world prices are abnormally low.

The fundamental monetary problem of the world is to deflate gold, to reduce the demand for it or to increase the supply of it, so that prices in terms of gold will rise. It is to this problem that the silver policy is addressed. By restoring silver to the status of money in the United States the weight of America will be exerted to break down the monopoly value of gold. Just as gold became more valuable when silver was demonetized, so it is expected that gold will become less valuable when silver is remonetized. It is the belief of the silver people that America's position in the world is sufficiently strong to exert an immense influence on the value of gold. But naturally they hope that other countries will follow suit in restoring silver either on their own initiative or by international agreement.

The question arises: Just how is this thing to work? That cannot be answered definitely until the actual bill is made public. But presumably the principle would be about as follows: The Treasury would stand ready to buy silver from the world at a certain price and in large amounts. How would it pay for that silver? It would pay in gold. It now has more gold than it knows what to do with. So, in substance, the American Government would be selling gold for silver. By the law of supply and demand this should reduce the value of gold and raise the value of silver.

In practice the matter is, of course, not simple at all, and there are many practical difficulties to be overcome. In fact, it may be said that the success or failure of the policy will depend on whether the system is properly or improperly set up. For that reason it cannot be too strongly insisted that the legislation should be introduced, should be submitted to critical discussion, and should under no circumstances be passed in a hurry. Those who are most thoroughly convinced that it is desirable to remonetize silver should be the first to ask for very careful scrutiny of the manner in which it is to be done. They ought not to forget that silver became demonetized in the world because it was improperly adjusted to the monetary system of modern nations. In restoring it, the lessons of the past should not be forgotten.

PHILIPPINE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for your information a copy of a radiogram from the Governor General of the Philippine Islands dated May 9, 1934, quoting the text of a bill passed at the special session of the Ninth Philippine Legislature entitled "An act to provide for the election and holding of the constitutional convention authorized by the act of the Congress of the United States of March 24, 1934, appropriate funds therefor, and for other purposes."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 10, 1934.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. STEIWER. Yesterday late in the afternoon I offered an amendment, which is printed at page 8507 of the RECORD. I note that the Presiding Officer in disposing of the matter made the statement that the amendment "will be printed and lie on the table." I did not intend the amendment to be printed and lie on the table. I inquire whether the amendment which I offered is the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that in the confusion of the moment in the presentation of the amendment by the Senator from Oregon it was understood that the RECORD should show that the amendment was offered by the Senator from Oregon to be printed and lie on the table. Apparently the RECORD discloses that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] is the pending amendment, but the Chair thinks the amendment of the Senator from Oregon ought to be held to be before the Senate for consideration. Unless there is objection, the Chair holds that to be the parliamentary situation, and that the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is the first amendment to be considered this morning.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection to that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer. I have before me a letter from the Federal Coordinator of Transportation approving the object sought to be attained by the amendment. I also have several letters from railroads asking that they be excluded from the requirement as to making reports to the proposed new commission. If the chairman of the committee will accept my amendment, I shall simply ask to have the letters inserted in the RECORD without taking further time. I ask that the clerk read my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator's amendment will be read for the information of the Senate, but the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] is the pending amendment. The Chair thinks that then the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], in view of the RECORD this morning, should be considered as the next amendment in order.

Mr. KEAN. I submitted my amendment yesterday morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That does not make any difference. There are many amendments which have been printed and are lying on the table, but none of them have preference except by recognition of the Chair. Does the Senator from New Jersey desire his amendment read now as a prelude to his remarks to the Senate?

Mr. KEAN. I do not. It may lie on the table for the present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey presented his amendment, but he did not actually offer it at the time. There was some other matter pending at the time. The amendment has been presented, but it has not as yet been formally offered. However, I have no objection to the Senator discussing it just as if it had been offered.

Mr. KEAN. I merely want to say to the distinguished Senator from Florida that I have the approval not of the amendment but of the principle of the amendment of the Coordinator of Railroad Transportation appointed by Mr. Roosevelt. I also have the approval of counsel for all the railroads in the United States and also some individual letters of approval, all of which bear on the matter. As the railroads were omitted from the operation of the Securities Act, on the theory that they already made full reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission, I think it is but fair that they should be excluded from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment is not in order at this time. It may be read merely for information. Does the Senator desire the amendment read for information?

Mr. KEAN. Yes; let it be read and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the amendment for information.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 34, line 17, after the words "United States", it is proposed to insert the words "or any State."

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the same as the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], is it not?

Mr. KEAN. That is a provision which was adopted by the House and is in the House bill. I simply want to have it incorporated in the Senate bill.

Mr. President, this is the fifth print we have had of the bill. Many of the clauses still in it are going to be of great aid to bucket shops. Bucket shops are reopening all over the country owing to the prospect of this bill being passed. The brokers of the United States during the last 3 years have lost large sums of money. I have a letter which I should like to place in the RECORD from George D. B. Bonbright & Co., of Rochester, N.Y., enclosing a statement of their earnings for the past 6 years. I ask that the letter may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GEORGE D. B. BONBRIGHT & CO.,
Rochester, N.Y., May 7, 1934.

Hon. HAMILTON F. KEAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KEAN: In these days when there are so many misstatements going around, it occurred to me you might like to have some explanation from a reliable source as to just what Mr. Pecora's recent figures on members stock-exchange earnings really mean.

While I have no way of being absolutely sure, I feel that there is a fair chance that my statements show a cross section of the commission brokers of the country.

The figures to which I especially want to draw your attention are the amount of money divided among my six partners, compared to the amount of money paid out to my employees, and the amount of money collected by the Federal Government and the State government on that year's business. When the figures were finally shown me, I was impressed with the fact that this business has been largely run, I think, for the benefit of my employees. They have steadily received more for their work than was received by the partners. In the case of 1931, they received over $81,000, against the firm's profits of $16,000—about 5 to 1.

I thought it was also interesting as showing what the Government has received on my small business.

I most sincerely wish there were some way of bringing home to our Representatives in Washington what their proposed changes will really mean to the country. It would seem to me, in my own small case, that it would either require that I give up business altogether, or revamp my firm and business in such a way as to reduce very materially the number of my employees.

Respectfully submitted.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE BONBRIGHT.

Kindly refer to the following paragraphs for further explanation.

Figures pertaining to the income of this firm for the years 1928 to 1933, inclusive, as published by Mr. Pecora, omit the following pertinent facts, namely, that during these years this firm employed an average of 62 people annually. These employees in turn had 52 persons dependent upon them for support, so that during all these years 114 individuals annually received their livelihood through their association with this firm. Salaries paid to these employees during this period averaged $82,400 per year.

Transactions made through this office netted to the Federal Government an average of approximately $75,000 per annum, in customers' transfer taxes and income taxes paid by partners and those employed. The State of New York derived from this same source during this same period an average of approximately $58,000 per annum. Other expenditures made by this firm, inclusive of overhead for these 6 years, averaged $149,000 per year.

This left an average profit of $92,000 per year remaining to be divided between six partners, who received no other compensation whatever and whose cash investment during this same time averaged more than $1,000,000. This shows a profit yield on invested capital of approximately only 9.2 percent.

These figures include the year 1928, when the firm profit was $339,726. Ignoring this 1 year, the average earnings for the following 5 years were $42,961. During the years 1929 to 1933, inclusive, when the net profit of the firm averaged only $42,961 per annum to be divided between six partners, salaries paid to employees averaged $88,299, or, in other words, the total salaries paid to employees during this period averaged more than 205 percent of the amount received by the partners.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I ask that the other letters to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL COORDINATOR OF TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, May 4, 1934.

Hon. HAMILTON F. KEAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of April 30 in which you say that the railroads are worried about sections 12 and 13 of the securities exchange bill, and you ask me whether I think they should be excluded from the act. I find it difficult to answer this question, because I know so little about this bill and the reasons urged for its various provisions.

Section 13 relates to the soliciting and giving of proxies with respect to any security registered on any national securities exchange. This is a matter which is not covered by existing regulatory laws relative to the railroads. If there is need for such provisions as are contained in this section, I know of no reason why they should not apply to railroads as well as to other companies whose securities are registered on a national securities exchange.

Section 12 gives the Federal Trade Commission rather broad authority to require information and reports from companies whose securities are listed on a national securities exchange. In view of the regulation of railroad accounts by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the reports which that Commission requires from railroads, I should doubt the need for applying section 12 to the railroads. However, I am not informed as to the reasons for the section, and it may be that in connection with transactions in railroad securities on national securities exchanges, it is thought that information is needed which is not contained in the reports filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Or it may be thought that it is desirable for the Federal Trade Commission, in connection with securities, to have on hand reports from railroads which are practically duplicates of those filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I should suppose that the Federal Trade Commission would not go much beyond requiring such duplication of Interstate Commerce Commission reports. In that event the burden upon the railroads would not be substantial. About all that I can say is that I greatly doubt the need for making section 12 applicable to the railroads, but that I hesitate to express any positive opinion on the matter, because of my unfamiliarity with the entire bill and the purposes which it is intended to serve.

Respectfully yours,

JOSEPH B. EASTMAN.

S. 3420, a bill to provide for the regulation of stock exchanges and over-the-counter markets, has been reported to the Senate and is accompanied by a report prepared by the chairman of the committee.

It is the purpose of this memorandum to call attention to the injustice of applying to railroad securities the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of this bill. The general counsel of the Association of Railway Executives made a timely appearance before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency at the time when a previous draft was under consideration and pointed out the injustice of requiring railroads to make extensive reports and keep expensive records which were mere duplications of reports and records now required by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which all railroad companies report.

The bill now before the Senate permits securities to be registered on a national securities exchange, but requires the issuer of these securities to furnish a mass of information, set out on pages 29 and 30 of the bill. The information required covers—

(a) The organization, financial structure, nature, and operations of the business.

Under the provisions of the interstate commerce law and the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, all this information is furnished by each railroad in its annual report to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

(b) The terms, position, rights, and privileges of the different classes of securities outstanding.

While this information is not called for in annual or other reports, yet the Bureau of Finance of the Interstate Commerce Commission requires every carrier making application to the Commission for authority to issue or reissue stocks or bonds to give this information in great detail. Since practically every railroad has at some time or other applied to the Commission for authority to issue securities, the Commission is already furnished with complete information as to the matters required in subsection (b).

(c) The terms on which their securities have been or are to be offered to the public.

This information is also given in reports to the Bureau of Finance, as set out in our comment upon (b) above.

(d) The directors, officers, and underwriters, and each security holder of record holding more than 10 percent of any class of any equity security of the issuer (other than an exempted security), their remuneration and their interests in the securities of, and material contracts with, the issuer and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, the issuer.

In the annual report to the Interstate Commerce Commission, on page 103, railroads are required to give the names, addresses, terms of office, etc., of directors and principal general officers. On page 109 of the annual report they must give the total number and voting power of stockholders and names, addresses, and holdings of the 20 largest stockholders. All contracts are reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and digests or copies of important contracts and agreements made each year are listed and described on page 529 of the annual report.

(e) Remuneration to others than directors and officers exceeding $20,000 per annum.

Railroads are required, on page 526 of their annual report, to give the compensation of officers and directors receiving $10,000 or more per year, and on page 527 of the annual report railroads must give similar information as to retainers, commissions, fees, bonuses, allowances for expenses, etc.

(f) Bonus and profit-sharing arrangements.

All this is fully covered in various parts of the annual report, and particularly page 527, which, as stated above, covers bonuses, allowances for expenses, commissions, fees, etc.

(g) Management and service contracts.

As heretofore stated, the reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission cover contracts. See page 529 of the annual report.

(h) Options existing or to be created in respect of their securities.

This is one feature which does not seem to be covered by the annual report, but in the case of railroads it is respectfully submitted that the matter is not important.

(i) Balance sheets for not more than the 3 preceding fiscal years, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by independent public accountants.

Railroads are required to report their balance sheets on pages 200 and 201 of their annual report to the Interstate Commerce Commission. In view of the fact that railroad accounting is so carefully regulated and that all accounts are kept in accordance with the Interstate Commerce Commission's rules and have been for many years, it is respectfully submitted that there is no occasion for the railroads to undergo the expense of reports from independent public accountants.

(j) Profit-and-loss statements for not more than the 3 preceding fiscal years.

Profit-and-loss accounts of the railroads are shown on page 300 of the annual report to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

(3) Copies of articles of incorporation, bylaws, trust indentures, or corresponding documents by whatever name known, underwriting arrangements, and other similar documents of the issuer, etc.

All of these, as we have stated above, are covered by reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Turning now to section 13, which calls for periodic and other reports, it is clear from what has been stated above that the reports now required from the carriers cover every possible phase of railroad operation and railroad finance.

As a matter of fact, under existing law, a study made a few years ago discloses that railroads are required to make 13 types of report to the United States Post Office Department, 18 types of report to the United States Treasury Department, 4 types of report to the United States Department of Commerce, 14 types of report to the United States Geological Survey, 28 types of report to the United States Railroad Administration, 8 types of report to the United States Department of Agriculture, 5 types of report to the United States Labor Board, 2 types of report to the United States Bureau of Mines, 4 types of report to the United States War Department, 1 report to the Alien Property Custodian, 220 types of report to the several regulatory commissions and local boards, and 90 separate types of report to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It is respectfully submitted that there are, therefore, already in the files of the Government, in one department or another, all the information which could possibly be of service in enabling the Federal Securities Exchange Commission to judge of the value of railroad securities.

It is true that paragraph (c) of section 12 provides:

"If in the judgment of the Commission any information required under subsection (b) is inapplicable to any specified class or classes of issuers, the Commission shall require in lieu thereof the submission of such other information of comparable character as it may deem applicable to such class of issuers."

This clause is not likely to relieve the railroads from the duty of submitting all the registration statements required by section 12, because it cannot be said that the information is inapplicable to securities issued by a railroad. The trouble is that the provisions of the bill call for expensive and burdensome duplication of reports and efforts.

Referring again to section 13, and particularly paragraph (b) on page 34, the Federal Securities Exchange Commission is given authority to control the items or details shown in the balance sheets and the earnings statements of companies issuing securities and the methods to be followed in the preparation of reports, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, determination of depreciation and depletion, and matters of this sort, which are essential features of the accounting system.

As is well known, the Interstate Commerce Commission prescribes in intimate detail the type of accounts which are kept by the railroads, and certainly there should be no conflict between the two.

It is true that the Senate bill contains a clause: "But in the case of the accounts of any person whose accounting is subject to the provisions of any law of the United States, or any rule or regulation thereunder, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to reports shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by such law or rule or regulation in respect of the same subject matter." We call attention, however, to the fact that House bill 9323, as now reported, goes further and provides: "Except that this provision shall not be construed to prevent the Commission from imposing such additional requirements with respect to such reports, within the scope of this section and section 11, as it may deem necessary for the protection of investors." (Please note that in the House bill section 11 deals with registration and section 12 with reports, whereas in the Senate bill section 12 deals with registration and section 13 with reports.)

In both the Senate and House bills the Commission created by the Federal Securities Exchange Act is given authority to require reports in addition to those required by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and may prescribe types and forms of accounting which would be supplemental to and in addition to the types and forms now covered by the elaborate requirements of the Interstate Commerce Act.

It seems to us that all this is unnecessary. By subsection (12) of section 3 certain securities are exempted from certain provisions of the act. It will be noted by examining this subsection that exempted securities include securities which are direct obligations of the United States, securities issued or guaranteed by corporations in which the United States has a direct or indirect interest, securities which are direct obligations of a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of a State, "and such other securities (including unregistered securities, the market in which is predominantly intrastate) as the Commission may, by such rules and regulations as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, either unconditionally or upon specified terms and conditions or for stated periods, exempt from the operation of any one or more provisions of this act which by their terms do not apply to an 'exempted security' or to 'exempted securities.'"

It will be noted that certain provisions of this bill apply to exempted securities. Certain other provisions do not apply to exempted securities. I think you will find upon examining the bill that the public interest will be served by inserting in subsection (12), after the exemption of governmental securities, the words: "or any securities issued by corporations subject to section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act."

Such an amendment would not interfere with regulation of dealings on the stock exchange, but would relieve the railroads from the burden and expense of making these unnecessary reports as to matters already covered in the numerous reports which the carriers are required to make to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KEAN. At the proper time I should like to take up several other amendments I have prepared, but apparently this is not the proper time to do so. Therefore, I yield the floor and allow consideration of the bill to proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I think there was some misunderstanding in voting down the amendment offered by me when the question was put just now. I understood from the chairman of the committee that he accepted it. I was talking to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] privately, and he told me he was agreeable to the amendment.

I think there is almost a unanimous agreement among the members of the committee regarding the amendment. I have not taken the opportunity so far to explain it to the Senate, so in that I probably am at fault. I am wondering if we may not have unanimous consent to reconsider the vote just had in order that I may make a brief explanation of the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that should be done, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Oregon was rejected? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate long with respect to the amendment. Its only purpose is to exempt the railroads from the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the pending bill.

As Senators know, the railroads are already under the very strict regulation and the very close control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Act not only provides that the Commission shall prescribe their accountancy but it permits the Commission to send field agents and examiners to examine their books and records; and such examinations are constantly made. Some reports are required, I think, as frequently as every month. The securities issues of the railroads are absolutely controlled in that the Interstate Commerce Commission has a veto power over their proposed security issues.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Do I understand that the amendment under consideration applies only to the railroads?

Mr. STEIWER. That is true.

Mr. BYRNES. It is not the additional amendment to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. STEIWER. No. I had considered adding a second clause to the amendment, but it has not as yet been offered.

Mr. BYRNES. I only desire to say to the Senator that I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment which he offered on yesterday and which was shown to the chairman of the committee at that time.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator; and I am hoping, if the chairman of the committee will express his approval also, that we may have concurrence in the amendment, and save time in debate. Otherwise I shall desire to take considerable time in which to present to the Senate this very important amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not think that is necessary. The Senator suggested yesterday that he might want to add something to the amendment, and I was not quite clear whether or not he proposed to stand on the amendment he then suggested. If he does, I think we can agree on the amendment. That is to say, we will make no opposition to the amendment. The fact is, I rather thought the situation was covered by the present provisions of the bill.

The railroad companies cannot issue securities without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as I understand. They have to make reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I thought other provisions of the bill would enable them to be exempt from this sort of thing as far as the proposed new commission is concerned, and that that was provided for; but I have no objection to the Senator's amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon is agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is the amendment offered yesterday? It is not the additional sentence that has been put into the printed copy?

Mr. STEIWER. I had not offered the additional language, and I shall not do so until the members of the committee have further time to give consideration to it. The Senate merely acted upon the amendment as offered last night.

Mr. FLETCHER. In other words, the amendment will read:

Provided, That carriers subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, shall not be subject to any provision of sections 12 and 13 of this act, except that the Commission may require that such carriers file with it duplicate copies of reports or other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. STEIWER. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 34, line 17, after the words "United States", it is proposed to insert the words "or of any State."

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, last evening, when the Senate adjourned, I was explaining that this matter was brought to my attention by the chairman of the executive committee of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, who happens to be a man from my State who for many years has been on the Wisconsin Public Service Commission.

We have had, as part of that commission, a very efficient and well-working division that handles matters such as are contemplated in a large measure under this bill as far as these reports are concerned. Their fear is—and there are 35 States, I understand, that have similar commissions—that the proposed new commission could very readily require other forms of reports than the form of report which they have had for many years, dealing primarily with intrastate matters, because the new commission is not required to eliminate matters that are intrastate in their general scope. They may do so, but there is no way in which they can be compelled to do so; and these various public-service commissions which have securities divisions feel that this would cause a great deal of confusion so far as many reports they have required for some years past are concerned.

I understand that the Senate committee thought that the amendment might lead to various kinds of reports coming in to the Commission; but it does seem to me that the various State commissions will be dealing in a very large measure with such matters as they have dealt with in the past, and that it would be better to grant that exception.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I may say that the committee considered very carefully a proposal of this kind, and spent a good deal of time on it. In view of the fact that so many States have so many different requirements and rules with reference to this matter, we concluded to leave out this language. I believe it is in the House bill. Consequently, the matter will be in conference anyway, and I think we had better reject this amendment.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, last Wednesday the Senate rejected an amendment relative to the extension of credit for the purpose of marginal trading offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], which appears on page 8386 of the RECORD. During the reading of the amendment and the debate thereon I was in the Senate reception room conferring with constituents concerning a matter in which they were deeply interested. When notified that the Senate was voting, I entered the Chamber. But I was obliged to cast my vote before it was possible for me to read the amendment. Under an erroneous impression as to the effect of the amendment, I voted against it. Last night I found and improved an opportunity to read the amendment and also a part of the discussion of its merits. I have become convinced that the amendment is thoroughly meritorious and that the best interest of all the people demands that it be adopted. Therefore, in the hope of obtaining an opportunity to support the amendment, I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as I understand, the pending amendment is the one offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. McNARY. What was the observation of the Senator in charge of the bill? Did he accept the amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we should reject the amendment, because, as I say, this language is in the House bill, and it will be in conference anyway. We oppose the amendment on the ground that so many States require so many different rules and regulations that it is impossible to know just what the amendment would cover.

We oppose the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, speaking for the pending amendment, I should like to say that there are only four States in the Union which do not require public utilities to make detailed reports of their affairs to the States. Therefore, this amendment should be adopted, because in many States, as in my State, every public utility is required to make a report practically on the lines of the Interstate Commerce Commission reports.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be agreed to.

The language of this section provides that the Commission shall have power to prescribe the form in which certain information shall be set forth. The purpose of the amendment is to eliminate from the provisions of the section corporations in any State which are required to submit reports to State commissions. The amendment would absolutely nullify the provisions of the section. It would destroy the purpose of the section in giving to the Commission power to prescribe the form in which information necessary for the protection of investors shall be filed.

After the enactment of the bill it is all the more important that there should be in the Commission the authority provided in this section. An investor will rely upon uniformity of information as to appraisal, as to depreciation and depletion; and if, relying upon that, the bill is so changed as to permit the filing of statements lacking in such uniformity, it will result, as I say, in deception to the investor, and will destroy the very purpose of the section.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. In reply to the Senator from South Carolina I should like to say that his State is one of the few States whose public-service commissions do not require public utilities to file accounts. In addition to that, our experience with the Federal Trade Commission is that the one company which has incurred the expense involved in making lengthy reports to the Federal Trade Commission is the American Waterworks Co.; and I am informed that when a small investor wrote to the Commission and asked for a copy of their report, they said, "If you will send us $265, we will send you the report."

I think it is perfectly self-evident that if a small investor who perhaps has a $1,000 interest wants a report, he is not going to pay $265 for it. Therefore, so far as the public are concerned and so far as the small investor is concerned, the report is absolutely useless. From my experience, and from what I hear of the Federal Trade Commission, I do not think they are of any use to the small investor, whom they were supposed to protect.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I cannot exactly answer the question of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. No; the Senator cannot.

Mr. BYRNES. I presume it was a question. I know the position of the Senator, that he does not think the Federal Trade Commission is accomplishing a very useful purpose, and I know his views with reference to public utilities. When he mentions public utilities, he refers to a field which best illustrates the necessity for this provision and the power it confers.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I will yield as soon as I finish this thought. In many of the States public utilities are not called upon to make the fullest reports. Certainly they make reports in different forms, and the purpose of this section is to give the Commission the power to remedy such situations as have existed in the field of public utilities. Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, when appearing before the committee, cited several illustrations which justify the purpose of the proposed act.

I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I do not believe that the officials of the various States are going to object to the enactment of this provision. All this section does is to give to the Commission the right to prescribe the form, in the preparation of reports and in the appraisal and valuation of assets and liabilities, in an attempt to secure statements which will be uniform as to depreciation and depletion. Some corporations have prepared statements, and by juggling the figures in connection with depreciation, have stayed in the black when they should have been in the red, when if a correct statement had been made, the investor would have known the true value, or approximately the true value, of the securities, and would not have lost his money. The object of this section is to make for uniformity.

I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUFFY. At least the Senator cannot say, with reference to my record and my votes, that I have shown any exceptionally friendly attitude toward public utilities such as he suggested with reference to the Senator from New Jersey. I have voted on every occasion in favor of strict regulation of public utilities. I supported, for instance, the Johnson bills. Certainly what has been suggested as to the Senator from New Jersey is not my purpose in offering this amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. I know that to be true, and any statement or intimation otherwise I would be the first to say was inaccurate. The statement I made to the Senator from New Jersey was only prompted because the Senator from New Jersey mentioned the probable effect of this section upon public utilities, and I was describing how it would affect public utilities.

Mr. DUFFY. I want to have it made very clear for the RECORD that I have consistently at every opportunity that has been afforded since I have been a Member of this body voted for strict regulation, and if the Senator will read the last part of the amendment which was suggested, which makes it correspond with the House bill, he will find that it provides:

> Except that this provision shall not be construed to prevent the Commission from imposing such additional requirements with respect to such reports, within the scope of this section and of section 12, as it may deem necessary for the protection of investors.

This certainly shows that there was not anything in my mind except that I believe that men like Mr. McDonald, of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission, and others who have been regulating and are experienced in these matters as they have been in Wisconsin have the practical experience, so that when they assert it to be their conclusion that it would cause hardship to them unless this amendment were adopted, certainly I am sure it is shown that there is no intention to favor groups which will have to make reports under this section.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I want to repeat that not only would there be no statement by me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin was offered in behalf of the public utilities, or anybody interested in them, and certainly there was no intimation to that effect, but I know that such an intimation would be untrue, because I know the Senator's viewpoint.

I was simply pointing out, in answer to the statement of the Senator from New Jersey, who first suggested the effect it would have upon public utilities, that that matter had been discussed before the committee, and that the counsel for the Federal Trade Commission had cited it and referred to the various forms and the various methods of appraisals in the State by public utilities as one reason why it was important that this section should remain as it is written.

I hope the Senator from Wisconsin understands that that was my purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is not one of the troubles about this amendment the fact that it would make it impossible for the commission even to have a uniform form for making reports and lists by corporations other than utility commissions?

Mr. BYRNES. That certainly is true. The Senator from Wisconsin has referred to one of the public servants of his State. My belief is that the Senator must be mistaken in his viewpoint as to this section, because the object is not to interfere with the public-service commission of any State but simply to prescribe the form of the report which must be followed by the corporations of the States.

It may be that the position of the officials of the State of Wisconsin would be as indicated if the commission to be placed in charge of the administration of this measure should prescribe a different form, and thus cause the State of Wisconsin to change its form in order to accord with the requirements of the commission appointed under the bill. That is the only way that I see in which it could affect this public official.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I may add another observation, if the States had a uniform system of regulation, not only of utilities, but of corporations authorized in the States, it would not be such a difficult matter, but with 48 different jurisdictions, with 48 different kinds of reports, and with the investor desiring to make a fair comparison between the corporations in one State and those in another, the only way by which to enable the investor to do that is to have uniform information as to all of them, and the method by which they arrive at conclusions.

Mr. BYRNES. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. If this amendment should be adopted, it would make it impossible for the Commission to have that uniform kind of information which would enable an investor to draw a comparison between a corporation in Wisconsin and a corporation in Kentucky, or in some other State.

Mr. BYRNES. The result would be that the investor, relying upon uniformity, and believing that there was uniformity, would be misled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, in offering the amendment affecting the railroads, I had in mind to present a further amendment and did not do so because in the confusion there was no opportunity for me to present it to members of the committee with whom I desired to confer with respect to it. Under the circumstances, the action taken by the Senate was taken only on that part of the amendment which I had offered last night, and which the Chair had held to be the pending question.

I desire to present the remainder of the amendment, and I send to the desk that part of it commencing with the words "Provided further."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to amend by adding at the proper place the following:

> Provided further, That carriers not subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, but subject to section 20 of such act, shall be exempt from the provisions of this section, except that the Commission may require that such carriers file with it duplicate copies of reports or other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what class or classes of carriers are embraced within that amendment?

Mr. STEIWER. The Interstate Commerce Act, in section 20, covers substantially all of the interstate carriers, including the sleeping-car companies, the express companies, the telephone companies, the telegraph and cable companies, the carriers operating on inland waterways, and the carriers by pipe lines. In section 20a there is only one great group dealt with, and that is the railroad group.

In section 20a, covering the railroads, concerning which we have already acted, we are presented with the fact that we exempted the railroad carriers, which were not only subject to the requirements of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to accountancy and reporting and audit, but they were also subject to the absolute control of the Intertsate Commerce Commission in the issuance of their securities. There is, therefore, a very persuasive argument for the elimination of the railroads from both sections 12 and 13.

But little reason could be offered for requiring the railroads to comply with sections 12 and 13, save in the sense that they might be required to furnish duplicate copies of information furnished to the Interstate Commerce Commission, because that Commission, as I said earlier in the debate, have an absolute power of veto over the issuance of securities by the railroad corporations.

When we deal with the other carriers which are covered by section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act we do not find any control in the Interstate Commerce Commission over their right to issue securities. Therefore, it seems to me that the other carriers ought to be subject to section 12; they ought to be compelled to register their securities; and in the amendment which is now offered, I do not seek to exempt them from the application of section 12.

We differentiate between these carriers and the railroads in that we seek to exempt the railroads from the provisions of both section 12 and section 13, and we seek to exempt the other carriers only from the provisions of section 13, which requires submission of periodic reports.

Mr. President, what is the reason for exempting them with respect to section 13? It is merely this—that, although the Interstate Commerce Commission does not control their security issues, it does control their accountancy and requires comprehensive reports. I invite the attention of Senators briefly to a consideration of the provisions of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, which provides the various requirements to be made of these carriers. In that section it is provided that the Commission is authorized to require certain reports, annual and other reports, from these institutions, and among other requirements are the following:

> Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued, the amounts paid therefor, and the manner of payment for the same; the dividends paid, the surplus fund, if any, and the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the carriers' property, franchises, and equipments; the number of employees and the salaries paid each class; the accidents to passengers, employees, and to other persons, and the causes thereof; the amounts expended for improvements each year, how expended, and the character of such improvements; the earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss; and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the carrier each year, including an annual balance sheet.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that applies to all the carriers he has mentioned?

Mr. STEIWER. It does, Mr. President. And may I, in answering that question, say further to the Senator that I very carefully considered the way that both of these proposals have been phrased? It is not my purpose to provide exemption for any carrier in such a way that it will not still be subject to rigid supervision. My only purpose is to exempt those which are subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and then only to the extent that they are governed by that Commission. For that reason the amendment I offered pertaining to the railroads named in section 20 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act relieves them from the provisions of both sections 12 and 13, but in the amendment I now offer pertaining to the other carriers, where the Interstate Commerce Commission does not have control over security issues, I seek to relieve such other carriers only from the requirements of section 13.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will recall that in spite of the requirements and regulations in the Act to Regulate Commerce, certain gentlemen testified before a committee with reference to the organization of holding companies, which are not subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission and which might not be subject to the regulation of the proposed commission if we exempt railroads of all types altogether from the provisions of this act, that they were by means of holding companies able to manipulate the stocks of their companies in a way most disastrous, so far as the public was concerned, and to hold out to the public fictitious values which have no basis in fact.

Will the amendment which the Senator now proposes, taken in connection with the one which has already been adopted, make it easier for holding companies which have been organized in order to get around the law now in force with reference to reports by railroad companies, still to avoid making a showing before either the Interstate Commerce Commission or before the proposed commission with reference to the condition of their stock as represented by ownership in railroads?

Mr. STEIWER. The question is a most proper question, but I can answer it in the negative. It could not possibly make any difference as to the corporation, of the kind that the Senator has in mind, because in framing the amendment I was careful to guarantee that it would not absolve that class of corporations from the requirements of this bill. In the amendment it is stated merely that the carriers subject to the requirements of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act are exempted partially from the application of this bill. Therefore, if they are not subject to section 20, of course they obtain no benefit from the proposed exemption.

Mr. BARKLEY. While the carrier itself would not be subject to sections 12 and 13——

Mr. STEIWER. May I interrupt before the Senator goes further? The holding company would still be subject to the act. The carrier, therefore, would report to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the holding corporation would be obliged to comply with this bill in all its requirements, and I certainly want it to be that way.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will recall that certain railroad officials desired to bring about certain mergers and combinations of railroads, and the Interstate Commerce Commission would not permit that to be done. They had to make application to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they were denied the privilege of acquiring competing roads, and so forth. In order to get around that denial the bright lawyers who represent these big corporations devised the scheme of the holding company, and the stock of the railroad companies was transferred to the holding company, and the holding company was enabled to operate their affairs through a trust. Three people managing the holding company—the Pennroad Co.—managed the affairs of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and they accomplished the purchase of their connecting lines and paralleling lines, and so forth, and brought about the identical merger which the Interstate Commerce Commission would not allow. It was the holding company which got by with that, and it was devised for that very purpose.

We do not want to leave the holding company exempt from some form of regulation. The Interstate Commerce Act was absolutely defeated by the formation of a holding company, and the Interstate Commerce Commission did not have jurisdiction to prevent the very thing being done, the application to do which had been denied by the Commission to the railroad.

Mr. STEIWER. I remember the transaction to which the Senator from Florida refers. It is my impression that some of those who defied the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission are now under indictment. I am entirely in sympathy with the viewpoint of the Senator from Florida, but there is nothing in the amendment which is now proposed which would relax in any way the requirements of the law as to a transaction of that kind.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act is not mandatory upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is clearly permissive.

Mr. STEIWER. Nor is the requiring of reports mandatory upon the new commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I realize that, but it might be advisable in the exercise of the discretion of the new Commission to obtain information which is not included in the reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, besides, the reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission are only made annually.

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. BARKLEY. They are made as of the 30th of December or as of the 1st day of January of each year, and are to cover a 12 months' period.

Mr. STEIWER. That is only one type of reports, Mr. President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whereas under the provisions of section 13, from which the Senator is seeking to exempt them, more frequent reports than annual reports may be required by the Commission.

Mr. STEIWER. The Interstate Commerce Act permits reports as often as once a month, and I am advised that the Interstate Commerce Commission in many cases has exercised its privilege under the law and has exacted reports as often as once a month from the carriers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Subsection (2) of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act says:

> Said detailed reports shall contain all the required statistics for the period of 12 months ending on the 30th day of June in each year, or on the 31st day of December in each year if the Commission by order substitute that period for the year ending June 30.

If the fiscal year ends in January instead of June, or in December, they may substitute that, but the requirement is that they shall report for a 12-month period.

Mr. STEIWER. That is only one requirement, Mr. President. If the Senator will look further, he will find that they may be required to report as often as once each month. Moreover, the Interstate Commerce Commission has not been dilatory in its requirements under this act. They have availed themselves of their authority, and I believe it is true with respect to all the carriers in the categories covered by section 20 of the act that they have required a system of accountancy which the Interstate Commerce Commission has itself approved and devised. There is no such power as that—at least it is contended there is no such power as that in the bill which we are considering and which we soon shall pass as the pending measure. The Interstate Commerce Commission not only prescribes the accountancy system but it sends examiners to the field, who go to the offices and places of business of these corporations and make contemporaneous or current examinations. After the close of the year, and upon the submission of the final reports, the Commission then audits the reports and audits the accounts of the carriers. That is bound to make closer supervision than ever will be had, presumably, under the provisions of the pending bill.

The only purpose of the amendment which I am offering is to relieve these carriers from the necessity of filing different kinds of reports and reports additional to those furnished to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Securities Commission may still exact from them duplicate copies of all reports which they file with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Let me suggest, Mr. President, that any additional expenses which are incurred by the railroads in connection with the filing of any reports, are regarded by the Interstate Commerce Commission as proper operating costs, and they are taken into consideration in the fixing of rates, so that finally the American people, the shippers, and travelers on the railroads, would have to pay the cost of any additional requirement placed upon the carriers.

If the proposal which I have offered is not correctly stated, if it is too inclusive or too narrow, if the exemption is suggested in a way that Senators do not approve, I shall be very glad to consider any proposals for the perfecting of the amendment.

I hope I am not dogmatic with respect to this matter. I certainly do not want to be too insistent with regard to the amendment, but seriously I say to Senators that the implications of this matter are of importance. They are of importance to the American people, and nothing will be gained by requiring of the interstate carriers different kinds of reports or a different system of reporting when such reports will not bring any additional information to the American people.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator know whether the provision in the second section of his amendment is in the House bill?

Mr. STEIWER. There is in the House bill something rather similar to the first provision of the amendment which has already been agreed to. In my judgment, the Senate's action is superior to that of the House. I am not advised sufficiently to tell the Senator with certainty whether there is anything in the House bill that covers the suggestion I am now making. I believe, however, there is nothing in the House bill that is equivalent to the proposal I make.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield the language in the House bill is—

> Provided, That no additional requirements shall be imposed upon carriers subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think the provision is not in the House bill.

Mr. STEIWER. I believe that is correct, though I do not want to speak with certainty about it.

Mr. COUZENS. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment and let it go to conference so as to find out whether reports filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission will be adequate for the administration of the proposed act by the new commission.

Mr. BYRNES. It seems to me, if the Senator will allow me, that it differs slightly from the language of this bill where it is provided that information asked for shall be such as the Commission may deem necessary for the protection of investors. So far as I have been able to read hurriedly the language of the Interstate Commerce Act, the character of information which the Interstate Commerce Commission may require may be somewhat different. I agree that it would be impossible at this time to express even an intelligent opinion as to whether the Interstate Commerce Act would cover all the information that we seek to secure in this bill. I agree, however, with the Senator from Michigan, it would be well to adopt the amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. STEIWER. I hope that may be done.

Mr. COUZENS. I hope the conferees will investigate and ascertain whether the reports filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission are adequate. If so then the amendment ought to remain in the bill; but if it should be determined that they are not adequate, then of course the conferees on the part of the Senate could recede.

Mr. STEIWER. That would be satisfactory, and is all I could ask.

Mr. BARKLEY. The act to regulate commerce goes into some detail with reference to what is required by the reports. So does this bill; but there is a difference between the act to regulate commerce and the bill here. It may be that they ought to be harmonized, and in all probability it can be done better in conference than it can be done here on the floor. For that reason it probably would be wise to let the amendment go in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. With the understanding that we shall not feel bound to stand for the exact letter in considering this amendment in conference and that if we do not find that it sufficiently meets the situation as we desire by this proposed act we can recede from it, I presume we might as well agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask the clerk to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 7, line 11, after the word "States" and the semicolon, it is proposed to insert the following:

Securities which are direct obligations of a foreign government and which on the date of the enactment of this act are listed on any exchange within or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the amendment simply includes, in the list of exempted securities, on page 7, obligations of foreign governments which are now listed on the exchanges of the United States. I think that the amendment is in the interest of American bondholders. It does not apply to new issues at all, but to issues already listed and now held by American bondholders. There is no way of getting the information required as to these securities if they are not exempted except by application to a foreign government. That may bring on some feeling and misunderstanding. There is no way of compelling them to furnish the information, and therefore we would not get it anyway. So I think the adoption of the amendment would be in the interest of American bondholders. They will not be obliged to go through all this machinery in connection with the disposition of such securities which they already hold, but may sell and distribute them without giving information required of other security holders.

I may add that the amendment is suggested by the State Department, which has recommended its adoption. So I offer the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to inquire whether, in addition to the group which the Senator, as I understand his amendment, desires to exempt, another group should not be exempted? My understanding is that there are other securities that have been listed on the stock exchanges for many years, as to which—I do not know whether the corporations have gone out of existence or just what has happened—in many instances there are no persons left who can possibly make the reports that are necessary under this proposed act. I wonder if that has been brought to the Senator's attention or whether he has given any consideration to it?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is a matter the Commission will have discretion to deal with as circumstances may require. That is a matter entirely with the Commission, and I do not think there will be any difficulty about it at all.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is the Senator sure that under this bill the Commission has that right?

Mr. FLETCHER. Absolutely; there is no question about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Florida and the Senator from South Carolina respecting one or two clarifying amendments? I shall not as yet offer the amendments, but on page 51, in line 11, in the section of the bill which provides jurisdiction of offenses and suits, we find, commencing with line 9, the language as follows:

The District Courts of the United States, and the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act—

And so forth.

I have no personal interest in the matter, but it is my recollection that it was the intention of the committee to give to the Federal district courts exclusive jurisdiction of violations under the act, and if that is the purpose of the committe it has not been effectuated by the language used Am I wrong in that recollection?

Mr. FLETCHER. There was no such intention; the intention was just to the contrary. The committee did not feel like limiting the jurisdiction to the Federal courts.

Mr. STEIWER. In other words, the purpose of the committee was to give jurisdiction either to the Federal court or to the State courts of general jurisdiction?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. May I say to the Senator from Oregon that the language in the bill is the same as that in the Securities Act of 1933? The House bill provides for exclusive jurisdiction in United States courts. If the Senate provision is adopted, the matter may then be considered in conference.

Mr. STEIWER. I have no objection to make concerning it. I will say, though, that my own recollection was contrary to the advice I am now receiving.

On page 45, Mr. President, may I call attention to the word "avoiding", in line 3, and ask the chairman if the committee would not want to substitute the word "evading" for the word "avoiding" at that point?

As the Senator will observe, beginning in subsection (b) in line 22, on page 44, the section is stated in terms of penalties; that is to say, it makes unlawful certain acts. Then, passing over to page 45, there is a limitation in the words "for the purpose of avoiding any provision of this act or any rule or regulation made thereunder."

I think the conventional words to use in a case of that kind are the words "evading any provisions of this act." I do not know when it became unlawful in this country for a person to avoid a law, which may be done merely by the citizen refraining from violation of the law. I am not going to detain the Senate to discuss the matter, but it seems to me that we could very well change the word "avoiding" to the word "evading."

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think it is very material, although it may be. "Avoiding", of course, means to nullify as well as to escape the provisions of the law.

Mr. STEIWER. In the application of our tax laws the taxpayer may avoid the payment of a tax by refusing to sell his property or to take a profit. In that case he is not violating the law; but if he evades the law, he is regarded as being in a different category. I shall not press the matter further. I thought the chairman probably might want to make that change.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to suggest the use of both words, so as to read "avoiding or evading."

Mr. STEIWER. I would have no objection to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest, then, that after the word "avoiding" the words "or evading" be inserted, so as to cover both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND rose.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] wants the floor, but I desire to suggest one other clerical change before I yield the floor. On page 22, in line 7, beginning in line 5, we find reference to the prohibition against endorsing or guaranteeing "the performance of any put, call, straddle", and so forth.

On the preceding page we find similar language, but there is a certain degree of definition of the world "privilege." In order to make clear what I mean let me invite attention first, on page 21, to paragraph (1), commencing in line 17. I will read that paragraph:

(1) Any transaction in connection with any security whereby any party to such transaction acquires any put, call, straddle, or other option or privilege of buying the security from or selling the security to another party to the transaction without being bound to do so.

The word "privilege" as there used is defined by the language which follows it. It is merely the privilege of "buying the security from or selling the security to another party to the transaction without being bound to do so."

In paragraph (2), in the last line, on page 21, we find the use of the word "such", so that in its effect it relates to "such privilege", or the privilege defined in the language commencing in line 17, which I have quoted.

In the next subsection, at the top of page 22, we again find the use of the word "such" before the word "put", in line 3, but evidently by inadvertence, in subsection (c), in declaring it unlawful to endorse or guarantee certain things, the use of the word "such" has been omitted. I think it is a clerical error and that the word ought to be inserted at that point. Otherwise at the end of line 7 and the beginning of line 8 we have the use of the word "privilege" without any definition or restriction or anything to indicate the character of the privileges to which reference is made.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STEIWER. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator referred to subdivisions 1, 2, and 3 of subsection (b) where the word "such" appears.

Mr. STEIWER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. Subsection (c) is an entirely different section and has entirely different language.

Mr. STEIWER. It is true that it is an entirely different section and has entirely different language. But what character or privilege is referred to in subsection (c) and how and where is it defined? If it does not mean "such privilege" what privilege was intended to be meant by the draftsmen in the preparation of the language? However, I shall not press the matter upon the Senate. I think the word "privilege" as there used is meaningless, and in one way or the other ought to be defined.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question with reference to the wording on page 3, line 23. Has there been any change in the printing of the bill regarding the language "and any partner of any such firm"? Is that language still in the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. There has been no change made in that respect.

Mr. COPELAND. It seems to me, if those words are not deleted the individual partners of all firms having a membership on the stock exchange are subjected to the jurisdiction of the commission with reference to their personal affairs. Perhaps those affairs have no reference to the securities business. I think it perfectly proper that the floor member, and the firm of which the floor member is a partner, should be subject to regulation, but, as I view it, it is entirely unnecessary and quite unjust that "any partner of any such firm" should be subject to regulation.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, to what page is the Senator referring?

Mr. COPELAND. Page 3, line 23. I am trying to make the point that there may be a special partner in the business who has nothing whatever to do with the operation or conduct of the affairs of the concern.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, my attention was diverted and I did not get the Senator's question.

Mr. COPELAND. On page 3, line 23, I invited attention to the words "and any partner of any such firm". There may be special partners.

Mr. FLETCHER. It includes any firm transacting business as a broker or dealer, of which a member is a partner and any partner of any such firm. We must keep that language in the bill, or we may open the door too wide.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is wrong. The special partner is not a partner of the floor member. He is not an active member of the firm. He simply has some money in the firm, which perhaps has been left there through a generation or two. But if such a partner is to be subjected to the same supervision as is the firm and the active members of the firm, then every time he wants to mortgage his farm or borrow money or transact some personal business he will be subject to the supervision of the Commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the contrary, if we strike out those words, any firm might have a partner on the side or might create a partner on the side to do certain things, and there would be no supervision whatever of such a partner, as he would not come within the term "member of the firm."

Mr. COPELAND. The stock exchange and its members are to be under the control of the commission, but the man whom I have in mind is entirely outside of active participation in the concern and is not a member of the stock exchange.

Mr. BARKLEY. That very fact brings up the question whether a firm that is a member of the stock exchange might have a partner who could bring about transactions that would be free from regulation, under the guise of representing a firm that was a member of the stock exchange. The difficulty is that we would open the way for evasion by private arrangements between firms which are members of the stock exchange and men who may be partners in the firm, but on the outside, so as to make them in effect subject to regulation.

Mr. COPELAND. No; the Senator is entirely wrong. The bill is intended to regulate the stock exchange and the members of the stock exchange. I am referring to a special partner on the outside who has some money in the concern and has nothing whatever to do with the operation of the brokerage business.

Mr. FLETCHER. But he is a partner in the business.

Mr. COPELAND. If the brokerage concern violated the law, then that firm would be liable to the penalties of the law, and the members of the stock exchange who were in that concern would be liable to the penalties of the law. But I am referring to an individual who is entirely outside the membership of the stock exchange. It seems to me it is unjust that such an individual should be made liable to the penalties of the bill when as a matter of fact he has not a thing to do with the operations of the stock exchange or of any concern which has membership in the stock exchange.

Mr. FLETCHER. He must have something to do with it. He is a partner of a firm engaged in transacting the business of a broker or dealer.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], who is familiar with the matter, will tell the Senator that there are special partners or families whose money has been left for a long time in a given concern.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is the definition of the word "member":

> The term "member" when used with respect to an exchange means any person who is permitted either to effect transactions on the exchange without the services of another person acting as broker, or to make use of the facilities of an exchange for transactions thereon without payment of a commission or with the payment of a commission or fee which is less than that charged to the general public, and includes any firm transacting a business as broker or dealer of which a member is a partner, and any partner of any such firm.

In other words, if there is any partner of any such firm, or any member of a partnership which is supposed to be a member of the New York Stock Exchange, which is allowed privileges or allowed to carry on transactions on the New York Stock Exchange, or through a broker or dealer by the remission of all fees or commissions or by the charging of a less commission than is charged the general public, then he would be brought within the term of "member" under this definition.

It is entirely possible, I should say, for a partner who is not a member of the stock exchange, through the membership of the partnership in the exchange, or an individual member of the partnership, to be able to acquire privileges to transact business without the payment of the fees or the commissions which are charged to the general public.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say that the partner might be the widow of somebody who put money in a special account for this purpose 40 years ago. She is as innocent as a newborn babe in any transaction of the firm. She is not an active member of the firm. She has nothing to do with its transactions. She is entirely separate and apart from the business arrangements of the firm. That is my impression. I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey if I have stated the matter as it is.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the Senator has stated the situation absolutely correctly. In some cases people have died and left their money in the firm, and their heirs are special partners. They are precluded by the arrangement from having anything to do with the firm. The stock exchange specifies that they may not have anything to do with the firm.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it not a fact, too, that if we were to take all such persons and put them on Robinson Crusoe's island, put them away off by themselves, the situation would not be changed a single bit? They have nothing to do with the operation of the business. They have nothing to do with the stock exchange. They have simply left their money there, just as I might leave my money in a savings bank. That is the feeling I have.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish the Senator from Florida would be sufficiently impressed by what I say to let this matter go to conference. If he finds that it is not as I state it, I shall be perfectly satisfied to have the language restored to the bill; but I know that without the amendment a great injustice would be done to many entirely innocent people in this very respect. So I ask the Senator if he will not consent to take to conference an amendment striking out the words "and any partner of any such firm."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can only say that after this bill had been considered by the full committee for a great length of time, and the committee had devoted great care and deliberation to it and had modified it, the bill was referred to a subcommittee, which examined every word and every line of the bill; and I do not feel warranted in consenting to strike out any portion of it.

We talked about this subject in the subcommittee. We discussed it pro and con. We have heard all the arguments for the amendment and against it. I do not feel authorized to consent to the change.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he recollects that the matter was discussed at all in the committee?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the language in the bill was intended to cover cases where one partner in a firm was a member of an exchange and a partner who was not a member could do things which the law would not permit to be done by the partner who was a member.

Mr. COPELAND. Do not the things the Senator is speaking about relate to transactions that would have to be carried on by the concern?

Mr. BYRNES. They would be carried on by the partner who was a member of the exchange, but the partner who was not a member could do things of many kinds which would enable the firm to evade the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. He might be allowed to escape the payment of the fees and commissions which the general public pays.

Mr. BYRNES. The object was to prevent him from doing it; to prevent a situation where one member of a partnership would be a member of the exchange, and business would be transacted ostensibly through another partner. I do not see that the language is going to do any harm to a partner of a firm conducting a legitimate business.

Mr. COPELAND. It is going to do great harm to the people I am talking about, and it is going to take that money entirely out of business. It is bound to do it. Those to whom it belongs cannot afford to leave the money there.

I have tried to present the matter dispassionately, with a very limited knowledge of the operations of the stock exchange, in which I do not participate; but I know perfectly well that what I have described to the Senate is exactly what will happen.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. This looks like a very small sentence to arouse so much controversy as to its meaning. A member is described in this subsection as a person who is allowed privileges on an exchange or is permitted to do business on an exchange through a broker or dealer upon the payment of fees that are less than the general public is charged, or with a complete remission of fees. If that does not apply to any such partner, he does not come within this subsection.

Mr. COPELAND. It does apply, because the committee is putting it in.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; not unless he is allowed some privilege which the general public is denied; not unless he is allowed through the partnership to do business without the payment of any commissions or fees, or unless he is allowed to do business by the payment of a less fee than that paid by the general public. If an outside partner is charged the same as the general public, he does not become a member under this definition.

Mr. COPELAND. Then perhaps the Senator, who is so energetic in his defense of this provision, will tell me the meaning of the words on page 43, lines 9 and 10. How far does that language go in its application—"safeguards in respect of the financial responsibility of members"? Is not that pretty indefinite and broad?

Mr. BARKLEY. If anybody should come within the definition of "member" by being allowed, although not an actual member, but as a partner of a member, some privilege or right not accorded to the general public, of course the language on page 43 would not apply to him.

Mr. COPELAND. In sections 7 and 8 there are all the safeguards that could possibly be thought of; and why, in addition to all those, is this one needed—"safeguards in respect of the financial responsibility of members"?

Mr. President, realizing the utter futility of the motion, I move that the language suggested on page 3, lines 23 and 24, and on page 43, lines 9 and 10, be deleted from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I could not quite hear the Senator's motion.

Mr. COPELAND. My motion was to delete the language which I was trying to explain on page 3, lines 23 and 24, after the comma on line 23, "and any partner of any such firm"; likewise, on page 43, lines 9 and 10, the language reading "safeguards in respect of the financial responsibility of members and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. McNARY. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 23, after the comma, it is proposed to strike out the words "and any partner of any such firm"; and on page 43, line 9, after the figure "(1)", it is proposed to strike out the words "safeguards in respect of the financial responsibility of members and".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

(b) A security may be registered on a national securities exchange by the issuer filing an application with the exchange (and filing with the commission such duplicate originals thereof as the commission may require), which application shall contain—

(1) Such of the following information, in such detail, as to the issuer and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, the issuer, and any guarantor of the security as to principal or interest, or both, as the commission may by rules and regulations require, as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors:

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that I did not rise with the intention of discussing the details of either his amendment or of the pending bill, but I do wish to submit a few observations in regard to the general principle which ought to underlie and limit legislation of this character, and I wish to say a few words concerning the particular policy which seems to inspire and to characterize the pending proposal.

I desire, first, to eliminate the main points concerning which there seems to be general or substantial agreement.

I believe it is agreed on all hands that legislation of this kind, legislation correcting the admitted abuses and the proven abuses of stock exchanges in general, and the New York Stock Exchange in particular—the big bad wolf—ought to be enacted at this time; that legislation correcting these abuses is necessary and desirable, and that such unfair and indefensible practices, as far as possible, should be prohibited by legislation, although it is easier to forbid than it is to prevent.

Mr. President, I believe there is general agreement, perhaps not universal agreement, that there ought to be a capital market, or that there ought to be a market place in this country, call it stock market, stock exchange, or what you will, I think it is generally agreed that there ought to be a market place where people who desire to sell securities and who desire to buy securities can meet and exercise the right to buy and sell.

I believe it is agreed that there ought to be a market place where the savings and the capital of the people can come to find desired and desirable investments.

I believe it is agreed that there are certain abuses which have grown up in connection with the stock exchanges of this country, certain unfair and evil practices, such as pools, syndicates, and other manipulative and deceptive devices, as they are characterized in the pending bill. There can be no doubt that, insofar as legislation can correct these evil practices, it ought to be done.

My own feeling has been that we should rather seek to correct the abuses of the market place than to prevent the uses of the market place.

I might in this place state that I have less faith than some have in the imperious "Be it enacted" of Congress and the imperious "Thou shalt not." As I said a moment ago, it is easier to forbid than it is to prevent. We adopted the eighteenth amendment only a few fleeting years ago—adopted the eighteenth amendment in order to prohibit traffic in intoxicating beverages. That amendment was repealed but yesterday. It was repealed with a great flourish and fanfare of trumpets, because prohibition, it was said, did not prohibit.

Mr. President, to prevent any act, any offense, any crime, which it takes two to commit, when both participants desire the thing to happen, and when both participants are determined that the thing shall happen, "Thou shalt not" is usually in vain.

The men who wished to sell and the men who wished to buy intoxicating liquors met and did so. People who desire to sell securities and who desire to buy securities will find the ways and means to do so, and will find a place where the transactions which they desire and which they are determined to see happen, will happen.

Mr. President, I make a distinction between the investor, the speculator, and the gambler. The investor is one who has available savings or resources, who desires to invest his resources where the principal will be safe, and where the principal will yield a reasonable and safe return upon the amount invested. As a rule the investor investigates before he invests. He investigates the industry generally, he investigates the particular concern in question, he investigates its resources, its assets, its financial structure, its management, its earnings, and its prospects, and he bases his action upon such investigations. His motive is to have his principal safe, and to have it yield a reasonable return during the period of the investment.

The speculator, as I conceive the speculator, makes the same investigations as the investor. He is as solicitous to ascertain the facts as the investor himself with regard to everything pertaining to the business, its capital structure, its earnings, and its outlook. He buys, however, with a different motive. He does not buy for a long-term investment, expecting a reasonable return during the period of the investment; he buys as a rule with the hope and expectation of selling, and that when he sells he will realize his principal and will realize a profit upon the sale. That, Mr. President, is not an illegitimate purpose or object. That motive has been the dynamics driving forward the progress of this country during its 3 centuries of unexampled development. It is a difference in motive.

The gambler knows little and perhaps cares less about industrial conditions in general, about the particular industry in whose securities he is investing; cares little or nothing about the particular enterprise whose stock he is buying, little or nothing about its financial set-up, its past or its prospective earnings. He generally yields to a contagion. He catches a fever and this fever is contagious.

These periodical panics and depressions have happened for 200 years; often at 10-year periods almost with mathematical precision. There is a psychological reason for that, and as long as men will buy on a rising market and sell on a falling market the recurrence of these panics, crises, and depressions, which have their roots deep down in human nature itself, cannot be prevented.

In 1929 I remember some stocks were selling at 60 times their earning power. I believe a stock selling at 10 times its earning power is regarded as a conservative investment. A stock selling at 15 times its earning power is regarded as being upon the border of speculation. Yet stocks sold in the market at 60 times their earning power. The judge and the janitor, the waitress and the heiress were infected with the fever.

To a certain extent I think the pending legislation is an effort to protect the fool against his folly. I doubt if it can be done. With all his folly, I think, he will outwit our wisdom and beat us to it. Of all "diseases", suicide is the hardest to prevent.

Mr. President, this bill has had an interesting history in its progress through the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. Whence it came no man knoweth. In that committee it was changed many times, it was altered many times, modified many times, was amended many times, and I feel safe in saying that every time it was amended it was improved. The amendments were improvements. These improvements vindicate the wisdom of public hearings, the wisdom of exchanging and interchanging ideas with respect to legislation as with respect to other matters of common concern. And I pay honor to the venerable chairman of the committee for his patient work in connection with this measure.

The improvements made in this measure by the Committee on Banking and Currency almost vindicate the existence of Congress as a legislative department of the Government. I would not go so far as to say it was a complete vindication. That would be a deference to the past and to experience of which I would not care to be guilty.

When this measure first came forth from "the beautiful isle of somewhere" it was reputed to have teeth, indeed it was said that it was born with teeth in it, and some say—perhaps the midwife can confirm it—that it was born gnashing its teeth. It did remind one of a man-eater shark, and perhaps the draftsman took the man-eater shark, typified in the stock exchanges, as his model in the preparation of this measure. This bill had teeth, and some of its teeth we thought were dragon's teeth. Some of its teeth were tusks, some of its teeth were fangs. I speak for no one but myself, but I doubt not that if this measure had been passed as originally introduced and had ever closed its jaws upon the capital market of this country nothing but wreck and ruin would have issued from its jaws. The original draftsman proceeded upon the belief that the guillotine is the surest cure for a bleeding at the nose.

Mr. President, I am sure we all agree upon this point, that the supreme purpose of all our legislation should be to revive industry, to revive business, to aid in bringing back employment, to assist in putting an end to unemployment. That I think should be our supreme purpose and our supreme object, and all our legislation should converge upon that point.

Unemployment is the supreme problem—I may add is the supreme tragedy, as I see it. Every man and every woman who wants work, every man and every woman who needs work, every man and every woman who is willing to work, every man and every woman who is willing to work and is unable to obtain work, is a living tragedy. That is the tragedy which we should strive to bring to an early conclusion.

Mr. President, when the panic burst upon us, when the depression came upon us in 1929, we had in this country approximately 50,000,000 people who were gainfully employed, who were engaged in gainful pursuits and occupations. This was about 40 percent of our entire population, about two fifths of all our people of all ages and of both sexes. That was the condition when the storm burst upon us. Approximately one half of that number, about 26,000,000, were directly engaged in the various branches of production, the production of the raw materials of industry, the production of the finished products of industry, building and construction work. These employments engaged 26,000,000 of our people who were gainfully employed.

A little less than one half our employed population, about 23,000,000, were engaged not directly in production but in the various branches of distribution and exchange, in the performance of services of various kinds as distinguished from production. They were engaged in distribution, exchange, transportation, communication, wholesale and retail business; they were engaged in banking, in the rendering of professional services, and of domestic services of different kinds. These branches occupied the time and employed the labor of 23,000,000 of our gainfully employed population.

We have today, or we had but recently, some 10,000,000 unemployed. About one half that number were previously employed in the various branches of production, the other half were previously employed in the various branches of service—transportation, banking, and other services—many of which, in fact, most of which, ministered directly or indirectly to production itself.

Mr. President, those who were engaged in production fell into two categories; one class were engaged in producing what the economists call consumptive goods—I borrow the phrase—either raw materials for the factory or finished goods for current use and consumption. Those goods are largely made up of such commodities as foods, feeds, fuel, fibers, fabrics, clothing, leather, rubber, and paper. Barring raw materials, they comprise for the most part articles which are handled in our retail trade, which are sold across the counter to the ultimate consumer. Those industries have made an earlier beginning and a more marked beginning toward recovery than have the so-called "heavy industries." Until recently their progress was much more marked, as it was much more gratifying than that of the heavy industries. Producers of this sort have a quick, a rapid turnover. They have frequent turnovers and producers of this kind, of course, have certain financial requirements and a certain type of institutions serve their requirements. They do and can rely upon short-time credits upon short-time loans. Their needs can be served by commercial banks, and, when they are functioning, they are served largely by commercial banks.

The other class of producers are what are known as the "heavy industries"—those engaged in producing what is called "capital goods"; what the economists, I believe, call "durable goods." For the most part they are engaged in producing for construction work cement, concrete, stone, brick, iron and steel, heavy equipment, and heavy machinery. Those articles constitute, for the most part, the output of the heavy industries, which have shown less signs of improvement and recovery than have the lighter industries. It is agreed by all that the heavy industries are lagging or have been lagging in the return to better times. It is also agreed by all that they must recover before recovery can be general or can be permanent.

They require a different sort of financing from the lighter industries, which have repeated turn-overs. Those industries require long-time financing. They cannot depend upon the commercial banks and short-time loans and short-time credits. They must resort to the capital market and have access to the savings of the people. They must largely rely upon bonds; they must largely rely upon stocks. They depend upon securities, realizing the required capital from the sale of their securities. Mr. President, this may be one of the reasons why these industries have exhibited a marked tardiness in returning toward prosperity. They have had difficulty in financing and refinancing themselves.

About 1 year ago the Securities Act was passed. It was predicted by many, and feared by some of us, that the Securities Act would serve as a brake upon the wheels of recovery. We feared that the measure was too stringent; that it was too rigorous; that it would seal up the sources of capital. Few, I believe, will now deny that those fears have come true. I believe that the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee has introduced an amendment seeking to liberalize the terms of the Securities Act and to facilitate long-time financing and refinancing in this country. Let us see what has actually happened under that measure.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ERICKSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GORE. I should prefer not to yield, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If I recall correctly, last year, when the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency were considering the so-called "Securities Act", my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma at that time remarked that the passage of such a very drastic bill would, in a sense, retard recovery. I believe that his predictions have come true, and I am reminded of that fact now by the words that have just fallen from his lips, when he indicated that very recently the administration had recommended a modification of the Securities Act.

Mr. GORE. I think, Mr. President, that this, in a measure, if we required any vindication, would vindicate the views of those of us who did not support the Securities Act, and who did not support it for the very reasons which are now assigned for the amendment of that measure.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GORE. I would rather not, because I have a few more points I desire to make and I do not desire to detain the Senate long; but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. I will not disturb the Senator. I was going to ask him a question, which I think is right along the line of the remarks which he has been making.

Mr. GORE. Very well. The Senator excites my curiosity. What is on his mind?

Mr. FESS. When the Senator mentions the situation as to durable goods, I think he puts his finger directly on the delicate point of our unemployment situation. I think it is the key log in the entire structure, and if he has a plan by which that jam can be unlocked—and I think he had something in mind when he spoke about long-time credits—it would be an object which I think we should all join in effectuating. The great difficulty is not only due to the wages that are unpaid in the durable-goods field, which is marked by unemployment, but also to the large group of unemployed salaried people heretofore providing services as distinguished from labor. If we could cure that situation, we probably would solve the entire problem. I mentioned some months ago that that seemed to be our difficulty.

I think the Senator also is accurate in his suggestion that penalizing legislation, no matter how wise the purpose sought by the legislation itself, and any legislation which will make it impossible to float corporate securities are bound to strike directly against the recovery of durable-goods industries.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Senator's inferences are correct; and I am glad he reminded me of it, because that point had slipped my mind. As I suggested a moment ago, 5,000,000 of our unemployed were previously engaged in production and another 5,000,000 were previously engaged in the performance of services many of which ministered to production. Those who were engaged in performing such services were, of course, auxiliaries, in a sense, to those who were engaged in production. When those engaged in production ceased to turn out their customary output, the need for transportation, wholesale and retail markets, and for other services, ceased and the factories came to a standstill. If we can reopen the factories, if we can revive those heavy industries, if we can reemploy the 5,000,000 men who were engaged in production, and restore their purchasing power, that will almost automatically not only require but demand the services of the 5,000,000 now unemployed and who were previously engaged in the performance of services.

Mr. FESS. That is precisely the point I wanted the Senator to emphasize.

Mr. GORE. Let the 5,000,000 formerly engaged in production renew their output and there will be an imperative economic demand for the services of those who were formerly engaged in transporting, handling, selling, and marketing those products.

Mr. President, we ought largely to concentrate upon the revival of the heavy industries. I do not know what their future or what their fate may be. There are some who think their future is behind them, as Artemus Ward might have said. There are some who think the heavy industries and their output have approached the point of saturation at least in many directions. There are some who believe the States, counties, and cities have constructed all the buildings that will be required for several generations to come, who believe that office buildings and other large establishments in our cities have been constructed until the demand for years to come has been supplied in advance.

There are those who think our public highways have been completed up to the point where further construction can be discontinued. There are many who believe our railroads have been constructed to the point where they will supply our demands for many years to come; that if, indeed, the demand continues constant the supply already is available, and that the railroads will have need to resort merely to replacing and maintaining themselves. That may be true.

But, Mr. President, we must at least have machinery for the lighter industries. We must have machinery to produce the products in the nature of consumable goods, goods for current demand and consumption. That need will be constant. That demand will be constant. That demand must be supplied. That demand must be financed not by commercial banks but must be supplied in the capital markets of the country.

At this point I return to my line of discussion, and I wish to show what has actually happened under the Securities Act. It became a law May 27 of last year. The rules and regulations, as I recall, were promulgated July 27 of last year, so that the first 7 months of last year were not under the control of the Securities Act. The last 5 months of last year were under the control of the Securities Act.

What about long-time financing last year? Private enterprise financed itself out of private resources, floated and sold securities during the first 7 months of last year to the amount of $314,000,000, or about $45,000,000 a month. That was not under the control of the Securities Act. The last 5 months of the year were under the control of the Securities Act and financing of that character during those 5 months dropped down to $67,000,000, or about $13,000,000 a month, about one fourth as much per month as during the preceding 7 months prior to the operation of the Securities Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GORE. I would rather not, but I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. I inquire if the Senator attributes that dropping off entirely to the provisions of the Securities Act?

Mr. GORE. No; I do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the emergency which existed following the bank holiday and the necessity for setting up machinery to try to start the wheels of industry again, was not the economic situation of the country of such a character that without any Securities Act there would have been a considerable falling off in the amount of money invested in new business?

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Kentucky is wide-awake and is extremely resourceful. That point naturally suggests itself to him in the abstract when isolated from the facts. I intended to remove that apprehension by stating this further fact: The Securities Act did not apply to Government securities. During the first 7 months of last year Government securities were floated in this country to the amount of $363,000,000, or $52,000,000 a month. During the last 5 months of last year Government securities were floated to the amount of $309,000,000, or $62,000,000 a month. Behind these statistics, Mr. President, these facts and these figures answers the inquiry which naturally suggested itself to the fertile mind of the Senator from Kentucky. There is no doubt that the Securities Act did serve, within limits, as a restriction on long-term financing in this country during the year 1933.

As I was observing a moment ago, these heavy industries must survive within certain limits, must survive in order to supply the lighter industries with machinery and many other demands that are imperative and must be supplied. To the extent that the heavy industries survive they must be financed. There are only two sources from which those heavy industries can be financed. There are only two sources available to which the heavy industries can have recourse in order to provide themselves with the capital indispensable to their survival. What are they?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GORE. I would rather not, but I will.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to ask the Senator how we may ever expect to absorb the 10,000,000 who are now unemployed unless we lend some encouragement to industry?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have a great reliance upon natural economic forces. I think that in the healing art nature does the work. Medicine may stimulate the forces of nature and may accelerate recovery, but medicine does not mend the patient. I have great reliance upon natural economic forces. I think within reasonable limits we can stimulate and accelerate those forces. On the other hand, I think we can retard and obstruct operations and hinder recovery itself.

I return, Mr. President. There are just two sources from which these heavy industries can finance themselves. One is out of the savings and resources of the people; one is out of the private purse of the private investors of the country. The other is out of the public purse.

That brings me to a question which concerns me much.

We hear a great many amusing whisperings around the corridors of the Capitol about those who would like to supersede our democracy, supersede our political and our economic structure, by some form of state socialism, or communism, or Hitlerism, or some other form of collectivism. I make no such intimation; but if I desired to supersede the institutions of our fathers, if I desired to supplant democracy with state socalism or any other form of collectivism, there are two courses that I would pursue, two courses paralleling each other, and—if I may use so novel an illustration—two parallel lines that finally converge. If I desired to substitute state socialism for our economic system, I would insist upon legislation like the Securities Act. I would make it so stringent that private enterprise could not finance itself from private resources. I would seal up the fountains of private finance so that industry could not meet its requirements at the hands of private investors.

Mr. President, if I desired to substitute state socialism for democracy, I would support such legislation as the pending bill was when it first came to the light of day. I would support such legislation as this measure was when it was first laid upon the doorsteps of Congress. I would support such legislation as this bill was when it was first thrown in at the window of the Banking and Currency Committee. I would strangle private enterprise, suffocate it, starve it, until it could not meet its requirements out of the resources of private investors.

On the other hand, in addition to favoring legislation such as I have described, I would favor more liberal legislation, if that be conceivable, providing for the Government to finance private enterprise. I would drive private industry, private enterprise, out of the capital markets of the country, and I would bolt the gates against its efforts. I would drive private industry and enterprise to the Government of the United States; and sooner or later I would expect to see private enterprise nestling upon the knee of the Government and lying supinely upon its breast, drawing from the breast of the Government the pabulum essential to its survival.

That is what I would do.

What have we done? Mark the parallel, which is, of course, a coincidence. What has the Government done to enable our people to borrow money, to enable them to get deeper and deeper into the quicksand of debt, which is almost a synonym for death—the crux of the present problem upon one hand, as unemployment is upon the other?

In 1913–14 we established the Federal Reserve System, founded in the beginning upon sound principles, and addressed to a salutary public object. I think every amendment of that measure has impaired its character and its efficiency. We created a dozen Federal Reserve banks in a dozen different districts.

Last year, or the year before, we breathed the breath of life into a dozen home-loan banks. I may not use the exact designation. We created a dozen home-loan banks in a dozen districts, financed in the first instance out of the Treasury of the United States, refinanced in the second instance out of the Treasury of the United States, which is only another word for out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States.

Then we guaranteed the interest on the bonds of those banks. Was that sufficient? There was an overwhelming and unanswerable demand that we guarantee the principal, or the scheme would not stand. We guaranteed the principal; and, Mr. President, I fear me much that the Government of the United States will one day pay the principal, and will one day pay the interest, if the principal and the interest are ever paid. Perhaps we may enable this arm of Federal sovereignty to go into the bankruptcy court and repudiate its debts, and dishonor its credit, and defraud its creditors. The Federal Government itself has changed the terms of its own obligations. Let none be shocked at what I say.

We created 12 farm-land banks in 12 different districts, financed in the first instance out of the Treasury of the United States, refinanced in the second instance out of the pocketbooks of the taxpayers of the United States. Lately, we guaranteed the interest on the bonds. Did that suffice? Still later we guaranteed the principal of the bonds; and I fear me that if those bonds are ever paid, they will be paid out of the pocketbooks of the taxpayers. And so we go on with this merry parade of providing credit for everybody who will accept credit.

That is not all. We establish 12 intermediate-credit banks to make loans to the farmers—a dozen intermediate-credit banks in a dozen different districts.

Is that all?

We have recently established a dozen crop-production corporations in a dozen districts and have authorized those corporations to create hundreds of little lending institutions from one end of the land unto the other.

Is that all?

We have created or authorized 12 cooperative credit banks of some designation—a dozen such banks in a dozen different districts.

Mr. President, but recently a bill was introduced in the Senate to create 12 intermediate banks for the benefit of industry. It was argued that we had 12 intermediate banks for agriculture, why not 12 intermediate banks for industry? There is no sufficient answer to such question. As long as the Government takes its stand upon justice, upon the principle that it will mete out justice to every citizen, whether he be high or low, rich or poor, the Government has a rule of conduct for its guidance in all exigencies—a place where it can say "no."

When you once depart from the standard of justice and begin to dispense favors and begin to mete out privileges, you no longer have a standard for your guidance, and you have no place where you can ever say "no." That is the pity of it.

But due to the wisdom of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the chairman, the Committee on Banking and Currency refused to report this bill, refused to bring another litter of banks into being, refused to bring in a bill authorizing the 12 Federal Reserve banks to make loans directly to industry, which would have been a departure from the principle upon which the bank was founded, and a dangerous departure.

Mr. President, the relationship of creditor and debtor between a sovereign and a private citizen is an impossible relationship. It cannot work out well; it cannot work out to the satisfaction of both parties concerned. One or the other, and probably both, will be dissatisfied.

Sometimes favors are curses to their recipients. You cannot satisfy the demand for easy credit with easier credit; that is like drinking salt water—it is like drinking the brine of the sea—it does not quench the thirst, it aggravates the thirst. . I was reading only a day or two ago about Pericles, who installed in Athens a system of distributing public moneys from the public treasury among the people of Athens. I was reading the comment of Plato upon this policy of Pericles, written about a hundred years after the policy was instituted. Plato said that Pericles had converted the people of Athens into an idle, avaricious, self-respectless, gossip-mongering set of paupers and beggars. So said Plato in the ancient days. Of course, we have profited by what happened to them.

Mr. President, a bill was reported only a day or two ago to authorize the R.F.C. to do exactly what the other bill authorized the Federal Reserve banks to do, to make direct loans to industry. Heretofore the R.F.C. has been obliged to lend through financial institutions, or to lend through mortgage concerns adapted to or created for that purpose. That did not go far enough, and it did not go fast enough. The bill was first rejected by the Committee on Banking and Currency, but the campaign was renewed with irresistible vigor. Pressure was brought to bear; the R.F.C. must not be discriminated against, and that bill now stands here upon the calendar, and of course it will pass.

I want to say, in this connection, that I have the highest regard for Jesse Jones. I think he is one of the ablest men connected with this administration, or with the previous administration. I think that for the place he now holds, he is one of the best-fitted men in the entire country, if not the best.

Mr. President, this thing is a disease. It is a creeping paresis. I believe it is said that whenever erysipelas strikes the mucous membrane, death ensues. I hope this financial erysipelas will not reach the mucous membrane of the Nation.

I may astound others when I say that I am in favor of creating another set of financial institutions. Every man wants his particular set or his particular litter of banks. We are preparing a bill in the Committee on Banking and Currency to establish a dozen banks in a dozen different districts authorized, and not only authorized, but directed, to lend money, without security and without interest, to the members of the old fiddlers' union.

The old fiddlers' union has been neglected. It resents this neglect and still more its isolation. Not a thing has been done for it in recent years. In other years Democrats put catgut and fiddle strings on the free list, but along came the irreverent Republicans and placed them back on the dutiable list.

The members of the old fiddlers' union have votes. They have families who vote, and they have influence. We did strike a deadlock on this. Nobody on either side was disposed to make the old fiddlers mortgage both the fiddle and the bow. That would have been an inordinate exaction. Besides, the old fiddlers met in convention and declared they would vote against anybody who voted for any such proposition. So the only question was whether to have them mortgage the fiddle or mortgage the bow only. Personally, I say "fiddlesticks." [Laughter.]

I have said this, Mr. President, in order to reduce this matter to what I believe they used to call in geometry a reductio ad absurdum.

Mr. President, I desire to add one further observation. I wish to express the hope that the Congress will not make the mistake, will not commit the blunder that was committed by Congress in 1864 with respect to legislation of like character to this.

Early in the Civil War this country skidded off the gold standard or rather off a metallic basis. After the greenback measure was passed the country was on a paper standard and remained on a paper standard for some 18 years. When we went on a paper standard gold became merchandise as well as money, and, like any other merchandise, it was bought and sold and dealt in and speculated in, if you please, like any other merchandise in the market place. It went to a high premium, as high as 84 or 85 percent early in 1864.

Importers were obliged to pay customs duties in gold. They had to make provision in advance for the gold which would be required when goods were received at ports. Importers had to make payments for imported goods in gold or in foreign exchange purchased with gold. Necessarily they had to provide themselves in advance or assure themselves in advance that the gold or the foreign exchange would be available when the goods reached port and had to be paid for. As I say, the result was that gold went to a premium of 84 or 85 percent early in 1864.

A great many of our people, many of our statesmen, many of the politicians, jumped to the conclusion that gambling in gold was responsible for all our financial ills. I say "statesmen" shared that conviction because Salmon P. Chase, then Secretary of the Treasury, urged the passage of the so-called "gold bill", and declared that if that measure should not remedy then existing evils he would resign his high position as Secretary of the Treasury.

The so-called "gold bill" passed on June 17, 1864. On that day gold was selling at $1.84, at a premium of 84 cents. Within 1 week gold shot up to $2.84, the premium advanced 100 points in less than a week; the premium doubled in less than a week.

And mark you, gold was being bought and sold in the market place and the law referred to made it a high crime to buy and sell gold for delivery 1 day subsequent to the date of the sale. It made it a high crime to buy foreign exchange for delievery more than 10 days subsequent to the date of purchase. One authority said that the act bristled with penalties. The minimum fine was $1,000; the maximum was $10,000. The minimum imprisonment, I believe, was 3 months and the maximum, perhaps, 2 years or 5 years; and a reward was given to informers who furnished evidence for the conviction of gamblers in gold. Within a week after the passage of that measure gold went up more than 100 points, from 184 to 284.

On the 30th of June, Secretary Chase, true to his word, resigned his office as Secretary of the Treasury. On the 2d day of July, 15 days after the enactment of that economic measure, the Congress repealed the so-called "gold act." One historian said Congress "shamefacedly" repealed the gold act. Within 2 days gold sold off 50 points. After a few days varying with bad news it settled down to the level or to a lower level than that which prevailed at the time Congress made their adventure into economic legislation.

Mr. President, most of our economic legislation like that simply makes it hard to do what has to be done.

I apologize to the Senate for having taken this time. I wish now to call attention to only one further point in the bill, and I shall offer no amendment. I refer to page 2, line 3.

Section 2 of the bill is a stump speech, and it is an eloquent one. I do not discredit it. It declares that transactions on the stock exchange are affected with a national public interest. I suppose that is to provide a constitutional peg on which to hang the proposed legislation.

Mr. President, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the question as to whether a property is affected with a public interest is a question of fact, not a question of law. They have held that it depends upon the size and the importance of the property and the use to which it is devoted.

I believe the case of McFarland v. American Sugar Refining Co. (241 Sup. Ct. Repts.), decided that point. The Legislature of Louisiana undertook to impress a sugar refinery with a public interest. The Supreme Court of the United States held that that was not a question of law but was a question of fact, and since the days of Lord Chief Justice Hale it has, of course, been a recognized principle of law that a private individual by subjecting his property to a public use can invest the public with an interest in the property, and to the extent of such interest, it is subject to regulation. That principle was laid down in the case of Munn v. Illinois (94 U.S. Repts.), which is the leading case in this country on the subject.

No mere phraseology like that, no mere abracadabra of that sort, can change the character of these transactions. I do not know whether a transaction can be impressed with a public interest or not, as private property dedicated to public use can be impressed. I do not know, and I am not particularly concerned about that point. I merely wished to raise this point so that if the question should come before the Supreme Court, it would not be thought that it had been passed entirely unnoticed.

I wish now to make a request. I introduced a bill on this subject. I shall not offer it as an amendment, but I do ask to have it printed in the RECORD. It is based on the report prepared by Assistant Secretary Dickinson and his committee. I think it would be wiser legislation than the pending bill, but I do not propose it as an amendment. I also ask to have printed following my remarks a newspaper article with the heading, "Plea to Congress for 486,000 Firms." Among the signers of this plea I note the name of a prominent citizen of Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the bill and newspaper article referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(This bill based on Mr. Dickinson's report)

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Stock Exchange Act of 1934."

STOCK EXCHANGE COMMISSION

SEC. 2. There is hereby established a Federal Stock Exchange Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") to be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, who shall be members ex officio, and three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two of such appointed Commissioners shall be members of the same political party. No appointed Commissioner shall actively engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as Commissioner. Each appointed Commissioner shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 a year and shall hold office for a term of 6 years, except that (1) any Commissioner appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and (2) the terms of office of the Commissioners first taking office after the date of enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, 1 at the end of 2 years, 1 at the end of 4 years, and 1 at the end of 6 years, after the date of enactment of this act.

LICENSING PROVISIONS

SEC. 3. (a) After 6 months after the date of enactment of this act it shall be unlawful to transmit or cause to be transmitted through the mails or in interstate commerce by any means or instruments of transportation or communication (1) any quotation of prices, or any other advice, report, or information concerning transactions on any stock exchange in any security listed, quoted, or dealt in on such exchange; (2) any offer to buy or sell such security on such stock exchange; (3) any contract, agreement, or memorandum of purchase or sale of any such security arising out of any transaction on such stock exchange; and (4) any security sold or to be sold on such stock exchange, unless such stock exchange shall have first obtained a license from the Commission as hereinafter provided and such license is in effect at the time of such transmission.

(b) Any stock exchange may make application to the Commission for a license, and such application shall be in such form and accompanied by such information as the Commission shall by regulations prescribe. Within 30 days after the receipt of any such application, and after full opportunity for hearing, the Commission shall enter an order granting or denying the license, unless the applicant therefor withdraws the application or consents to postponement of action thereon for a period to be designated by the Commission. The Commission shall grant the license applied for if it finds that the provisions of the constitution and rules of the stock exchange reasonably guard against undue speculative activity and unwarranted manipulative practices on such exchange, and otherwise govern the activities of the exchange and its members so as to afford reasonably adequate protection for investors.

CONDITIONS OF LICENSES

SEC. 4. Each license issued to a stock exchange under this act shall contain the following terms and conditions:

(1) That no change will be made in the constitution or rules of the exchange unless the Commission, after full opportunity for hearing, has first approved such change as being consistent with the requirements of subsection (b) of section 3 for the granting of a license;

(2) That the exchange will make such changes in its rules as the Commission may from time to time require, after full opportunity for hearing, as being necessary to make such rules consistent with the requirements of subsection (b) of section 3 for the granting of a license; and

(3) That the exchange shall take such disciplinary measures as may be necessary properly to enforce the provisions of its constitution and rules.

REVOCATION AND SUSPENSION OF LICENSES

SEC. 5. (a) The Commission shall by order, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, revoke the license of any stock exchange in any case where it finds that such exchange has failed or refused to comply with any of the terms and conditions of its license; except that if, in any such case, the Commission is of the opinion that the revocation of such license will not be in the public interest, it shall suspend the license of such exchange for such period as it deems consistent with the public interest.

(b) Any order of the Commission revoking or suspending a license may be reviewed by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, or the circuit court of appeals for the judicial circuit in which the stock exchange is located, if a petition for such review is filed within 1 month after the date such order was issued. The judgment of any such court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, in the manner provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended. The review by such courts shall be limited to questions of law, and the findings of fact by the Commission, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. Upon such review, such courts shall have power to affirm or, if the order of the Commission is not in accordance with law, to reverse the order of the Commission, with or without remanding the case for a rehearing, as justice may require.

SPECIAL POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 6. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

(b) The Commission is authorized to recommend to stock exchanges licensed under this act such standards with respect to stock-exchange practices, and to gather and compile such information and make such investigations concerning transactions on the various stock exchanges, stock-market operations and practices, and related matters, as in its judgment are necessary and proper in the public interest and for the protection of investors.

(c) For the purpose of all inquiries and investigations made by the Commission under this act, any member of the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it are empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, or other documents which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry or investigation. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing.

(d) The Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such assistants and experts, and, subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint such employees, and to make such expenditures (including expenditures for rent and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and for law books, books of reference, and periodicals, and for printing and binding), as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

(e) The Commission is authorized to prescribe reasonable fees for licenses required under this act.

TESTIMONY AND PRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE

SEC. 7. (a) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person pursuant to this act, any United States court within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides, upon application by the Commission, may issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or one of its members or officers designated by it, there to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or there to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

(b) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, or documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

PENALTIES

SEC. 8. Any person who knowingly violates any of the provisions of this act, or the rules or regulations promulgated by the Commission under authority thereof, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

PLEA TO CONGRESS FOR 486,000 FIRMS—28 LEADERS HOLD EXCHANGE BILL UNFAIR TO CONCERNS WHOSE STOCKS ARE NOT LISTED—FEAR STRANGLING RULES—LETTER SUGGESTING NUMEROUS REVISIONS IS SENT TO ALL MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Twenty-eight prominent industrialists joined today in a strong appeal for modification of the Fletcher-Rayburn stock-exchange regulation bill in the interest of almost half a million corporations the securities of which are not listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

They asserted in a letter to congressional leaders that 486,000 corporations, large and small, do business in the United States, while only 1,365 are listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

The letter was prepared by the National Committee for Modification of Industrial Sections of the Securities Exchange Act. W. B. Bell, president of the American Cyanamide Corporation, is chairman of the committee.

"While ostensibly this legislation is intended only to eliminate speculative abuses from the security exchanges", the letter said, "actually more than 450,000 firms throughout the land with no Wall Street connection would be brought under the strangling regulation of a Federal bureau."

The letter was sent in duplicate to Senator FLETCHER, Chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, and Representative RAYBURN, Chairman of the House Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The House passed the bill Friday and the Senate is expected to make it unfinished business this week, probably on Tuesday.

FEW CHANGES EXPECTED

The House made few changes in the bill as reported. The Senate is expected to pass the Banking and Currency Committee draft practically in the form reported.

The committee which sent the letter is affiliated with the National Association of Manufacturers and includes leaders in industry in all sections of the country.

"This group", said Mr. Bell, "has been organized to demand for business the justice which is not now a part of the pending stock-exchange regulation bills.

"The statistics of income-tax returns complied by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue disclose about 486,000 corporations doing business in the United States. Of this number, 1,365 are listed on the New York Stock Exchange and on all the exchanges of the country there are not more than 3,000 listed securities. Some 75 percent of these corporations do not have an annual income in excess of $25,000.

"Yet this legislation assumes that in order to obtain the purging of the stock markets, with which industry is in sympathy, it is necessary to require numerous reports from all of these thousands of small corporations that have no connection whatever with the stock market. The additional bookkeeping and accounting which would be necessary to meet the requirements of Federal regulation would place an unbearable financial burden upon many of the small corporations."

THE TEXT OF LETTER

Following is the text of the letter:

"The undersigned are a self-constituted committee representing the business corporations of which they are executives and many other business corporations of this country who have requested that we represent them.

"We are sending this letter to you to express the conviction, which we all have, that a serious mistake has been made by your committee in failing to give heed to the statements which have been presented to you urging further modifications of the provisions of the National Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which affect corporations, in addition to those made by your committees before reporting this bill to the Senate and the House of Representatives.

"The bill in the form presented by both committees retains, however, many provisions which extend its scope far beyond the regulation of exchanges and speculation. The business corporations of this country are no part of the stock exchanges.

"The latter may be the proper subject matter for regulation by Congress in order to prevent in the future the abuses of the past and to control harmful speculation by the public. But there is no justification for subjecting the more than 450,000 corporations of the United States to regulation by the Federal Government through a commission under the powers granted by this bill.

"Of these 450,000 corporations, only a few hundred have securities listed on any national exchange.

CALLS FOR FURTHER AMENDMENTS

"We recognize that both of the committees, particularly the House committee, have made a number of constructive amendments to the bill. We also recognize the helpful results which have been accomplished through the efforts of many of the members of the committees, who have realized the dangers to business corporations of the country from the drastic provisions of the bill in its earlier forms.

"However, it is apparent that a majority of the members of the committees have failed to consider the effect of many of the sections of the bill in its present forms, and to realize that in order to relieve such corporations of unfair burdens it is essential to make further amendments.

"The sections referred to below all require further amendment in both drafts of the bill in order to meet the objections which are expressed in the comments referring to each section. The specific amendments required to each draft to accomplish this purpose will be different, since some of the changes which have been made by one or the other committee partially meet certain of our objections.

"1. Registration requirements for securities and periodicals and other reports (secs. 12 and 13, Senate bill; secs. 11 and 12, House bill).

"These sections impose burdens on corporations by requiring information which is not necessary to protect investors and much of which is of a confidential nature, which may become public under the later section which relates to the public character of information. The power given to the Commission to dictate the form and detail of the reports required by these sections is too broad and unless greatly limited would result in burdensome regulations which would add excessive costs to business enterprises. A corporation should have the unqualified right to withdraw its securities from registration on reasonable notice.

SECTION ON PROXIES CRITICIZED

"2. Proxies (sec. 14, Senate bill; sec. 13, House bill).

"Paragraph (a) of this section does not in any way relate to speculation or regulation of security exchanges. It gives the Commission a broad power to regulate stockholders' proxies and so to interfere in the conduct of business corporations.

"3. Over-the-counter markets (sec. 15, Senate bill; sec. 14, House bill).

"This section affects more than 450,000 corporations which have no listed securities. It gives the Commission power to require registration of such securities. It therefore subjects to the Commission's control every corporation whose securities are sold through dealers or brokers on any market no matter how limited or how local. This section should be omitted.

"4. Directors, officers, and principal stockholders (sec. 16, Senate bill; sec. 15, House bill).

"This section should not apply to stockholders. It is unwise to discourage large investments in stocks of industrial corporations. Such stock holdings create interest in corporate affairs which is both a check on and an aid to management. In the Senate bill the provision, subsection (b), imposing liability is unfair and should be omitted.

"5. Liability for misleading statements (sec. 18 Senate bill, sec. 17 House bill).

"The liability under this section should be limited to false statements. Liability for misleading statements in the cases covered by this section is unwarranted. The provision in the Senate bill in regard to omissions is particularly dangerous.

WOULD LIMIT LIABILITY

"6. Liability of controlling persons (sec. 20 Senate bill, sec. 19 House bill).

"This section should be substantially modified. Liability of a controlling person should be limited to cases where the controlling person makes use of other persons in order to evade the act.

"7. Public character of information (sec. 23 Senate bill, sec. 23 House bill).

"This section should be more strictly limited. The Commission should only have power to disclose information which is essential to protect investors. In no event should it have power to reveal information which will damage the business of the corporation through disclosures of confidential information to its competitors, both domestic and foreign. Such disclosure is certain to result in loss to investors.

"8. Validity of contracts (sec. 28 Senate bill, sec. 28 House bill).

"The provisions of paragraph (b) of this section may render any number of commercial contracts void, with disastrous results on innocent parties. The effect of the act on contracts made in violation of its provisions should be governed by ordinary common-law principles.

"9. Penalties (sec. 30 Senate bill, sec. 32 House bill).

"These provisions are unnecessarily severe. Congress assumes a serious responsibility when it gives to a commission extraordinary power to make rules and regulations the violation of which is made a criminal offense punishable by excessive fines and imprisonment. In effect the bill gives the Commission power to write a criminal code.

OTHER CHANGES SUGGESTED

"In a letter of this kind we have limited our comments to the more important provisions of the bill, but additional changes in the wording of other sections are required to make them conform to the purpose of the changes proposed above, the details of which cannot adequately be set forth herein.

"These proposed changes in the bill will not weaken those provisions of the bill which are appropriate and essential to the proper regulation of the stock exchanges of the country and speculative trading on these exchanges. They will, however, relieve the business corporations of the country from those burdens which would increase substantially the cost of their operation.

"In its present form the bill sets up a barrier to the free flow of private capital into industrial enterprise, so essential to reemployment of labor and to the furnishing of capital for immediate recovery. We urge the passage of amendments necessary to accomplish our objectives.

"In order that the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, before whom the drafts of the bill are now pending, may be fully informed concerning the point of view with reference to them, we are sending a copy of this letter to each Member of Congress."

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am of opinion that all Senators who have listened to the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] will agree with me that they have heard one of the most logical as well as one of the soundest and sanest addresses that has been delivered in this Chamber for many a day. We always listen to the eloquent Senator with appreciation, as well as edification, but he has dealt today with more or less of an abstract view of an abstract question, and has strongly reinforced his points by citation of concrete measures which have already been enacted into law.

When those who take the time to read the RECORD read what the Senator from Oklahoma has said, they will find an unusually accurate recital of what has taken place in the form of legislation, in an attempt to relieve, if not to cure, a situation which affects our credit and financial system.

The Senator from Oklahoma has emphasized the principal ills from which we are suffering, and which many people think can be cured by artificial methods, totally ignoring all the force of economic law.

The Senator is a man who is not easily swayed by arguments in favor of artificial methods of cure. He made several statements which ought to have further study by our people when they are thinking of the conditions under which we are living.

The Senator spoke of the only two sources of funds for investments: One is from the income and savings of the people; the other from the Public Treasury. Mr. President, I should like to adopt the speech of the Senator from Oklahoma as my own. I wish I were able to present such a speech. I only take the time now to make a little further comment on one or two points which he did not develop.

The question of the source of funds for investments—with which we are dealing in this bill—ought to have had further light thrown upon it; and if it had not been for the fact that I did not want to interrupt the Senator, I should have asked him the question so I would have gotten his judgment on it: What proportion of the savings and income of our people, which ought to be the primary source of all investment, is now being absorbed by Government financing? It must be obvious to everyone that in the financing of the Government the money must come from some source; and if Government financing goes far toward absorbing the income and savings of our people, then what will be left for actual investment in industry, and how will industry recover in view of that situation? I should like very much to have had amplification of that particular problem which is before us from a Senator with such a mind as that of the Senator who has just spoken.

It is true that in normal times Government obligations, if they must be met by borrowing instead of taxation, take the form of long-term financing. Ordinarily every substantial financial institution of the country which desires its reserves in a safe place puts them in the long-term financing of Government; but there is not any man of any thoughtfulness who does not know that now such financing has ceased to be an investment on the part of any great banking institution in America. Instead of the Government being able to meet its obligations by means of long-term financing, it has to resort to the short-term financing, and there is no one who does not know that short-term financing absorbs the income and savings of our people, while if the Government's needs were taken care of by means of long-term financing the income and savings of the people would not be so largely absorbed in that manner. As we are abandoning long-term financing because of necessity and confining ourselves to short-term financing, we are absorbing the liquid assets in the form of income and savings which have always been the basis of industrial investments.

We are now discussing the question of the floating of securities and whether by this proposed legislation we shall clog the channel through which they flow. Such securities would naturally depend in ordinary conditions upon the income and savings of the people of the country, which, if absorbed by the Government's financing, will not be available for such investment. That is the particular phase of the discussion of the Senator from Oklahoma upon which sometimes at his leisure I should like to have him expand, because it is, in my judgment, one of the most serious financial situations confronting us today.

Mr. President, the danger from legislation such as is now pending is not so much contained in the wording of the legislation. Rather it results from the uncertain state of mind which the whole country is in which leads us to legislate from impulse rather than from judgment. That was evidenced in the passage of the National Securities Act. There had been so much done which ought not to have been allowed during the boom time that there was a profound prejudice against the buying and selling of securities as well as the issuance of securities, and when the suggestion came before us, which had been before the public for months previously, that something should be done in the form of legislation to correct abuses with respect to floating securities, there never theretofore having been enacted anything like a national "blue sky" law, there was a general response to that suggestion There were very few who did not rather sympathetically regard the proposal.

I happened to be a member of the Ohio constitutional convention which gave sanction to one of the first "blue sky" statutes to be enacted in any State of the Union. I recall that when we were discussing it well-poised men wanted to know how far we were going to go in an attempt to protect the foolish man who never seemed to be impressed with "let the buyer beware." While that question did appeal to some of us, we were impressed with the advantage being taken of the public in the floating of securities which really had no sound basis. Consequently I have been more or less sympathetic with blue-sky legislation. But such legislation had up to recent times been limited to the States.

Biills to effect "blue sky" legislation often have been introduced in the House. One Member from Illinois persisted in his endeavors to have national recognition given to that form of legislation, but he never could induce his colleagues to go to the extent of putting it on the statute books.

This sort of legislation, therefore, is not new. It has been before the country in the form of State legislation for years and years. There is some justification for it, but it ought never to be the result of impulse, and its prime objective should not be to penalize. We ought not to put our eye merely upon the misfeasance and lose sight of the real structure which we may destroy because we do not like what someone has done. That is the danger in the National Securities Act.

I was sympathetic with that measure, but it went to such extent that, of course, I could not support it. I was one of the Senators who withheld his support for a time, until there was a slight modification, and finally under the pressure of that line of argument which would indicate that "this or nothing will be passed", I voted with reluctance for the bill.

The very thing I was afraid of has taken place. The thing that I ought to have known would occur when legislation is passed under such stress, did occur, and the legislation went too far in its effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ERICKSON in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, after which time, under the unanimous consent order, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill, or more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any amendment that may be pending, or may be offered.

Mr. FESS. Then I shall be permitted to proceed under the limitation, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the law to which I refer was too rigid. The Senator from Oklahoma has related the facts about the literal clogging of the channel for floating corporate securities. We ought to have known that that would be its effect, and that whatever obstructs or prevents the floating of corporate securities strikes at the very heart of recovery and is directly against it.

Take the case of the production of what are known as heavy durable goods, as discussed by the Senator from Oklahoma. The production of such goods cannot be wholly financed by borrowing. There is not a bank in America that will loan to an institution that is in the red. Under the law they are forbidden to do so, and no manager of a bank would permit it. A reorganization might be necessary in order to enable an industry running "in the red" to obtain relief; and unless there shall be some way by which securities may be floated there can be no increase of an old business and there will be no beginning of a new business.

Let me illustrate what I mean. Let us say a new business is started; it wants to borrow its initial capital; but no bank is going to loan on the good will of that new institution, and no bank will loan on its future prospects. However, under proper management, that corporation could issue its stocks, preferred and common, limiting the preferred issue to its actual value, and permitting the common stock to express its prospective value. People who are informed as to the enterprise, and have confidence in it, would be willing to purchase securities issued by such a corporation which has great promise though not enough assets, to begin with, to secure financial assistance from any bank. Under the National Securities Act such issuance of securities is virtually clogged entirely.

That act has had the effect of blocking the issuance of necessary corporate securities, without which there will be neither revival nor any increase in business; and yet, through pride of opinion, with even the President suggesting that there ought to be a modification of that act, we are not able to have it brought before us for consideration. Why is that? It is because of the impulse which is the ruling one in the American mind today. We may be able to get some modification of the Securities Act along the line of what is absolutely essential by an amendment suggested by the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency being attached to the pending bill, but there is a hesitancy, as is obvious to everyone, to reconsider the bill in the form in which we passed it a year ago and to modify it. That is why we ought to go slowly with legislation such as is now pending before us.

I appreciate what the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] said the other day in his appraisal of the force of public opinion on legislation to the effect that if it were not for the state of mind in which we were we would not pass such an act as this which is now proposed. There was a rather striking example of the opposite of that statement here the other day when the amendment was offered to forbid dealing in margins. That amendment struck at precisely the most unpopular practice of the stock exchange, and appealed almost to every individual who has studied stock-exchange operations. The purpose of that amendment was to prevent a practice of the stock exchange which is the subject of universal criticism. However, there was not anyone here who could properly estimate the effect of that amendment had it been adopted. The sympathy of Senators on this side of the aisle would be favorable to it if it should not be so framed as to go further than was the intention of the proponent of the amendment. When, however, it is realized what effect on a great institution the limitation of what we all condemn might have, not knowing how far beyond that the proposed measure might go, we hesitate. If the action of this body were wholly determined by popular acclaim, there would not have been a single vote against that amendment, because it would have been the popular thing before the public to have done.

However, I am convinced that there is great value in the stock exchange as an institution. I should not want to emasculate it. I know, as does everyone else, that if we should forbid a certain practice that has come to be common on the New York Stock Exchange it would be only 1 month until that activity would be transferred to Montreal, across the border. If I knew that there was no value or advantage to be lost, and a movement of that kind were only for good, I would not hesitate; but I am afraid, without proper information, to go to the extent of destroying probably an institution which I think is of value.

Mr. President, I cannot join the group who feel that there is no good purpose served by the stock exchange. I am of the opinion that there is great value in having a place which is properly organized where one may sell securities issued by new or old corporations. I say that as one who never saw the operations of the exchange; never, to my knowledge, have I bought or sold anything as the result of the operations of the stock exchange; but the question is involved whether we should keep within the bounds of caution when we are legislating in the form of providing penalties.

Mr. President, there is another point of which we must not lose sight. We all desire recovery. There is not anything so important to America today as recovery. Our only difficulty is in finding the way by which it may most speedily be brought about. Some of us are afraid to justify any means which may be employed merely because of the end desired, and especially are we afraid if the end is not assured. We sometimes proceed on the theory that we want to accomplish a certain result, and we would choose other methods if we could avoid those suggested, but we cannot do so, and therefore we adopt questionable methods in order to attain a justifiable end. That is always of doubtful wisdom; and to assume that such a course is justified when we are not certain that the means will bring about the desired end is certainly not wise. That is our difficulty here.

There is no one who does not want to cure the abuses of the stock exchange, unless perhaps it be some person who wants to profit personally on the stock exchange. Probably there are people of that kind, but I am speaking now of Senators and Representatives in Congress. There are none of them who do not want to cure such abuses. The only question is whether in our attempt to do that we will not do more harm than good.

I wish to call attention to the fact that in our desire for recovery we are under a terrific burden to take care of conditions during the interim before recovery shall have returned. We are under a terrific burden in the form of relief; we are running a deficit this year of nearly seven and a half billion dollars; we are paying out that much more than we take in. That is caused by our effort to meet the unusual problems which confront us; it is so in spite of the fact that we are increasing the burdens of taxation. The House sends to us a bill carrying $280,000,000 of new taxes. In this body we increase it to nearly $500,000,000. It goes to conference and comes out carrying $417,000,000. That, without doubt, is essential and in a degree it relieves somewhat the deficit, though not in any material way. But think of the small part of the enormous deficit the Government must meet that will be satisfied by this increased taxation.

What we are doing is to increase constantly the burdens on business in the form of new taxation in the hope of balancing the Budget. We will not balance the Budget because it is impossible. That cannot be done by taxation. We will have to take care of it by future borrowing. Notwithstanding that we cannot balance the Budget, we will continue to increase taxation. To the degree that we increase it we make the burden on business that much heavier. Every time we add new expenses to governmental operations we place heavier burdens upon business.

That is on the one side. On the other side we strike at business by making it impossible for the business man to freely float the securities necessary if he is to put himself on a basis where he can pay any tax, particularly the increased taxes. We are trying by a form of penalization to cure some of the malfeasance in an organization whose members, whether they violate the rules or not, have no command of or brake upon the ambitions or desires of people to speculate. I do not know how we are going to control that situation. We can destroy the work of the stock exchange if that is desired, but I do not believe that would be a wise course to pursue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the bill has expired.

Mr. FESS. I will take my time on the pending amendment.

Mr. President, I am speaking of our acting on impulse here. We have our eye on gambling. We want to stop it, but the danger is that in order to prevent somebody doing what he should not do we may go to the extent of destroying the very structure we would like to preserve. Of course, those who think there is no function that is justifiable in the stock exchange will have no alarm because of anything of that sort; but those of us who believe there is a function of national importance in maintaining a stock exchange upon which securities may find a market, consider it quite necessary to be guarded in our legislation, and that instead of having a punitive element as the imperative and major item of legislation, we should keep in mind maintaining the structure. That was an error into which we fell in the consideration and passage of the National Securities Act. If we fall into a similar error here, as I think we are doing, it will not be a year until we will be called upon to modify what we are about to do.

I desire to repeat what I said a while ago. The only way to recovery, which is the big thing in the minds of everybody, is to find the means whereby industry and business can employ labor. There is no other way. Any other way is merely relief in the name of reform, but it is not recovery. There is no better way to employ the unemployed on a sound basis, without bankrupting the Treasury of the United States, than to find a way for business enterprise to pursue and increase its activities. We must, therefore, depend upon the man who is paying the taxes. We are now increasing the burden of taxation upon him, and, on the other hand, making it more and more difficult for him to make the necessary money with which to pay his taxes.

If we could eliminate the evils we want to get rid of without destroying the organization which we should like to maintain, I would go along with those who are pressing the bill. But I pursued that course in connection with the securities against my own better judgment. I now see the result of that course. I see the apparent impossibility of inducing those who were back of it to admit the error and to seek an improvement of that act by amendment. There are those in this Chamber, I assume, who will not admit there is anything wrong with the National Securities Act and who argue against any amendment of it on the ground that such proposals are mere propaganda by selfish interests.

We will have exactly the same result, I fear, under the stock-exchange control bill now before us. If we would put the emphasis upon trying to maintain the structure without emasculating it in the effort to prevent some malpractice that has taken place in the past, I would have sympathy with it; but as it is I cannot, unless substantial amendments are made, support the measure. I made the mistake when the National Securities Act was before us under a protest that I offered at a time.

The twelfth and thirteenth sections of the bill before us should be amended in the form suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. Some modifications suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] have already been made, but many he suggested have been rejected. If the bill could be amended so we could be sure the stock exchange would still remain as an instrument for the sale or flotation of necessary securities, I would not hesitate to support the bill, but as it is written I cannot give my approval to it.

CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

Mr. LEWIS. There are upon the table the amendments of the House of Representatives to the Senate bill relating to the Chicago Exposition and the appropriation therefor which I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3235) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 9, after the word "buildings", to strike out down to and including "Progress", in line 12, and on the same page, line 21, to strike out "$405,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. LEWIS. The bill has been amended in the House of Representatives from the form in which it was passed by the Senate. I desire, sir, to move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House, being in the nature of a complete substitute, without asking for a conference and without seeking to have the measure returned to the House.

I wish the Senate to agree to the amendments of the House and adopt the bill, as amended, as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absences announced on the previous roll call, to which I desire to add a note of the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], who has been called away to the State of Illinois by official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I interrupt the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], having partly in charge the pending bill? I desire to call attention to the fact that in the State of Illinois, particularly in the city of Chicago, the school teachers have had a rather unfortunate experience in not being able to collect their pay. The city has issued tax warrants, and the teachers own these warrants in a very large sum. They anticipate further security. They desire to create a company or bring about an arrangement by which these certificates, though held by themselves, may be floated in such form as the local law will allow, perhaps to be sold in their own home, to be cashed where they may be. They are now concerned and report this morning the fear that they would have to get consent under the pending bill before they could place such warrants upon the market. I have advised to the contrary.

Without disturbing the bill by offering an amendment, I ask my able friend from Kentucky if he will give his judgment as to whether the bill would require the school teachers and their company first to appeal to the commission before they could float the warrants given them as compensation?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator I will say that it is inconceivable that any such warrants, or the stock of any company organized on that basis, would have to be listed on any stock exchange so as to bring them under the jurisdiction of the commission set up in this measure. There are provisions in the bill which exempt such local securities that are predominantly sold and bought intrastate from the operation of the bill; so it is hardly possible under any circumstances that an organization of that sort would have its certificates of stock, based upon an emergency created by the teaching situation in Chicago or elsewhere, brought within the jurisdiction of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. And the able Senator does not feel that it is necessary to present an amendment to the bill to that effect?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from Delaware for yielding to me.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky whether it is not true that before a broker could deal in such warrants at all, and sell them to anybody in Indiana, for example, the provisions of this bill would have to be complied with?

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill specifically exempts local stocks that are dealt in predominantly intrastate. That is, it might be possible to sell a few shares across a State line without their being brought under the jurisdiction of the bill; but if they are in the main dealt in, even by a broker, wholly within a State, the bill itself exempts them; and the commission could exempt them even without such a provision.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true because of the amendment adopted at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]?

Mr. BARKLEY. In part. There was another provision already in the bill at another place which did the same thing under slightly different circumstances; but the two provisions together, I think, amply take care of the situation.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the amendment now before the Senate relates to section 12; and the amendment proposed is very largely the language used in the House bill. There are two or three exceptions to which I desire to call attention.

Section (K) is stricken out, which refers to—

Any further financial statements which the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors.

I think that language is not in the House bill, and it is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment.

There are one or two other changes which are not of very great importance. The particular one which to me is of importance is to be found on page 28, paragraph (1) of subsection (b). That language by this amendment is proposed to be stricken out. I referred to it yesterday in discussing the bill. It provides that a security may be registered on a national securities exchange upon application by the issuer by filing with such exchange and with the commission—

(1) An agreement by the issuer—

And then, in parentheses, there is language which does not mean anything:

(which shall not be construed as a waiver of any constitutional right or any right to contest the validity of any rule or regulation) to comply with the provisions of this act and any amendments thereto and with the rules and regulations made or to be made thereunder, and not to lend any funds (except upon exempted securities) at the money post of any exchange or to any member thereof, or to any broker or dealer who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph in regard to lending shall not apply to a member bank of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. President, I call attention particularly to section 8, which makes these various acts illegal. It provides that it shall be illegal—

Directly or indirectly—

(a) To borrow in the ordinary course of business as a broker or dealer on any security (other than an exempted security) registered on a national securities exchange except (1) from or through a member bank—

And so forth.

The important thing—and I should like to know why it is important—from the point of view of those who drafted the bill, is to compel a person to agree not to do these various things.

After provision is made that the person shall enter into an agreement, it is provided—

Which shall not be construed as a waiver of any constitutional right of any right to contest the validity of any rule or regulation.

I do not quite understand why they want to get the issuer of the security on record, in the form of an agreement, not to violate a particular law, because it must be admitted that if the law itself is valid, and if the rules and regulations made by the commission are valid, and the person entering into the agreement has brought himself within the law by offering his securities for sale, then certainly, it seems to me, the point of compelling him to sign a paper that he will abide by the laws and rules made by the commission must have back of it something which those of us who have studied the bill do not quite understand.

I am not certain whether or not that is intended to apply particularly to over-the-counter markets. It will be observed that it is not every corporation that is to be affected by the bill, except that some broker or dealer may want to sell the securities of the corporation. I can conceive of a situation where a corporation would want nothing to do with the sale of its securities at all, would not be interested in whether they were sold or were not sold. The corporation may have received the money for the securities in the first place, they may be in the hands of the public, may not be on the stock exchange, and may never have been on the stock exchange. But some local dealer may have been dealing in those stocks, and he would like to continue to deal in them. He cannot do so legally unless the corporation complies with the law.

I do not quite understand whether this provision is intended to affect that sort of case, or just what its purpose is, and, not knowing why it is included, I have proposed my amendment, with the idea of having the language stricken out, pointing out at the same time that the provision can be of no legitimate service, so far as I can see, to the interpretation or the administration of the law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course, this amendment would change the effect of the bill very materially if it should be agreed to, and we are opposed to it.

The Senator wants to know what was in the minds of those who prepared this provision. Let me call his attention to this situation. Under the National Banking Act of 1933, the Federal Reserve Board has the power to interfere with the extension of credit by the Federal Reserve banks for brokers' loans for speculation on stock exchanges. That reaches the banks, and is very important.

It will be remembered that at one time during the period from 1928 to 1929 there were $8,000,000,000 loaned by the banks to brokers in New York. The testimony before our committee showed that, in addition to that, the Standard Oil Co. was lending $69,000,000 a day, that the Electric Bond & Share Co. was lending $100,000,000 a day, that the Cities Service Co. was lending ninety-odd-million dollars, all that money coming from corporations over which the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks had no control, all that money coming out of commerce, industry, and agriculture and going into speculation on Wall Street by reason of high rates of interest being paid.

There must be some way whereby that sort of thing can be prevented from occurring again. It should not be permitted to occur, and this provision is aimed at that sort of situation, to furnish some sort of check on corporations which are taking money away from commerce, agriculture, and industry, and lending it out for speculation on Wall Street because they get a high rate of interest. There ought to be some sort of regulation, and that is the purpose of this provision.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Florida whether that is not covered by section 8 of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think not. It should be at this place in the bill, too.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to call attention merely to the fact that the Senator's amendment would also strike from the bill subsection (K), upon which the Senate voted 2 days ago, and, by a vote of 3 to 1, retained in the bill.

It would also strike from the bill the provision as to the powers vested in the commission to secure information from security holders owning 10 percent or more of the stock of a corporation.

The section spoken of by the Senator from Delaware, making reference to an agreement, has a very definite purpose. It is, as the Senator from Florida has said, to prevent the lending of money by corporations at the money post of an exchange.

The House struck from the bill, passed by it, subsection 1, to which the Senator objects. The Senate, I hope, will insist on this provision. The matter will then be in conference. I believe the provision ought to be retained in the bill. Certainly the amendment of the Senator would strike from the bill several sections which, in the opinion of the committee that drafted the bill, are important.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, certainly the stock exchange could not object to this provision, because, facing the fact that the Banking Act of 1933 was to contain a similar provision—and it has in it a similar provision—the stock exchange itself adopted a regulation prohibiting the lending of money by corporations at the money posts.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from South Carolina whether he can explain why there is a provision in the bill compelling the issuer of the security to enter into an agreement, instead of merely making it unlawful to do certain things.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the language as to the agreement was in the original draft of the bill. After the word "act", in line 14, there were words substantially as follows, "and, so far as possible, to require those in their employ to comply with the provisions of the act." Those words were eliminated from the bill by the subcommittee having it in charge. The language as to an agreement remains.

Of course, insofar as the law is concerned, and insofar as the rules or regulations are concerned, it is not material, because it does not matter whether the corporation agrees to obey the law or not; if the bill shall become law, they will have to obey it. But as to the remainder of the section, there is the provision to which I have referred, and to which the Senator from Florida has referred, that in the agreement there would be, among other things, a stipulation not to lend money at the money post of an exchange.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield for a question on that point?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I am not sure that the Senator from South Carolina answered the question which was propounded by the Senator from Delaware. As I understood the question, the Senator from Delaware asked the purpose of exacting an agreement of the issuing corporation. I believe that at no time in the committee did I hear any particular statement, or any elaborate statement, at least, concerning the purpose of that provision.

I confess now that I do not know the underlying purpose which actuated the subcommittee in placing in section 12, paragraph (1), which requires the agreement of the issuing corporation.

Mr. BYRNES. The subcommittee removed or eliminated the language to which I have referred, which was in subsection (1).

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I understand what the subcommittee did, but what I am trying to ascertain is, What was the subcommittee's purpose in doing what it did?

Mr. BYRNES. In eliminating that and leaving the present language?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. The language also referred to the provisions beginning on line 16, with regard to not lending any funds except upon exempted securities at the money post of any exchange, and so forth, and was left in because there would then be specific power in the commission to regulate that matter, as to which there would be some doubt if it were not left in the bill.

Mr. STEIWER. On my own account I have no particular objection to the latter part of the subdivision to which the Senator from South Carolina has just referred. My objection has always gone to the earlier part of it.

Mr. President, I desire to take just a minute to tell the Senate again something of the nature of that objection.

In debating this bill at an earlier time I made the assertion that this agreement would impose upon the issuing corporations certain liabilities under which they would not otherwise be—liabilities both civil and criminal. I do not suppose that there is any chance that the Senate in its wisdom is going to eliminate this provision from the bill, but I think the RECORD ought to show why it is that at least one Senator is claiming that this section imposes new and unusual liabilities upon the issuing corporation.

The agreement probably is made for the benefit of investors. I am not as certain of that statement as I should like to be, but I think from the whole context and purpose of the bill, and by reason of the language contained even in this section, and possibly even in this subsection, that it is fairly apparent that this agreement is made for the benefit of investors.

I am told that in the State of New York, where most of these agreements will be made—and we know that in various States of the Union—a contract made for a consideration for the benefit of a third person is sustained at law this agreement is made between the issuing corporation and the commission and the exchange. In my opinion, it is made for the benefit of a third person, namely, the investor. Undoubtedly certain remedies inhere in this agreement in favor of that third person.

Permit me to call attention in this regard to section 27, which provides, among other things, as follows, in subsection (a):

> The rights and remedies provided by this act shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist at law or in equity.

To me it seems perfectly clear that we may conclude from the examination of these two sections and other sections of the bill that subsection (b) (1) of section 12 is intended to create liabilities upon the issuing corporation in favor of investors who in one way or another may come in contact with the securities of the issuer.

I should have no objection even to that if there were any way to define the full scope and extent of those liabilities. Because, however, the agreement is to abide by rules and regulations which exist at the time the registration statement is filed, and, in addition, to abide by rules and regulations which subsequently may be made by the commission, there is no way to estimate what the future exactions upon the issuing corporations may be; and if I am right in my theory that this language requires of the issuing corporation a new liability to third persons, and that liability is unknown and undefined, it will inevitably follow, as I contended here 2 or 3 days ago, that this provision in the bill will tend to retard recovery by restricting operations upon the exchanges and by inducing corporations not to make any attempt to issue their securities.

To the argument I made the other day I have as yet heard no answer which in my judgment is adequate. I have heard no one contend that he has examined this language carefully and that this agreement is not made for the benefit of third persons. I have heard no one deny that this amendment creates remote and unknown civil liabilities upon the issuing corporation.

The House has eliminated the language. The Senate might well eliminate it. I think it would not weaken the bill in any substantial respect if that were done.

The argument was made here the other day by certain Senators, including the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], that in any and every event the issuing corporation which seeks to register its securities would be compelled to abide by and comply with the rules and regulations. Of course, that is true. So far as criminal liabilities are concerned, I do not believe there is any difference whether we permit this section to remain or take it out; but so far as civil liabilities are concerned, there are such grave possibilities that it seems to me we should be well justified in eliminating the language.

I shall not detain the Senate, because I know how futile it is to reargue a question of this kind. I merely wanted the RECORD to show that one Senator endeavored to call to the attention of the Senate of the United States the disastrous consequence which is going to come from retaining that particular paragraph in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Hayden	Overton

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. I again ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded? Evidently there is not a sufficient number.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for a recount on the demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A sufficient number have now seconded the demand, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], who is detained by illness. I therefore refrain from voting, as I do not know how he would vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I again announce the absence of Senators mentioned by me on a previous roll call, for the reasons then assigned, and add that my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], if present, would vote "nay."

I desire also to announce the general pair of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and the general pair of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING].

I desire further to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained from the Senate by official business, and that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. If the Senator from New Jersey were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "yea", and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay." I desire further to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. I am not advised as to how the Senator from Indiana would vote if present.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—23

CLAIMS OF TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OR BANDS OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS—VETO MESSAGE (S.DOC. NO. 179)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 326, referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement.

The principal claims of these Indians were settled by a treaty ratified by the Indians and by the act of Congress of April 21, 1904, whereby $1,000,000 was appropriated for the benefit of the Indians, and under which they executed a release of all claims whatsoever held by them against the United States.

If such releases and settlements are ignored or deprived of their legal effect in this instance, an undesirable precedent would be created for applications for similar relief for other Indian tribes. This would require the Court of Claims and Supreme Court to pass upon questions of governmental policy in dealing with the Indians, and upon the propriety or impropriety of the Government's action in specific cases. These are questions of a political nature which, heretofore, Congress has consistently refused to remit to the courts for review. Further, it seems to me very questionable whether the courts can be asked or required to adjudicate the rights of the Indians and the United States and, at the same time, to exercise the powers of an arbitrator.

Section 4 of the bill opens the doors of the court to the institution of suits for individual losses or claims, something which the Congress has heretofore sedulously refused to do. This section also empowers the court to entertain questions with reference to agreements and treaties which the courts have uniformly held are strictly political and not within the province of a court. Recognition of Indian title is a purely political matter and can be accorded solely by the sovereign. Section 4 of this act might fasten upon the United States liability for the payment of the value of land which they had never recognized as belonging to these particular Indians solely because some official of the United States, minor or otherwise, had "recognized" title and occupancy by long possession as being in these particular Indians.

For the foregoing reasons, I consider the bill contrary to the best interests of the United States.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 10, 1934.

Mr. FRAZIER. I move that the message of the President of the United States, with the accompanying bill, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

THE AIR MAIL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair may lay before the Senate at this time the amendments of the House to the so-called "air mail bill."

There being no objection, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this act may be cited as the "Air Mail Act of 1934."

SEC. 2. (a) Effective July 1, 1934, the rate of postage on air mail shall be 5 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof.

(b) When used in this act—

(1) The term "air mail" means mail of any class prepaid at the rate of postage prescribed in subsection (a) of this section.

(2) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

(3) The term "pilot" includes copilot.

SEC. 3. (a) The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for periods of not exceeding 1 year, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the term of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile. The base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 35 cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, plus one tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month.

(b) In case of a determination by the Postmaster General that any bidder is not responsible or is otherwise disqualified under the terms of this act, such determination shall be subject to review in any manner authorized by law.

(c) The Postmaster General shall not award contracts for air-mail routes in excess of an aggregate of 29,000 miles, and shall not establish schedules for air-mail transportation on such routes in excess of an annual aggregate of 40,000,000 airplane-miles.

Authority is hereby conferred upon the Postmaster General to provide and pay for the carriage of mail by air in conformity with the terms of any contract therefor issued prior to the passage of this act, and to extend any such contract for an additional period not exceeding 9 months, at a rate of compensation not exceeding that provided for in the original contract: Provided, That the contractor shall consent in writing to the extension and shall likewise agree to comply with all provisions of this act during the extended period of the contract.

SEC. 4. The Postmaster General shall cause an advertisement of each air-mail route to be conspicuously posted at each post office that is a terminus of the route named in such advertisement, for at least 15 days, and a notice thereof shall be published at least once in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the cities that are the termini for the route, before the time of the opening of bids.

SEC. 5. Any person having a claim against the United States arising out of the annulment of an air-mail contract heretofore held by it, may prosecute such claim in the Court of Claims of the United States, if suit therefor is brought within 1 year after such annulment. No person shall be ineligible to bid and contract for carrying air mail under this act by reason of the provisions of section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (act of June 8, 1872; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 432), nor by reason of any restriction imposed in prior legislation in respect to air-mail contracts.

SEC. 6. All persons holding air-mail contracts shall keep their books, records, and accounts under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General, and he is hereby authorized to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts of such contractors and to require a full financial report under such regulations as he may prescribe.

SEC. 7. Before the establishment of any air-mail route the Postmaster General shall notify the Secretary of Commerce, who thereupon shall certify to the Postmaster General the character of equipment to be employed and maintained on such route. The Secretary of Commerce in certifying his specifications to the Postmaster General shall only determine the speed, load capacity, and safety features and safety devices of airplanes to be used on the route, which said specifications shall be included in the advertisement for bids.

SEC. 8. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to prescribe the maximum flying hours of pilots on air-mail lines and safe operation methods on such lines. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to prescribe all necessary regulations to carry out the provisions of this section and section 7 of this act.

SEC. 9. It shall be a condition upon the awarding and holding of any air-mail contract that the rate of compensation for all pilots, mechanics, and laborers employed by the holder of such contract shall be not less than the rate of compensation paid by air-mail-line operators during 1933, as modified by decisions of the National Labor Board. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of collective bargaining on the part of any such employees.

SEC. 10. The Federal Radio Commission shall give equal facilities in the allocation of radio frequencies in the aeronautical band to airplanes carrying mail and/or passengers over regular scheduled routes.

SEC. 11. No contract awarded under this act or any interest in any such contract shall be sold, assigned, or transferred by the person to whom such contract is awarded, to any other person, except with the approval of the Postmaster General.

SEC. 12. The Postmaster General may cause any contract awarded under this act to be canceled for disregard of or failure by the contractor to comply with the terms of its contract or with the provisions of this act or for any conspiracy or acts designed to defraud the United States with respect to any such contract. This provision is cumulative to other remedies now provided by law.

SEC. 13. Whoever shall enter into any combination, understanding, agreement, or arrangement to prevent the making of any bid for any contract under this act, to induce any other person not to bid for any such contract, or to deprive the United States Government in any way of the benefit of full and free competition in the awarding of any such contract, shall, upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 14. If any person shall willfully or knowingly violate any provision of this act, his contract, if one shall have been awarded to him, shall be forfeited, and such person shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 15. The Postmaster General may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 16. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with any provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict.

SEC. 17. The President is hereby authorized to appoint a commission composed of 5 members to be appointed by him, not more than 3 members to be appointed from any one political party, for the purpose of making an immediate study and survey, and to report to Congress not later than February 1, 1935, its recommendations of a broad policy covering all phases of aviation and the relation of the United States thereto. Members appointed who are not already in the service of the United States shall receive compensation of not exceeding the rate of compensation of a Senator or Representative.

SEC. 18. Such commission shall organize by electing one of its members as chairman, and it shall appoint a secretary whose salary shall not exceed $5,000 per annum. Said commission shall have the power to pay actual expenses of members of the commission in the performance of their duties, to employ counsel, experts, and clerks, to subpena witnesses, to require the production by witnesses of papers and documents pertaining to such matters as are within the jurisdiction of the commission, to administer oaths, and to take testimony, and for such purpose there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $75,000.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the Postmaster General to award 1-year contracts for carrying air mail, to establish a commission to report a national aviation policy, and for other purposes."

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the nature of the House amendments. We certainly are entitled to some explanation of what is proposed in the way of legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The text of the Senate bill was stricken out by the House and the text of the House bill substituted therefor. Quite a number of changes are involved, so, under the circumstances, there is nothing for us to do but to ask for a conference.

Mr. McNARY. What are the changes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may state to the Senator from Oregon that, as the Chair understands, the motion is that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and that conferees be appointed.

Mr. McNARY. That is true; and upon that question I desire to be recognized in order that I may propound to the Senator from Tennessee some inquiries.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to explain to the Senator what the changes are.

If my motion shall be agreed to, it will virtually put the entire bill in conference. One of the principal sections of the Senate bill is section 7, in which those ineligible for contracts are set forth, and prohibitions are made against affiliates, holding companies, subsidiaries, and manufacturing companies. That provision is not contained in the House bill. Also, the House bill omits the provision with reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The matter of ratemaking is not referred to the Commission.

Those are the two most important amendments. There is a difference in the rate to be charged as fixed by the House and as fixed by the Senate; and there are a number of other minor changes.

I think perhaps I have stated sufficient to show the Senator that it is necessary to have a conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference, and that conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. BLACK, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SCHALL, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send forward an amendment and ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 8, page 19, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the word "To" and insert "In contravention of such rules and regulations as the commission shall prescribe for the protection of investors, to."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I see no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 33, after line 8, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "issuer", on page 35, line 5, being section 13, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 13. (a) Every issuer of a security registered on a national securities exchange shall file the information, documents, and reports below specified with the exchange (and shall file with the commission such duplicate originals thereof as the commission may require), in accordance with such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors and to insure fair dealing in the security—

(1) Such information and documents as the commission may require to keep reasonably current the information and documents filed pursuant to section 11.

(2) Such annual reports, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the commission by independent public accountants, and such quarterly reports as the commission may prescribe.

(b) The commission may prescribe, in regard to reports made pursuant to this act, in accordance with accepted principles of accounting, the form or forms in which the required information shall be set forth, and the items or details to be shown in the balance sheets and profit-and-loss statements; but in the case of the reports of any person whose accounting is subject to the provisions of any law of the United States or any State, or any rule or regulation thereunder, the rules and regulations of the commission with respect to reports shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by such law or rule or regulation, except that this provision shall not be construed to prevent the commission from imposing such additional requirements with respect to such reports, within the scope of this section and section 11, as it may deem necessary for the protection of investors; provided that no additional requirements shall be imposed upon the carriers subject to the provisions of section 20A of the Interstate Commerce Act as amended.

(c) If in the judgment of the commission any report required under subsection (a) is inapplicable to any specified class or classes of issuers, the commission shall require in lieu thereof the submission of such reports of comparable character as it may deem applicable to such class or classes of issuers.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, this amendment is to section 13, and, as I think, is the exact language of the House bill; at any rate, the changes made are to be found on page 33 of the bill in the last three lines.

This question was discussed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] the other day in particular. The amendment affects the last paragraph on that page, which now reads:

(2) Such annual reports as the commission may prescribe, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the commission by independent public accountants; such quarterly reports as the commission may prescribe; and such other reports as the commission may deem essential in special circumstances.

The amendment proposes to strike from that provision the words "and such other reports as the commission may deem essential in special circumstances."

The next section is changed to read as follows:

(b) The commission may prescribe, in regard to reports made pursuant to this act—

Then these words are inserted:

In accordance with accepted principles of accounting.

So the sentence reads:

The commission may prescribe, in regard to reports made pursuant to this act, in accordange with accepted principles of accounting, the form or forms in which the required information shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in the balance sheet and the earning statement.

Under the amendment the following language is proposed to be stricken out:

And the methods to be followed in the preparation of reports, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation, where the commission deems it necessary or desirable, of separate and/or consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer.

By the amendment that language is proposed to be stricken out as being too much of a burden to be placed upon corporations which may desire to list their securities upon a stock exchange or in any other way as effected by the bill.

I do not propose to take the time of the Senate in further discussion of the matter. I covered it yesterday in my address to the Senate, and my only object in addressing the Senate but a moment is for the purpose of expedition.

Mr. President, I may say before the Senate passes upon the amendment that I have several other amendments upon which I expect to ask the Senate to pass. I have conferred with the chairman of the committee with respect to some of them. I have been advised by him and by other members of the committee that they have examined all the amendments and, with possibly one exception, the committee is not prepared to accept any of them. I think we have gone far enough with the bill and with the record votes on amendments to demonstrate to the Senate as well as to the country that it is impossible to have a majority of the Senate agree to any amendment contrary to the wishes of the chairman of the committee and those working with him. In view of that fact, I am not going to insist upon a record vote on the particular amendment now pending, and perhaps on none of the others, with one exception.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 3, line 24, after the word "firm", to insert "but does not include a bank."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the amendment would enable the bank to become a member of an exchange without subjecting itself to the provisions of the bill. Banks would be put in a special class of membership under the amendment. There are banks in the country now which are members of exchanges, and others would be formed for that purpose, and yet they would not be under any restriction or restraint at all under the provisions of the bill, because they would be excepted under the definition of members.

I think the idea is thoroughly wrong.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I am frank to say that I do not know much about this proposal. I have introduced it by request. I should like to make the explanation which was made to me with respect to it.

There are many banks which are members of stock exchanges, and as such are entitled to participate in the commissions charged on security transactions originated by them. This type of memberships exists in several different western stock exchanges. Unless the section is amended these banks will be deprived of a profitable source of revenue. The bill already recognizes that banks should be exempted from the definition of "broker" and "dealer", because the provisions of the bill applicable to brokers and dealers would impose an impossible burden on banks. The same would be true of those banks which would be considered members of stock exchanges under the sweeping definition contained in the subparagraph.

That is the only explanation I have with respect to it, and I am satisfied to have the Senate act upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 9, line 23, after the word "regulations", to strike out all down to and including the word "act", on page 10, line 4, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And to enter such orders as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in it by this act. Whenever the commission deems it necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors, the commission shall have power to determine that the violation of any rule or regulation made by it, the violation of which is made unlawful by the terms of this act, shall be subject to the penalties provided in section 30 of this act: Provided, however, That such rule or regulation shall be published in such manner as the commission shall deem appropriate to give notice to the persons affected thereby at least 20 days before the effective date thereof. Any rule or regulation, a violation of which is subject to the penalties provided in section 30 of this act, shall be deemed to be an order of the commission and any person aggrieved thereby may obtain a review thereof as provided in section 24 of this act.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the commission should have power not only to adopt rules and regulations, but also to enter orders making its rules and regulations effective.

The purpose of this amendment is to make it possible for the commission to adopt rules and regulations which would not always be subject to the heavy penalties imposed by the bill.

In view of the broad powers given to the commission to adopt rules and regulations affecting different types of transactions, a certain degree of flexibility ought to exist with regard to the penalties which attach to the violation of such rules and regulations.

Under section 30 of the bill, criminal penalties are imposed for violation of rules and regulations. It is conceivable that the commission might wish to adopt many rules and regulations of a minor character, the violation of which should not be made a criminal offense. The amendment would not in any way diminish the power of the commission, but would allow the commission to specify which of its rules and regulations required a criminal penalty to aid in their enforcement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 18, line 9, after the word "exchange", it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "needs" in line 15, and to insert:

In contravention of such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe: Provided, however, That this subsection shall not apply to loans made by or through a member bank of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to make an explanation of this amendment.

The purpose of the amendment is to make this subsection of the bill conform to the principle adopted by the committee of not prohibiting practices which are to be regulated by the Federal Reserve Board except when they are in contravention of rules and regulations adopted by the Board.

The practical advantages of this change are substantial. Unless it shall be made, all nonmember banks will be deprived of the right to make loans to members of exchanges, brokers, and dealers until the Federal Reserve Board shall have promulgated rules and regulations. The time available for the formulation of such rules and regulations before the act is to become effective is not very great; and it would, therefore, seem wiser to permit the customary practices to continue until the Reserve Board shall have adopted rules and regulations to govern them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, it is proposed to strike out lines 16 to 25, inclusive, in the following words:

(b) To permit in the ordinary course of business as a broker his aggregate indebtedness to all other persons, including customers' credit balances (but excluding indebtedness secured by exempted securities), to exceed such percentage of the net capital (exclusive of fixed assets and value of exchange membership) employed in the business, but not exceeding in any case 2,000 percent, as the commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, this subsection is apparently intended to insure the solvency of brokers by requiring them to maintain a minimum ratio between their capital and their aggregate indebtedness. In theory, such a formula may seem useful; but in practice it would not accomplish its purpose. The ratio between net capital and total indebtedness does not indicate the solvency of a brokerage house, because a large part, and sometimes the most important part, of a broker's assets or liabilities are open contracts which cannot be truly reflected on a balance sheet. The proper formula for the regulation of the minimum capital which should be maintained by brokers would be too long to be included in a statute. It belongs properly in the rules and regulations which the commission can require exchanges to adopt under section 19 of the bill.

Another persuasive reason for eliminating this provision is that it would require every person lending money to a broker to investigate the broker's books so as to make sure that the broker's capital met the minimum statutory requirements. Otherwise, a loan made to a broker whose capital was insufficient might be considered invalid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 19, line 2, before the word "customer", it is proposed to insert "without his written consent", and on page 19, line 4, to strike out "without his written consent."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, this subsection is intended to protect the customers by making it illegal for brokers to commingle customers' securities in connection with a hypothecation or pledge by a broker. It also is intended to prevent a broker pledging customers' securities for more than the amount due to him by his customers.

In the subdivision marked "(1)" it is recognized that these prohibitions should not apply if a customer consents in writing. By moving the phrase "without his written consent" from line 4 to line 2, the waiver of the prohibitions by a customer is made effective to all three of the subdivisions instead of being confined to the first subdivision, as at present. No reason is apparent why this consent provision should not apply to the second and third subdivisions as well as to the first.

Unless some such change is made the practical results may be absurd. For instance, a broker could not use his own securities as additional collateral in a loan in which any of his customers' securities were pledged. Banks frequently call for additional collateral which must be supplied within a few hours. It is, naturally, impossible for a broker to call upon his customers to furnish him with extra margin within any such brief period of time. Unless the broker can use his own securities to meet such a demand, the bank might sell out the loan, to the great injury of the broker's customers.

Unless this section is amended so as to eliminate its impractical features the liquidation of a substantial amount of brokers' loans may be become imperative upon the effective date of the act.

The apparent purpose of these provisions is to prevent a broker financing his own speculations through the use of his customers' securities. The prohibition against the hypothecation of customers' securities will not, however, accomplish this purpose, because a broker's speculations might be financed through the use of customers' credit balances or other assets. The proper method of accomplishing this legitimate purpose is by having the commission require each national securities exchange to adopt rules and regulations governing the conduct of customers' accounts. The commission has power to require the adoption of such rules and regulations under section 19 of the bill.

May I urge the chairman of the committee to let this amendment be adopted, so that at least it may go to conference, because it does seem to me that it might be of the greatest importance?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am unable to agree with the Senator. I think this is a dangerous amendment. I am opposed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 26, it is proposed to strike out lines 5 to 8, as follows:

It shall also be unlawful for a specialist acting as a broker to effect on the exchange any transaction except upon a market or limited-price order.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the Commission is given broad power to determine rules or regulations under which specialists may act as brokers. It seems unnecessary, therefore, to have a statutory prohibition preventing them from accepting orders unless they are market orders or limited orders.

The effect of the present provision would be to make the execution of discretionary orders and stop-loss orders by a specialist illegal. It is far from certain whether the elimination of stop-loss orders may not be harmful rather than helpful to the investing public. Certain types of discretionary orders should probably be forbidden, but even market orders require the exercise of a certain degree of discretion if the public is to be protected. In view of the complexity of the problem, a statutory prohibition is certainly inadvisable, and this whole subject matter ought to be left to rules and regulations to be adopted by the commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. I send to the desk another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, line 3, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "holders" on page 32, line 2, and to insert:

(d) If the exchange shall certify to the commission that the security has been approved for listing, the registration shall become effective upon the filing with the commission of such certification. The commission may, however, suspend dealing in such security or, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, enter an order revoking the registration thereof if it shall determine that such security is not suitable for registration, or that the issuer has failed to comply with the registration requirements of this act. Securities representing an interest in registered securities or growing out of registered securities may be listed by an exchange or admitted to dealing in advance of registration upon request in writing from the issuer accompanied by assurance that a listing application in form required by the exchange will be made within a reasonable time.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the effect of this amendment will be to eliminate the 30-day waiting period which is now provided by the provision on page 31, line 6. This delay will be a serious burden on the marketing of securities and will retard the flow of capital into industry. There seems no necessity for such a waiting period when the commission has full power to suspend or strike any security from dealing on an exchange. The suggested provision would allow the registration of unissued securities when they represent an interest in securities that have already been registered or grow out of registered securities. The present provision in regard to unissued securities is altogether too narrow and would prevent the holders of registered securities from having a market on stock exchanges for new securities which grow out of their existing holdings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an important amendment, which I propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 32, line 3, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "section" in line 10, and to insert:

(e) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, all securities listed on a national securities exchange at the time the registration of such exchange as a national securities exchange becomes effective shall be considered securities "registered on a national securities exchange" within the meaning of all the sections of this act, and all securities admitted to dealing on such national securities exchange prior to April 1, 1934, shall be considered securities "registered on a national securities exchange" within the meaning of all the sections of this act, other than sections 12 and 13. The commission may, however, require any national securities exchange to suspend dealing in any such security or securities or may, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, enter an order requiring any national securities exchange to remove the same from the list of securities listed or admitted to dealing thereon whenever it shall determine that such action is necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think this is the section which the chairman of the committee modified by an amendment earlier in the day, but his amendment did not cover as much as does the amendment I have just proposed.

This change would allow securities which were dealt in on stock exchanges on April 1, 1934, to remain on exchanges until the commission should require dealings in them to be suspended or the securities to be stricken from registration. Unless some such provision is made, many billion dollars' worth of securities will automatically cease to be listed on exchanges not later than July 1, 1935.

There are many issues of securities where the issuer has technically dissolved or ceased to exist. Such securities could not comply with the registration statement of the act, and would, therefore, be forced off stock exchanges to the great disadvantage of the persons holding such securities. Foreign securities would likewise be forced off stock exchanges, as it seems almost certain that few, if any, foreign governments or corporations will comply with the registration requirements of the act. There are several billion dollars' worth of securities of this kind which are customarily dealt in on American exchanges.

The number of security issues dealt in on American exchanges approximates 8,000 to 10,000. It would be physically impossible for the commission to receive and examine registration statements covering such a large number of security issues in less than the 14 months remaining before July 1, 1935, which is the date fixed by the act for the elimination from stock exchanges of all securities which have not filed a registration statement. In his testimony before the House committee, Commissioner Landis stated, that the securities division of the Federal Trade Commission had examined less than 1,000 registration statements in the 9 months which have elapsed since the Securities Act of 1933 became effective. He likewise testified that the securities division, although it had a large staff, was tremendously overworked. It seems certain, therefore, that the commission could not in approximately a year's time examine 8,000 to 10,000 registration statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 33, after line 7, it is proposed to add a new subsection, as follows:

(g) Any national securities exchange may, and upon order of the commission shall, suspend dealing in or, upon appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, remove from the list of securities dealt in thereon any registered security or any security admitted to dealing thereon.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment, in adding this new section, is to make clear that stock exchanges have the right to suspend dealings in securities or strike them from the list without awaiting action by the commission. The delay which might be involved if the commission had to approve every suspension or striking from the list before it became effective might cause great damage to investors and would deprive stock exchanges of a necessary emergency power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, line 3, after the word "requested", it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "matters", on page 44, line 3, and to insert the words "by order to alter or supplement the rules of such exchange insofar as it may be necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors or to insure fair dealings in securities traded in upon such exchange."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the purposes of the bill have consistently been stated to be the prevention of the use of excessive credit for speculation and the prevention of unfair practices on stock exchanges. Throughout the bill powers have been given to the commission to take such action as is necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors or to insure fair dealings. There can be no objection to giving the commission power to require exchanges to alter and amend their rules so as to carry out these purposes. The bill as drawn, however, goes much further, and in this section proposes to allow the commission to regulate the internal operations of exchanges in many matters which do not bear, either directly or even remotely, upon the control of credit or unfair practices in the purchase and sale of securities. For instance, "hours of trading"—page 43, line 16—"the time and method of making settlements, payments, and deliveries, and of closing accounts"—page 43, lines 18–19—the "fixing of reasonable rates of commission, interest, and other charges"—page 43, line 25—the "minimum units of trading"—page 44, line 1—"and similar matters"—page 44, line 3—involve details of operation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a few moments ago I tried to have a change made on lines 9 and 10 of page 43. I think that is where the Senator's amendment applies.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. It would seem to me also that in line 19, where reference is made to closing accounts, we have gone too far. It certainly should be the prerogative of every person conducting a brokerage business to close out accounts of customers when he feels that such accounts will endanger his own credit. It is unjust to place this right elsewhere than in the person conducting the business, as his own credit may be put in jeopardy if he is restricted as to closing out credits extended by him to others. Just as the banks are necessarily left free to close out credits extended to the brokers, so the brokers should be left free to close out credits extended by them to their customers. The two relations are mutually dependent upon each other.

Then when it comes, as the Senator has already said, to the fixing of reasonable rates of commission, interest, and other charges, I think we should bear in mind that the brokerage business is not a public utility. It is not desired to increase the facilities for public speculation through the reduction of rates. It is rather the purpose of the bill to reduce speculation. The commission should not, however, be empowered, through the right to impose heavier brokerage charges and commissions, to restrict speculation to a greater extent than contemplated by the bill.

I find myself, therefore, in sympathy with what the Senator from Delaware is proposing.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I may say to the distinguished Senator from New York that the explanation of the objection made to our proposal shows very clearly that there is a determination here to turn over the stock exchange and its whole operation to a commission of the Federal Government. That being the purpose, the objections which the Senator from New York has made and which I have made, of course, cannot be very seriously considered by the proponents of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 46, line 1, after the word "under", it is proposed to strike out "or in securing information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this act relates."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, of course this is entirely a new kind of legislation before the Congress. It undertakes to give to a commission the right to do that which the Committee on Banking and Currency has been doing for a year and a half. It is a transfer of the power from the Congress to what will be a newly created commission. It is a new idea and a new theory of government. However, I have talked myself hoarse on this subject, and I do not care to make a speech about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 49, line 3, after the word "commission", it is proposed to strike out "in a proceeding under this act to which such person is a party."

Mr. HASTINGS. A similar amendment was adopted by the House of Representatives. The purpose of the change was to allow persons who were aggrieved, but who may not have technically been parties in the proceeding in which the order was entered, the right of a court review.

I am wondering whether the chairman of the committee has carefully considered the amendment and whether there is any objection to it. It is on page 49, lines 3 and 4. I propose to strike out from lines 3 and 4 the words "in a proceeding under this act to which such person is a party." That would make the language read:

Any person aggrieved by an order issued by the commission may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to add to what the Senator has said that a member of the exchange might be seriously aggrieved by an order of the commission directed to the exchange, but such member would have no right of appeal from such order unless the proposed amendment should be agreed to. The exchange itself might not be aggrieved, and, therefore, no one would have any appeal from the order. The purpose of the Senator is to make it possible for the members to have a right of appeal.

Mr. HASTINGS. As I stated, the purpose of the amendment is to allow persons who are aggrieved, but who may not have been technically parties to the proceedings to have a right of review. Certainly it seems to me they ought to have the right to a court review.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the committee considered that suggestion, spending a good deal of time on it. On its face the amendment appears to be somewhat fair, but we reached the conclusion that it would give a right of review to many not entitled to it. Parties concerned with an order might be satisfied with it, but someone outside, who had some other interest which he wanted to serve, might undertake to come in and appeal from the order. The amendment is an invitation to people outside, who may have some selfish, personal interest to serve, and who are not at all parties to the suit, to come in and appeal from the order. I think it would be very unwise to adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, line 5, after the word "seller" it is proposed to insert "for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale."

Mr. HASTINGS. As at present drawn, any statement as to the effect of the action or failure to act of the commission, even if made by a person who is in no way connected with the security business, might be unlawful and subject to criminal penalties. The amendment is intended to restrict the criminal penalties to persons making the unlawful representations for the purpose of inducing securities transactions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on page 56 which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, beginning with line 3, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "imposed", in line 21, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 30. Any person who willfully violates any provision of this act the violation of which is made unlawful under the terms of this act, or any person who willfully violates any rule or regulation made thereunder, the violation of which pursuant to section 4(b) of this act shall be subject to the penalties provided in this section, or any person who willfully violates any order entered pursuant to this act in a proceeding to which he was a party, or any person who willfully and knowingly, personally or through another, makes any statement in any application, report, or document required to be filed with the commission under this act, or any rule or regulation thereunder, or in any communication, oral or otherwise, subject to the provisions of section 9 (a) (4), which statement was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading in any material respect, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, except that if such person is an exchange, a fine not exceeding $500,000 may be imposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment, because it would only be applicable in case another amendment heretofore offered by me had been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I have on the desk an amendment to come in on page 54, line 17, in which I write in the words "contract or", so as to read:

Nothing in this act shall be construed (1) to affect the validity of any contract or loan.

There are several other places in which the same words have been written in. I have talked with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] with respect to that amendment; he agrees that there ought to be some modification of the provision, and he is now having prepared an amendment which will make the necessary changes. I am quite certain that when that shall be done it will be agreeable to me, and I will not offer this particular amendment.

I have another amendment which I have not had printed, and which I have not submitted to the chairman of the committee, but I will submit it to him and see if I can get him to consent to it.

I have one further amendment which I desire to offer at this time to come in on page 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, it is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 5, down to and including the word "subsection" on page 11, line 4, and to insert the following:

(c) The commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such attorneys, examiners, and other experts and employees as may be necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as may be from time to time appropriated for by Congress.

With the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each commissioner, the attorneys, and such special experts and examiners as the commission may from time to time find necessary for the conduct of its work, all employees of the commission shall be part of the classified civil service, and shall enter the service under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the commission and by the Civil Service Commission.

All of the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation, incurred by the commissioners or by employees under their orders in making any investigation or upon official business in other places than in the city of Washington shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the commission. Until otherwise provided by law, the commission may rent suitable offices for its use. The General Accounting Office shall receive and examine all accounts of expenditures of the commission.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the proposed amendment is drawn from the Federal Trade Commission Act, and provides that the expenses of the commission shall be appropriated for by Congress, and that the employees of the commission, except those specially exempted, shall be subject to the Civil Service Commission law. This is the usual provision adopted in regard to other administrative commissions.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I observe that the bill permits the commission to fix the compensation of officers and attorneys and examiners. Does the Senator's amendment also permit that to be done?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; not at all.

Mr. BORAH. From the reading of the amendment at the desk, I think it has the same vice as is contained in the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. The purpose of this amendment is to make it a Federal function and to provide that the persons employed by the commission shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury like other Government employees. I am not quite certain, without a thorough examination, whether or not the amendment covers the particular point the Senator from Idaho has in mind.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] had the floor. To whom does the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. BORAH. I was asking the Senator from Delaware a question and had not as yet received an answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The question was this: The original bill provides that the commission shall fix the compensation of all officers, attorneys, examiners, and so forth. Does the Senator's amendment leave that as it is in the bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, in reply I will say that section 4 (a) is left as it is, and section 4 (b) is left as it is, section 4 (a) being the one that provides for the selection of the commission and fixes the salaries of the commissioners. It is not until we get to section (c) that there is any particular change made and that change is drafted largely from the Federal Commission Act.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was seeking to find out whether we are going to leave in the bill the power in the commission to fix compensation, which I think, is a very unsatisfactory way to fix compensation. It is an unwise provision.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the effort which I am making by this amendment is to provide that the employees of the commission, in carrying out this new function, shall be selected in a certain way, just as the Federal Trade Commission select their employees. The item of salaries would be a national expense just as in the case of other commissions. As the bill stands today, it is a little uncertain just what happens, but I think a reasonable interpretation of the language is that the commissioners levy an assessment upon the stock exchanges for the purpose of collecting sufficient money to pay their own salaries. Someone has asked me that question, and it is the only interpretation that I can put upon the language of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, 2 or 3 days ago I gave notice of amendments which I intended to propose to the bill under consideration. Perhaps the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] has covered most of my intended amendments among those which he has offered and which have been rejected. It is perfectly evident to everyone who has observed the proceedings that no amendment can be adopted unless it has the approval of the committee or the members of the committee now in charge of the bill on the floor. I make no complaint about that.

The amendments which I meant to propose were not unfriendly amendments. I am in most hearty sympathy with the purposes of the bill. In going over the bill, which I have done rather carefully, it seemed to me that it was vague in some respects, and in others perhaps it contained some provision which unintentionally would work a hardship on this or that group of people. One of the amendments which I meant to propose was for the purpose solely of improving the provisions of the bill so that it would be more workable and would prevent injury to some of those who thought they might be injured.

I see no occasion to call up the amendments. It is understood, I believe, that the bill will have to go to conference. When it goes to conference the suggestions which I intend to make about the amendments can better and more properly be made to the conferees. I would prefer that when the conference committee comes to consider it, my amendments be considered as amendments which were not rejected by the Senate when the bill was under consideration. For that reason I am not going to propose the amendments, but I shall make some suggestions to the members of the conference committee in the hope that I may be able to convince them, thinking perhaps I can convince them more easily than I can convince my colleague the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], of the propriety of adopting some of the suggestions.

There are two suggestions I desired to propose in the form of an amendment which I did not offer an amendment to cover. One of them relates to a provision on page 40, which was in a way covered by one of the amendments offered by the Senator from Delaware. There is a provision, beginning on page 40 and ending on page 41, relating to information to be contained in reports, which reads as follows:

As used in this subsection, the term "statement" shall be construed to include any omission to state a material fact which is required to be stated in any such application, report, or document, or which is necessary to make the statement not misleading.

There is a 5-year statute of limitations which applies to bringing suits because of misleading statements. A matter may have been omitted when the statement was prepared upon the idea that it was not material, and indeed it may not have been material at that time. But as time passes someone reaches the conclusion he has lost money in gambling on the stock market, because generally that is what it is, and he will go back to find out whether there was anything omitted in the statement.

It is very much like the situation when a witness is placed on the witness stand and is sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; but we have never yet heard of a witness being prosecuted because he did not testify to something on the witness stand. We are extending that rule by the requirement in this bill that when anyone who comes under the provisions of the bill is required to make a statement he may be punished, not only for what he says but he may be punished for what he omits to say.

I am making reference to that point at this time solely for the consideration of the conference committee, as it is entirely impractical to explain in detail to the Senate just what effect these particular amendments would have. That is the reason why we cannot get amendments adopted, however deserving they may be and however desirable it may be that they should be adopted, because we cannot explain to the Senate as easily as we can explain to a committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. How will the conference committee be able to consider this matter if it is not before them as an amendment?

Mr. LOGAN. In the House bill there is nothing on the subject. If the Senate has included this provision, as I understand, the conferees can consider it. I do not know much about those things, but I am told that is so.

Another suggestion I would make relates to a provision in the bill which, I think, ought to be eliminated by the conference committee in its report. I understand the House, perhaps, has no such provision in its bill. I will read just a line. It is the provision dealing with transactions on the stock exchange. A man purchases stock. The seller must make a statement to him, in writing, I believe, of his interest, or whether he has any interest in the sale. Whatever it may be, it is a statement which the seller makes. This is the language, to be found on page 27:

If disclosure is not made as prescribed by the commission, the customer may, within 10 days after the completion of the transaction, disaffirm such transaction.

It occurs to me that if a sale were made by a broker in New York to a man who resides in New York 10 days is a long time for him to consider whether he will go back and disaffirm his trade because of some technical failure to comply with the law. The stock may be selling at 200 when he buys it and 10 days thereafter it may be selling at 50, and he would have every inducement to return to the seller with the complaint that something was omitted in the statement at the time of the sale. Ten days, it seems to me, is entirely too long to give a man to think over whether he is going to ask for a rescission of the transaction.

We might say a man residing in California buys stock of a broker doing business in New York. He certainly would need a longer time than the man residing in the city of New York. The time ought to be as short as it is possible for it to be consistent with the purposes of the measure. It seems to me that the 10-day provision should be eliminated by all means, and that the commission, as it has the power to make rules and regulations, should prescribe certain rules and conditions upon which the buyer may return to the seller and ask for a rescission of a contract on the ground that the seller did not comply with the law at the time he made the sale.

I do not have any desire to take any more of the time of the Senate. I merely wanted to put in the RECORD the reason why I am not asking for a vote on each separate amendment, which I had given notice I would propose. In fact, I think my amendments have already been voted on in voting on some of the amendments offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. I think he covered the subject pretty thoroughly.

Mr. COPELAND. If I understand the motion of the Senator from Delaware, it relates to page 10, subsection (d), regarding the expenses of the commission. Is that correct?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. In all frankness, Mr. President, it seems to me that this language written in the bill gives the most remarkable latitude that has ever been given to a public body. It is like putting a fox in a chicken house. The commission can go on a joy ride every day. It can spend all the money it wishes to spend. It can have any sort of equipment it desires, as many employees as it may regard necessary for the conduct of the business and for its pleasure, and can assess against the exchange and its members any amount of money it wishes.

I think the provision of the bill is perfectly absurd. I have prepared an amendment to it. I do not know whether the amendment should be offered as a substitute for that offered by the Senator from Delaware or otherwise. At any rate, I send it to the desk, and after it is read we may decide how it should be handled, whether as a substitute for the amendment now before us, or whether it should be put over until the other amendment has been given consideration.

I ask to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the nature of a substitute for the amendment of Mr. HASTINGS, it is proposed, on page 10, beginning with line 11, to strike out through line 4, on page 11, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(d) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, (1) such sums as may be necessary to enable the commission to complete its organization and to carry on its work during the first year after its establishment, and (2) such sums annually thereafter as may be necessary to enable the commission to carry on its functions under this title.

(e) Every national securities exchange shall pay to the commission on or before March 15 of each calendar year a registration fee for the privilege of doing business as a national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year or any part thereof. Such fee shall be in an amount equal to one five-hundredth of 1 percent of the aggregate dollar amount of the sales of securities transacted on such national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year. The commission shall pay into the Treasury the amount of all fees paid to it under this subsection on or before April 1 of each calendar year, and the same shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment provides an orderly manner of dealing with the expenses of the commission. It will then provide that a budget must be set up, that the Congress may know what are to be the expenses of the commission, may have some voice in what shall be done in the operation of the commission, and how far it shall go in the expenditure of money. Then there will be set up at the same time a provision that there shall be an assessment.

I am not tied to the amount of the assessment. I have suggested one five-hundredth of 1 percent of the aggregate dollar amount of sales, because that happens to be the amount specified in the House bill. But certainly that is a sufficient sum to make it certain that the Government will be reimbursed for the expenditures necessary for the operation of the commission, and it makes an orderly, decent, businesslike arrangement of the operation and administration of the commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the bill as drawn by the Senate committee, the amount of the assessment is to be left entirely to the commission. Does not the Senator think that for the Congress to fix any assessment will lead to the possibility of raising entirely too large an amount? All that either the House or the Senate, or both combined, would want is sufficient money to pay the expenses of the commission. If we undertake to say what the assessment shall be, we may assess an amount entirely too high; and that raises the question, What is to become of the surplus if more is raised in this fund than is needed?

It seems to me that any commission would fix only such an assessment as would raise the amount of money required to pay the expenses of operation, and that they would be in a position from time to time to know what those expenses are much better than we now are able to know.

I have no idea how much will be required for this purpose, and I do not think anybody else has. I have no idea, and I doubt if anybody else has, whether the assessment provided in the amendment of the Senate—which, I understand, is the same as that provided in the House bill—is enough or too much. If it is not enough, of course we shall have to amend the law later. If it is too much, somebody will be entitled to a refund of the surplus.

It seems to me much better to leave the matter to the commission, which will be governed by the needs of the service; and we shall be here at any time to put a curb upon any extravagant expense the commission may incur, even though it is not to be paid out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say to the able Senator from Kentucky that after the Budget has been made by the Congress, and after a determination has been made of the expense likely to be properly incurred, I have no objection to the commission being given power to fix the assessment; but under the language of the bill as it comes to us there is no limitation whatever either upon the activities of the commission or upon the way in which the money is to be spent. It may be spent for strawberry festivals and trips to Florida. It may be spent for anything. There is absolutely no restriction upon the commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the commission shall be given the power to levy an assessment to meet its own expenses, it certainly will not be as prone to levy a sufficient assessment to enable it to have strawberry festivals, or to take a trip to Florida, as if it should find itself with a surplus on hand that the commission itself had nothing to do with raising. I think, anyway, that the illustration is a little far-fetched.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no! Let me say to the Senator that under the amendment I propose the fees are to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and if we find then that we have levied too large an assessment or too small an assessment, the situation can be corrected in the following year.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have the same provision with respect to the Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve System. The Board levies an assessment sufficient to meet the expenses. Congress did not attempt in advance to fix the expenses. Nobody knows how much will be required.

Mr. COPELAND. Is there no provision about the Budget of the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. GLASS. No, Mr. President. What has the Budget to do with the Federal Reserve System? The Government does not expend $1 on the Federal Reserve System, and never has.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the majority of the Senate care to place in the hands of the commission unlimited power to spend money and unlimited power to make assessments against the exchanges, if that is the wish of Congress, all right; but I say it is unbusinesslike, it is not an orderly fashion of doing business, nor is it a proper course to turn loose upon the exchanges of the country a commission to spend all the money that the commissiion may care to spend.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I know nothing about how much money this assessment would raise; but I have been told by men who claim to be familiar with the stock exchange and its transactions that the assessment carried in the House bill and in the amendment offered by the Senator from New York will raise funds that will amount to four or five times as much as will be needed to carry on the expenses of the commission.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. Then the Senator can propose that the assessment be one one-thousandth of 1 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know enough about it to offer an amendment. Nobody knows.

Mr. COPELAND. I am willing to have the amount of the assessment left to the commission——

Mr. BARKLEY. That is what the Senate bill does.

Mr. COPELAND. In a sum sufficient to pay the budgetary expenses set down by the Congress.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, what has the Federal Budget to do with this matter? The Federal Budget is supposed to budget the receipts and expenditures of the Federal Government. The Government is not involved in any expense whatsoever in this connection. It is just exactly like the Federal Reserve banking system.

All the expenditures of the Federal Reserve banking system are borne by the member banks, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board. The Budget has not anything in the world to do with it.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the Director of the Budget makes no estimate to Congress for any expense connected with the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GLASS. Not at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no desire at all to enter into a discussion of this question with my distinguished colleague from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] or the very distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; but I should like to serve a warning on them, the members of the committee, and the entire Senate, that we had better be very careful in delegating not only the taxing power, but the power to create the necessity for taxes, and, going still beyond that, in allowing a commission to make its own laws which may require the expenditure of the tax money.

It has always been a well-established law that the power to tax cannot be delegated. That power is in the legislative branch of the Government, and it cannot be delegated. There has been one further step, and that is that it is not a delegation of the power to tax if the exact rules and regulations are prescribed that must be followed by some commission or some individual in arriving at a conclusion as to how much the tax shall be. The courts have said that that may be done; but here there is a shifting base, and a commission is provided for with power to prescribe regulations that cost money to carry out, and the commission is given power to say how much money it will collect and spend.

I do not believe that any commission at all will abuse the privilege. I am not afraid of any commission that may be appointed. What I am afraid of is that after we enact this law—a necessary and an important law—some great stock exchange will say, "We are not going to pay a cent toward the support of this commission", and the matter will be taken into court, and the court will say, "Your method of maintaining the commission is illegal", and the whole thing will fall to the ground.

That is what I should like to have considered, if possible, by this body, and also by others who are interested in the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield further——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York further yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. GLASS. We have been doing that very thing for 67 years in the administration of the National Bank Act. Ever since the establishment of national banks in this country the Comptroller of the Currency has been authorized to collect from the banks the expenses incident to their examination. It would be literally impossible to estimate what those expenses would be as to banks. The Comptroller of the Currency at any time might be called upon to put a hundred examiners in some great bank that was engaged in illicit or irregular practices, or was threatened with insolvency, and nobody could foresee anything of that kind. But every bank that is examined is assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency to pay the costs of the examination. So, as I nave already indicated, in the Federal Reserve System. The general impression is that the Federal Reserve System is owned by the Government of the United States. The Government has never put up a 10-cent piece toward the expenses of the Federal Reserve System. They do not even pay a janitor's wage, but, from the janitor up to the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, assessments are made against the member banks, and there has never been a protest.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Not yet, Mr. President. There is not a man in the Senate who is more highly respected than is the Senator from Virginia. He speaks ex cathedra. We are glad to listen to him and usually to accept his views. But to me it is an amazing thing that one so conservative as is the Senator from Virginia should be willing to give unlimited power of raising money for maintenance and expense of operation, and of collection of fees, to a body like the one proposed.

The bill has been passed at the other end of the Capitol proposing to put these powers in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission. Does anybody here believe if we were proposing to give these powers to the Federal Trade Commission, and proposing to give that Commission the authority to levy an assessment sufficient to pay all the expenses to be incurred in the administration of this proposed law, that it would meet with favor? I am sure no Senator would rise to say that we would approve such a thing.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Did the Senator vote for the N.R.A.?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York on the amendment has expired.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well, Mr. President; I will leave the question with the Senate.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New York a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will ask recognition in order that the Senator from Delaware may propound a question to the Senator from New York in my time.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want particularly the attention of the Senator from Virginia, who does not see any difference between the assessment provided under the pending measure and the tax imposed upon the Federal Reserve banks. My attention has been called to the fact that the Federal Reserve is an agency of the Government, exercising a monopoly in regard to the issuance of currency, and the profits derived from this monopoly inure to the Government itself.

I got the distinct impression that under the Federal Reserve Act no bank was compelled to join, that it was a voluntary thing. But there is nothing voluntary about this measure. This is a measure providing control over all stock exchanges. They cannot operate except with the consent of the commission proposed to be set up. There is provided clearly a tax to be imposed upon them by a commission, and it is clearly a delegation of the authority of Congress to that commission. I am surprised to hear anybody say that we have done anything like this before or anything that is even comparable to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I will say that it was voluntary as to whether any State bank should join the Federal Reserve System. It was not voluntary so far as national banks were concerned so long as they held their charters as national banks. They might surrender their charters as national banks and become State banks, and in that eventuality they had the right to decide whether they would come into the Federal Reserve System or not, but so long as they remained national banks they were required to join the Federal Reserve System.

I do not care to discuss that phase of the subject. So far as I am concerned, I will say frankly that I have never been enthusiastic about charging the expenses of operating any branches of the Government against those to be regulated. I have always thought, and I still think, that it is a bad principle of government to regulate anybody who ought to be regulated in the public interest and then charge against the regulated the expenses of the regulation. I do not now enthuse over that proposition, either as to the Federal Reserve System, or as to this particular bill, or any branch of the American Government. I think that any law which is enacted setting up machinery for regulation by Congress in the interest of the American people ought to be administered out of the Treasury of the United States, and that we should allow those who are regulated to pay taxes, as everybody else pays taxes, into the Treasury. But we have embarked upon that principle, and today from the Committee on Interstate Commerce there was reported a pension measure, applicable to railroad employees of the United States, under which the expense not only of the pension but of the administration of the act, if the bill should be enacted, and the payment of all the expenses of the board and the commission and the employees would be assessed upon the railroads.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. In reference to what the Senator from Kentucky is saying, about the lack of wisdom of attempting to regulate any institution in the public interest at the expense of the person to be regulated, is not this particular proposition even more objectionable, because a large part of the regulation will be regulation of the over-the-counter markets of the brokers who operate on those markets, but all of the expenses under this appropriation are to be assessed against the stock exchange? So we would not only have an assessment of a private interest to provide regulation for the public good, but we would have assessments on one private interest to provide regulation of that interest and of other groups with which that interest was not identified.

Mr. BARKLEY. My impression at the moment is, without refreshing my memory by reading the language, that the commission might also assess brokers. If that be true, they could assess brokers engaged in over-the-counter transactions, as well as exchanges.

However, as the Senator from Virginia has already said, we started out nearly three quarters of a century ago doing this thing; we have done it with respect to other activities, and we seem to be increasing our propensity for doing it. Yet I am not convinced that it is a wise principle of government. After a while, if we shall continue to do it, and the necessity for regulating more groups in the country shall bring about the enactment of more laws, we will have all the people who are regulated paying the expenses of their own regulation, and I am not so sure but that after a while the regulated will control the regulators, and therefore we will have to change our system of regulation.

I have always felt that it was a bad principle of government to do that. I am not yet convinced I am wrong about it, although I recognize there is precedent for it in acts which have already been passed by Congress. But if we are to do it, I think it is infinitely better to give the commission power to do it, than to fix a hard and fast rule in the law itself, which would provide that we must assess against these exchanges a certain amount of money, whether that much is needed or not. We cannot even guess as to how much is needed at this time so as to write it in the bill. It will be a varying amount. It will not cost the same each year, and, as the result of that variability, Congress would be amending the law every year it convened, either raising or lowering the assessments against the exchanges.

Mr. BORAH. Never lowering them.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; they would never be lowered.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Would there not be another objection, in that if the Government were doing it, there would be more reason for limiting the amount to the exact necessity, while if it were assessed upon someone else, they would not be so careful about it?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is possible, although I think that if the assessment on the exchanges, and those who are to deal with them, is more than is necessary to pay the expenses, they will raise sufficient howl about it so that it will be lowered the next time an assessment is made.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky does not imagine that there will be any assessment for strawberry parties, does he?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; of course not.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. So far as the purely legal proposition, the delegation of power, is concerned, the delegation of the taxing power of the Congress, is there any difference on earth between the proposal in this bill and the provision contained in the measure which has heretofore been passed by the Congress authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to levy a processing tax?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all. I see no difference in principle at all.

Mr. CLARK. Or in the so-called "N.R.A. measure", authorizing the President to adopt and legalize codes which, in themselves, involve the taxing power?

Mr. BARKLEY. I see no principle involved in this bill that is different from those involved in any of the other laws passed authorizing branches of the Government to fix taxes, or assess a tax in order to raise money to administer the law.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I just want to observe in answer to the Senator from Missouri that there is this one difference, I think. One is an emergency measure and relief measure, while the other is permanent.

Mr. GLASS. How could the Senator know that it is an emergency measure?

Mr. HASTINGS. I hope it is. That is as far as I can go. It is pretended to be.

Mr. BARKLEY. So far as the power to levy the assessment of a tax is concerned, I do not think there is any difference in principle.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator from Kentucky will be kind enough to yield to me for a moment more, I will say that, personally, I have never seen any difference, so far as the Constitution and laws of the United States are concerned, between what Congress would be authorized to enact in time of emergency and ordinary times; between times of war and times of peace.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator from Virginia going to speak?

Mr. GLASS. No, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. I do not wish to take the floor from the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. No; I do not want the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Delaware will not leave in the RECORD a statement which would imply that as a lawyer he thinks that an emergency adds anything to the taxing power under the Constitution.

Mr. HASTINGS. If I left such an impression, I should like to correct it. A great many people seem to think it is important, and I made the suggestion because there was that possible difference.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator made that remark in response to anything I said, I should like to make myself perfectly clear. I never have known at any time that Congress had the right to declare an emergency to suspend the Constitution.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I merely wanted to make this observation, and I only made the suggestion a moment ago because the extraordinary powers referred to have been constantly urged upon the Congress, and I think the Congress has undoubtedly given way to the demand and request because they were emergency measures. I only make the distinction because I say that in the present case the same excuse cannot be made for asking for this extraordinary power.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, an emergency may justify the action of Congress in doing something that it has the power to do under the Constitution, which it would not do in normal times, but an emergency can have no effect upon the power which the Congress has to do or not to do a thing under the Constitution. There may be powers which the Congress has not seen fit to exercise in normal times which it may exercise in abnormal times, but whether they are normal times or abnormal times, the authority must be found in the Constitution of the United States, and when the Constitution is reached the emergency has absolutely nothing to do with the question of power. We in this Chamber ought to be able to demonstrate that fact by our words and by our votes. Even the Supreme Court of the United States seems to have given some recognition to that fallacious theory. It is a false, vicious, and dangerous theory.

Mr. President, the commission is authorized, it says on page 10, line 5—

> To appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and other experts and employees.

I ask the Senator from Virginia if he does not think that there ought to be some supervisory power over the commission to fix salaries of attorneys, and so forth, in view of the fact that the commission may turn about and assess that entire expense upon the citizens of the country.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not concede that they may assess that entire expense upon the entire citizenry of the country.

Mr. BORAH. I did not say the entire citizenry.

Mr. GLASS. I know the Senator did not, but that is what is involved in some of the remarks that have been made on this problem. I think if there ever was a case where those who are to be supervised ought to pay the expense, it is in this particular case. Everyone does not gamble on the stock exchange. Everyone does not speculate on the stock exchange; and if there have been abuses on the stock exchange that required governmental statutory supervision the ones responsible ought to endure the expense, and not the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. BORAH. That may be correct; but there are honorable, clean gentleman who use the stock exchange.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BORAH. And the assessment is not being made against those who are at fault but the assessment is being made against all who use the stock exchange.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but the proposition has been made, as I have heard the discussion, to assess against the taxpayers and audit here in Washington the expenses of this commission. I do not think that ought to be done. The people who are being regulated ought to be required to pay the expense. If the exchanges had done as they should have done, there would not be any necessity for regulation.

Mr. BORAH. With reference to some, that is true.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I am not objecting to the stock exchanges paying the bill; but if the stock exchanges of this country are to pay it, the Congress ought to levy and collect that tax and let it be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and then provide for the necessary machinery to control it afterward. So far as I am concerned, it does not make any difference if the stock exchanges are assessed 50 percent more than is necessary; but what I am complaining about is that this power is given to a commission, and there is offered to that commission the great temptation to be liberal with all the people they employ, to waste money; in other words, to tax people without any representation. That is my objection.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the provision giving boards the power to fix compensation for attorneys and employees, and so forth, is being spread throughout all our legislation. We are giving this power in different bills which have been passed and bills which we shall pass. We give to a board over whom we have practically no control, so far as that item is concerned, the power to fix compensation paid to attorneys, and so forth. It is a reckless grant of power.

Without mentioning specific instances, I think all Senators will recall that there have been several instances in the history of this country in recent years where that has become almost a graft, a scandal; lawyers being paid $35,000 and $40,000 a year who could not earn $5,000 a year outside that employment.

There ought to be some supervisory power with respect to fixing of compensation, irrespective of who has to pay the bill. If Congress gives the commission the power to levy the assessment, still we should, in justice to those upon whom the levy is made, see that there is some supervising power with respect to the question of fixing the compensation.

I am not going to offer an amendment, Mr. President, because I do not suppose it is likely to prevail, but the committee which has this in charge ought to take into consideration an amendment to the effect that the commission is authorized to appoint, and by and with the approval of so-and-so to fix the compensation. There ought to be a review of the compensation. There ought to be a consideration of it by those who are not immediately concerned in the fixing of it, and so forth. I urge that not for this bill alone but there are other bills, some of which we have been considering in the last few days, giving to boards the power to fix compensation, and I know that it will lead to results for which those who are responsible will deeply regret hereafter.

Mr. GLASS. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to put in the proposed statute a limitation upon legal fees, if that is desirable. I do not know just exactly what authority we might appeal to to supervise the supervisors. To whom would the Senator delegate the authority to approve or disapprove the assessments made by this board? And what authority would be better advised as to the necessity of an assessment than the commissioners themselves?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, it is assumed that they will be advised about that matter. But we do not give the highest judicial officers of the country power to fix their salaries.

Mr. BARKLEY. We do not give the board the power to fix the salaries here.

Mr. BORAH. Well, in practice it is the same thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. We fix their salaries in the bill. I do not know how Congress could have enough information about what attorneys and special experts they may need, to fix the salary of each one in the law in advance. We do not even know how many they will need. We do know what type of men they will have.

Mr. BORAH. No; I think that would be very difficult to do. But suppose we should say, "with the approval of the President."

Mr. BARKLEY. I should have no objection to that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I was about to call the Senator's attention to the fact that with respect to the budgets, as I understand, which are fixed for the various codes—those budgets, before being put into effect, and before assessments are made, are approved by the President. Certainly we might go that far in this instance without doing any particular harm, and it would be some guide, and give some control over the situation.

Mr. BORAH. I think the very fact that the President had to approve, whether or not in each instance his specific attention was required, would have a very desirable effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that in the Economy Act we provided that no vacancy could be filled, where a vacancy existed, except by the approval of the President, so that now if there is a vacancy in the office of a deputy United States marshal or a deputy collector of the remotest district in the United States, the collector of internal revenue in the State or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue here in Washington cannot fill that vacancy by appointing a man to a $1,200 job without sending the nomination to the White House and getting the President's specific approval thereof before the appointment can be made. I happen to know that in some cases it has resulted in delays. It is bound to be a matter of routine.

The President cannot investigate each one of these little cases. I do not know just to what extent he would be in a position to investigate the salary of each man who might be employed by this commission. In our effort to tie up these boards here in Washington, I think we have gone too far, especially in regard to the matter of salaries.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President, we are passing laws every day which impose duties upon the President which no human being can possibly perform, but it does have a very salutary effect upon such matters as this to know that such questions may be brought, and in the first instance are brought at first, to the attention of the President or some supervising power.

Mr. GLASS. We are passing laws imposing duties that no human being could perform.

Mr. BORAH. There is no question about that.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, in dealing with this rather important section 4 of the bill I will endeavor to express my views in connection with several features of it. I voted in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] not because I regard the Federal Trade Commission as being particularly better adapted to administer the law than a special commission appointed for this purpose. I voted for administration by the Federal Trade Commission because it is a conventional and controlled agency of the Government. It is subject to the restrictions to which all the other governmental agencies are subject. The objections that arise to section 4 of the bill would not arise if we were to delegate this authority to the Federal Trade Commission rather than to a special commission.

Mr. President, I believe the following observations are justified as to section 4:

First. It places no limit on the number of employees.

Second. It places no limit on the salaries of employees.

Third. It places no limit on the amount of expense that may be incurred by the Securities Commission.

Fourth. It places no limit on the assessments that may be levied on national security exchanges.

Fifth. It makes no requirement for civil-service eligibility, nor does it provide for application of the Classification Act to employees.

Sixth. It results in no supervision as to expenditures by the Bureau of the Budget.

Seventh. It does not require the commission to make any justification for its activities and expenditures to the Congress or to committees of the Congress.

Eighth. Its accounts and expenditures are not under any restraint by the Comptroller General.

There are probably other observations which might be made with respect to it which just as forcefully condemn it as do the eight I have enumerated.

I see great merit in the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. As I understand the amendment, it provides that the expenses of the commission shall be paid by regular appropriations made by the Congress. It provides in the second instance that the commission shall levy upon the stock exchanges certain assessments which are to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The net result of that procedure is to accomplish an orderly and controlled administration of the business of the commission.

The commission would be obliged to take its estimates to the Bureau of the Budget, and it would be obliged to justify those estimates before the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate. Moreover, expenditures, when made, would be subject to the approval of the Comptroller General of the United States. Adoption of the amendment would obviate the objections suggested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], and I want to repeat his suggestion because to me it is very disturbing in its import.

He suggested in effect that in the proposed commission there is a power to create expenses because the commission makes its own rules and regulations. That in the main is true. The commission has almost unlimited power to make rules and regulations for carrying into effect the different provisions of the bill. What, therefore, is to determine the amount of the expense of the commission? Primarily, the expense will be determined by the nature of the rules and regulations which the commission promulgates. If the commission makes rules and regulations which necessarily require the expenditure of money, the assessments will be large. If the commission is conservative, the assessments will be small.

In this regard the commission is substantially without restraint, and will be governed by its own discretion in making its rules and regulations. Having done that, it will fix the assessments to fit the requirements. Not only will it fix the assessment upon the stock exchanges which it will regulate, but it will do so in order to get the money to administer the over-the-counter markets and to control and regulate the brokers' offices of the country.

Mr. President, it seems to me if we are to make any pretense at all of providing a law-abiding administration—and I use the term only in the sense of whether it is to run wild with respect to expenses—we ought to put it under the normal, usual restraints to which we subject other agencies of the Government. The proposal of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] will not injure the administration of the law. It will not change the powers of the Commission except that it will require the Commission to go to the Bureau of the Budget, and then to committees of the Congress, and then to have the legality of its accounts audited by the Comptroller General of the United States.

I would suggest to the Senator from New York, if he wants a suggestion from me with respect to it, that instead of providing the fees shall be in an amount equal to one five-hundredth of 1 percent, he change the language so it will read something like this:

That such fee shall be in such amount as the commission may find necessary to meet the expenses of the administration of this act, not to exceed one five-hundredth of 1 percent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. STEIWER. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. I thought of suggesting that the language be changed to read as follows:

Such fees shall be fixed by the commission and in an amount sufficient to pay the expenses of the commission.

Then there will be a difference of language between the two Houses and latitude sufficient to work out a satisfactory plan.

Mr. STEIWER. I think that would be a sufficiently satisfactory adjustment of the matter. I would not contend further upon that point.

I want to make one further suggestion, however. As I understood the Senator from New York, he offered his amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. The latter's amendment is to subsection (c). The amendment offered by the Senator from New York is to subsection (d). I think there is no necessary conflict between the proposals, and therefore the amendment offered by the Senator from New York ought not to be offered as a substitute for the other amendment. It might well be withdrawn and then offered independently. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York deals primarily with the expenditures of the commission and the mode of raising the money and paying the bills. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware deals chiefly with the appointing power of the commission and places a limitation upon the salaries of certain of the employees of the commission.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is right; and I ask consent of the Senate to withdraw my amendment for the moment until that offered by the Senator from Delaware may be disposed of.

Mr. STEIWER. That is most considerate of the Senator, and I think that is the proper course—to enable the Senate to pass first upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware—to determine whether or not we desire to bring certain employees of the commission under the classified civil service.

The question was asked a little while ago by the Senator from Idaho whether that would fix their salaries. I do not pose as an authority upon the subject; but it seems reasonably plain that if we should put employees under the classified civil service, we would in fact fix the salaries as of the grades permitted under such service. If that is not done, Mr. President, then, of course, there is no limitation upon the salaries; there is nothing prescribed as to the duties; and the whole arrangement with respect to employees and the duties and work of the employees will be made upon the judgment and discretion of the commission, without the restraint of any law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] will be considered withdrawn. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10 it is proposed to strike out all of line 5 down to and including the word "subsection" on page 11, line 4, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(c) The commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such attorneys, examiners, and other experts and employees as may be necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as may be from time to time appropriated for by Congress.

With the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each commissioner, the attorneys, and such special experts and examiners as the commission may from time to time find necessary for the conduct of its work, all employees of the commission shall be part of the classified civil service, and shall enter the service under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the commission and by the Civil Service Commission.

All of the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation, incurred by the commissioners or by employees under their orders in making any investigation or upon official business in other places than in the city of Washington shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the commission. Until otherwise provided by law, the Commission may rent suitable offices for its use. The General Accounting Office shall receive and examine all accounts of expenditures of the commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, Mr. President, I reoffer my amendment to subsection (d), with the addition of an amendment to subsection (e) modifying the language on line 7 of the amendment which I presented so as to strike out, after the words "shall be", the remainder of the sentence, and insert "fixed by the commission and in an amount sufficient to pay the expenses of the commission", so that it shall read:

Such fee shall be fixed by the commission and in an amount sufficient to pay the expenses of the commission.

The rest of the amendment will be as heretofore read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from New York, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, beginning with line 11, it is proposed to strike out through line 4 on page 11, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(d) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, (1) such sums as may be necessary to enable the commission to complete its organization and to carry on its work during the first year after its establishment, and (2) such sums annually thereafter as may be necessary to enable the commission to carry on its functions under this title.

(e) Every national securities exchange shall pay to the commission on or before March 15 of each calendar year a registration fee for the privilege of doing business as a national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year or any part thereof. Such fee shall be fixed by the commission and in an amount sufficient to pay the expenses of the commission. The commission shall pay into the Treasury the amount of all fees paid to it under this subsection on or before April 1 of each calendar year, and the same shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, as modified.

On a division, the amendment, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 48, line 9, between the word "secrets" and the comma, it is proposed to insert "or confidential or competitive information"; so as to read:

PUBLIC CHARACTER OF INFORMATION

SEC. 23. (a) The information contained in any application, report, or document filed with the Commission may be made available to the public whenever in the judgment of the Commission a disclosure of such information is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors and does not reveal trade secrets or confidential or competitive information, and copies thereof, photostat or otherwise, may be furnished to any person at such reasonable charge as the Commission may prescribe—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate unduly in explaining the amendment I have proposed, because I realize that the committee having the bill in charge has given it long and careful consideration; and yet I should not feel justified in withholding this amendment, even at this late hour in the day, because it has been suggested to me by one of my constituents who feels that his interests may be affected by the bill if it shall become a law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I really believe that the language now in the bill covers the matter; but if the Senator desires to add those words to the trade-secrets provision I shall not object to having that done.

Mr. HEBERT. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 54, it is proposed to strike out lines 8 to 15, inclusive, and in line 16 to strike out "(c)" and to insert in lieu thereof "(b)".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, this amendment is proposed to paragraph (b) of section 28 on page 54 of the printed bill. Paragraph (b) provides as follows:

Every contract made in violation of any provision of this act or of any rule or regulation thereunder, and every contract, including any contract for listing a security on an exchange, heretofore made, the performance of which involves the continuance of any relationship or practice prohibited by this act or any rule or regulation thereunder, shall be void as regards any cause of action arising after the effective date of such provision, rule, or regulation.

To my mind, this provision of the bill would operate to affect existing contracts, and to take away from parties to such contracts rights which they might well have thereunder. I repeat that this paragraph affects not only contracts hereafter made but contracts heretofore made, the performance of which involves the continuance of any relationship or practice prohibited by the bill.

Let us assume that a broker, a member of a stock exchange, has an agreement with a customer to do certain things in respect to the purchase and sale of certain securities. Under that agreement we will assume that the member of the stock exchange agrees to advance certain funds upon the security of the particular things he has for sale or which he is going to purchase for the customer.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I intended to offer a substitute for this paragraph; and if the Senator will permit me to send it to the desk and have it read at this time, he may be satisfied with the amendment I propose to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out subsection (b) of section 28, on page 54, and in lieu thereof to insert:

(b) Every contract made in violation of any provision of this act or of any rule or regulation thereunder, and every contract (including any contract for listing a security on an exchange) heretofore or hereafter made, the performance of which involves the violation of or the continuance of any relationship or practice in violation of, any provision of this act or any rule or regulation thereunder, shall be void as regards the rights of any person who, in violation of any provision of this act or any rule or regulation thereunder, shall have made or engaged in the performance of any such contract, and as regards the rights of any person who, not being a party to such contract, shall have acquired any right thereunder with actual knowledge of the facts by reason of which the making or performance of such contract was in violation of any provision of this act or any rule or regulation thereunder.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, as I listen to the substitute proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], it seems to me that it leaves the undesirable provision, and what I consider to be the unconstitutional part of paragraph (b), still in effect; that is, it operates as to contracts heretofore entered into.

I have no quarrel with the Senator so far as concerns making unlawful any relations or entering into any agreements which are forbidden by the bill, provided the bill relates to agreements hereafter entered into but not to those heretofore made, because, clearly, under contracts heretofor entered into the parties to the contracts have acquired some constitutional rights which even this great body cannot take away; yet the provisions of paragraph (b) pretend to do that very thing. That is the objection I have to the paragraph. If, now, the Senator from South Carolina would change the verbiage of his suggested amendment so as to have the bill apply to agreements hereafter entered into, or rights acquired under agreements hereafter entered into, I should have no objection to the form of his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understand the position which the Senator takes, it is that this particular provision is retroactive.

Mr. HEBERT. Exactly.

Mr. JOHNSON. How does the amendment of the Senator seek to correct the evil which thus he assails? The clerk has not read the amendment.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I am asking to strike out the words beginning on line 9, down to and including line 15. I want to say now, however, that in the light of the suggestion made by the Senator from South Carolina, I would not go so far as to strike out the provisions of paragraph (b), so far as they relate to contracts hereafter entered into. If we can agree upon a form of amendment which will make this provision apply to contracts hereafter entered into, then there will be no constitutional objection to such an amendment and no one's rights will be interfered with.

Mr. JOHNSON. Cannot what is sought by the proponents of the act and what the Senator desires be preserved by merely deleting the two words "heretofore made", and have the reference then to contracts executed subsequently to the enactment of the measure?

Mr. HEBERT. That would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no objection to modifying the amendment by eliminating the word "heretofore", so that under the amendment, so far as the contract is concerned, it is to be deemed valid only as to one who violates the law, the guilty person, and the rights of the innocent person to the contract will be protected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, as I understand, the question is on my amendment as modified by the Senator from South Carolina, and I have agreed to the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina offered his amendment in the nature of a substitute for the text of the section, and it would take precedence under the rules of the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island. Does the Senator from South Carolina offer his amendment as a substitute for the text of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. I offer it as a substitute for the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question would be as stated by the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, has the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina now been modified as he suggested a moment ago?

Mr. BYRNES. It has been.

Mr. JOHNSON. So that the particular portion of the bill now under consideration has relation to contracts which shall be made after the passage of the bill, or after the making of the rules and regulations, as the case may be?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. HEBERT. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I offer another amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I inquire of the Senator from Florida whether he is proposing to have the Senate continue in session for a considerable period of time longer?

Mr. FLETCHER. I want the Senate to remain in session as long as may be practicable, and dispose of amendments. I do not want to stop now. I want to get the amendments out of the way. We have to do that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will we adjourn, in the Senator's opinion, by half past 2 o'clock tomorrow morning?

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, line 17, it is proposed to strike out the word "reliance," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "statement"; and in line 25, to strike out the words "As used in this subsection;" and on page 41 to strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, if the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency will give his attention to the first part of the amendment which is now proposed, he will readily see that it is a perfecting amendment, and it is the right language to use in place of that which is to be found in the bill on page 40, line 17.

The bill now reads, beginning after the parenthesis on page 40, line 15, "who, in reliance upon such statement, shall have purchased or sold a security at a price which was affected by such statement, for damages caused by such reliance."

The damage is not caused by "such reliance"; the damage is caused as a result of a misleading statement made to the purchaser. The word "statement" ought to be substituted in place of the word "reliance." I think that must be clear to anyone who reads it. Following along further in the amendment which I now propose, I would delete the words, beginning in line 25, page 40, "As used in this subsection the term 'statement' shall be construed to include any omission to state a material fact which is required to be stated in any such application, report, or document, or which is necessary to make the statement not misleading."

Clearly that language involves an impossibility. If Senators will analyze the language I have just read "shall be construed to include any omission to state a material fact", they will see that the two things cannot be read together without their destroying each other. Under the original statement, there cannot be one to be construed, and all that is covered in lines 1 to 4, inclusive, on page 41, is included within the provisions of section 18 on page 40.

If anything material is left out of the statement, if the whole truth concerning a given state of facts is not included in the statement, using the very language at the end of the paragraph (a), on page 41, "to make the statement not misleading", all of that would be included within the provisions of section 18, paragraph (a).

I confess I have never seen a piece of legislation drafted so as to provide that nothing in a statement which does not exist shall be misleading or that anything that shall be left out of a statement that does not exist shall be misleading.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that in the amendment which I am offering, or will as soon as we get to it, an amendment to the Securities Act, we will change that language in the Securities Act; and if that amendment shall be agreed to, it will become a part of this bill, and will be the law. I would rather not agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, does the Senator say that the objection which I am now making to the provisions of section 18 are going to be taken care of by a substitute amendment which the committee will propose?

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment which I shall propose will carry a provision with reference to the Securities Act, which will then become a part of this measure. It will deal with the question of reliance upon representations.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, how will that affect this provision? This provision concerns what is, to my mind, an impossible state of affairs.

Mr. FLETCHER. This provision might not be inconsistent with the language of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island. [Putting the question.] The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, what was the announcement by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The announcement was that the amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I do not want to take up the time of the Senate unduly, but if the Senator insists upon a division I shall suggest the absence of a quorum and ask for a roll call.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no objection. Certainly the Senator from Rhode Island should not object to my asking for a division. Upon my asking for a division he states that he will suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, we have gone along all afternoon and have not asked for divisions or roll calls, because we were anxious to expedite the consideration of the bill. I do not want to prolong the session of the Senate unduly.

Mr. BYRNES. All I ask is an opportunity to ascertain the sentiment of the Senate on this amendment. If that brings the Senator to the point of suggesting the absence of a quorum, the Senator can suggest the absence of a quorum and ask for a roll call.

Mr. FLETCHER. All we ask for is a division. We are impressed that Senators were not perhaps fully aware of the question being put, and we simply ask that those who are here divide on the subject; not that a yea-and-nay vote may be necessary.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be restated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be restated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, line 17, after the words "caused by such", it is proposed to strike out the word "reliance" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "statement"; in line 25, after the word "litigant", it is proposed to strike out the words "As used in this subsection"; and on page 41 it is proposed to strike out lines 1 to 4, both inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEBERT. I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 7, after the word "members", it is proposed to strike out "and by issuers whose securities are registered thereon."

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, this amendment would change paragraph no. (1) on page 12. It has relation to the registration of national securities exchanges. The paragraph now provides that any exchange desiring to be registered shall file an agreement to comply and to enforce so far as is within its powers, compliance by its members "and by issuers whose securities are registered thereon."

Manifestly, that is an impossible task. No member of an exchange could ever hope to secure compliance on the part of the 600,000 corporations issuing stock or other evidences of indebtedness in this country. It is an impossible thing to expect the members of the exchange to do; and yet, if they fail to do it, there is the implication that they may render themselves liable to the very severe penalties imposed elsewhere in this bill. Surely some consideration should be given to the difficulties which will be encountered in securing a compliance with that part of paragraph (1) on page 12.

I propose to delete from the paragraph the words "and by issuers whose securities are registered thereon", so that it will apply to the members of the exchanges themselves. They must file the agreements. They must do all that the regulations require.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the amendment has just been presented to me. It is rather far-reaching in its effect. It is difficult for me to make up my mind about it. I appreciate the argument made by the Senator from Rhode Island, although it seems to me the language proposed to be stricken out is quite important. What would be the effect, may I ask the Senator, of eliminating the issuer?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the issuer will not be subject to the regulation of the stock exchange. The issuer will not be a member of any stock exchange. It is merely the member who will be subject to the regulation of the stock exchange; and yet there is placed upon the member of the stock exchange the obligation of making the issuer comply with the regulations of the stock exchange, of which the issuer is not a member, and with which the issuer has nothing in common. It seems to me that it is going a long way to impose an obligation upon a member of a stock exchange, and, if he fails to meet that obligation, to subject him to the very severe penalties imposed by the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we can agree to the amendment and let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEBERT. I send to the desk another amendment, and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56 it is proposed to strike out lines 3 to 21, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 30. Any person who willfully violates any provision of this act which is declared to be unlawful, or any person (including any director or officer, or any accountant or other expert) who willfully and knowingly makes, or causes to be made, any statement in any application, report, or document required to be filed under this act, which statement was false with respect to any material fact, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both, except that when such person is an exchange, a fine not exceeding $100,000 may be imposed.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, I will explain the provisions of the amendment which has just been read at the desk. It seeks to make two changes. It relates to section 30, on page 56, the penalty section. It removes the distinction between violations of the law proper and violations of the regulations of the Commission.

From a reading of section 30 it is apparent that paragraph (a) imposes very severe penalties for violations of the law and that paragraph (b) imposes less severe penalties for violations of the regulations issued by the Commission. The amendment would make no distinction as between violations of one kind and another, but it would materially reduce the maximum penalty for violations of either the law or the regulations of the Commission.

It may be said that there is some justification for imposing very severe penalties for violations of the law. Through the years I have had some experience with the consideration of that subject, and I long since reached the conclusion that the severity of the penalty does not in and of itself act as a deterrent.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. These are only maximum penalties and the amounts imposed would be within the discretion of the court.

Mr. HEBERT. I realize they are only maximum penalties, but I realize too that there are those before whom offenders might be tried who would impose the maximum penalty. I realize that has been done in the past in not a few instances, and in a cruel way in many instances.

The first purpose of a penalty under a statute of any kind is that it shall act as a deterrent. In other words, it says to citizens of the country, "If you violate this law, then you will incur this penalty." The penalty fixed is intended to deter people from violation of the law.

It is not a question of what the Government recovers in the way of fines. That is not the purpose of the penalty. It never has been. In criminal cases it is supposed in theory to be in a way to pay for the indignity that has been done to the Government because of the violation of its law, but in real purpose it is intended as a deterrent.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The committee gave a great deal of consideration to the question of penalties. May I point out to the Senator that the amount of the fine imposed for the commission of many acts which the bill intends to cover would constitute a small penalty amounting to practically nothing so far as protection of the public is concerned. In other words, anyone who undertakes to violate this law may clean up many millions of dollars by a violation of the law and then get off with a mere minor penalty. The committee considered that matter, and I hope the Senate will not reduce the amount of the penalty because of the possibility of making large sums of money by violation of the law.

Mr. HEBERT. I never supposed that the imposition of a fine in cases of this kind would go very far to deter one who was disposed to enter into law violations where a great amount of profit might be realized. But the Senator will bear in mind that this section carries an imprisonment provision. Not only may the offender be assessed a penalty in the form of a fine, but he may be imprisoned as well. The two may go together.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; that is for violation of the law.

Mr. HEBERT. It is not merely a question of fine but a question of imprisonment as well.

Having in mind the purpose of a penalty in a statute of this kind, it has seemed to me that the limit placed upon the penalties in the bill is very much too high. I think it will destroy its own purpose. Moreover, I think it will act as a deterrent to others entering into the brokerage business. It may be difficult to secure the necessary capital with which to enter into the business of selling securities because of the danger that there may be severe penalties to be imposed because of violation of the prohibitions of the bill.

I have just indicated, in connection with the previous amendment I offered, in which I sought to make a change so that members of a stock exchange would not be required to have the issuers of securities subjected to the provisions of the bill, how easy it would be to subject one to the penalties provided in the bill.

Mr. President, I have no disposition to do anything which would in the least make less effective the provisions of the bill. I am satisfied that the change proposed in the penalties would not do that. I rather think it would be an improvement in the form of the bill, and that is the reason why I am suggesting the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I had a discussion with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] a day or two ago with respect to the use of the words "any material respect." I suggested to him—indeed, it was suggested in committee, and I believe that the Senator from South Carolina and the chairman of the committee were both in agreement—that the language might well be changed so it would read "with respect to any material fact." I have such an amendment I want to offer, and I am wondering if I can have it accepted without debate?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I am familiar with the amendment to which the Senator from Oregon refers, and I know it was the intention of the committee to include those words. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. STEIWER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 20, line 19, to strike out the words "in any material respect" and insert in lieu thereof "with respect to any material fact."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. I offer the same amendment on page 40.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed on page 40, line 13, to strike out the words "in any material respect" and insert in lieu thereof the words "with respect to any material fact."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 28, beginning in line 13, to strike out the words "to comply with the provisions of this act and any amendments thereto and with the rules and regulations made or to be made thereunder, and".

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate for the purpose of discussing the amendment at length. In a very few sentences I can state my purpose in offering the amendment.

In an amendment offered earlier in the day by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] he sought to have the House language substituted for paragraph (b) of section 12 of the Senate bill. That involved a number of changes, but the significant change would have been the elimination from section 12, paragraph (b), of the requirement for an agreement to be made by the issuer, commencing in line 11, page 28. That proposal was voted down by the Senate. It was voted down upon the argument that it would eliminate the latter part of that subsection which would be necessary in order to regulate the lending of funds at the money post of the exchange or to any broker or dealer who transacts business in securities through the medium of any member of the exchange.

It was contended in that argument, and it was contended in the debate by a number of Senators with whom I discussed the matter as a part of my contribution to the debate, that the first part of the subsection had no practical effect and that it imposed no liability upon the issuer that would not have existed in any event by reason of the fact that the issuer would be bound to comply with the rules and regulations made and to be made by the commission. I myself believe that that contention is almost entirely sound. It has occurred to me at all times that the requirement here for the member to comply with rules and regulations made or to be made does not substantially change the position of the issuer, except with respect to the possibility of civil liabilities to be asserted in the future.

The only purpose of this amendment is to strike from the subsection the requirement that the issuer must agree to comply with the provisions of this measure and any amendments thereto, and with the rules and regulations made or to be made thereunder. The remainder of the subsection will be left entirely unaffected. If those of my friends who contend that the issuer must in any case abide by the rules and regulations, and that this language does not impose any additional restriction or requirement upon him, sincerely want to follow through with their own suggestion, they may do it by joining now in voting for this amendment, so that the subsection will merely provide that the issuer must make an agreement with the exchange and with the commission to the effect that it will not lend any funds in violation of the requirements of the agreement.

Much could be said on the subject, but I think I shall not detain the Senate. The issue is known to all of us. I wish the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] were here. He is the one who, in the earlier debate, most insistently urged upon the Senate that the language which I now seek to strike out would not add anything at all to the liabilities of the issuer, either civilly or criminally, and that in any event he would be obliged to comply with the rules and regulations made and to be made by the commission. It seems to me that if corporations are objecting to this requirement, and if, indeed, it does not add anything to the strength of the proposed law, we ought to eliminate it from the bill so as to make the bill as inoffensive as it is possible to make it upon this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am wondering if there are any more amendments to be offered to the bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am about to ask for a recess. I desire to give notice that tomorrow, when the Senate meets, I intend to offer as title II of this bill the amendments which have heretofore been proposed to the Securities Act of 1933. I hope to have that question disposed of and have the bill finally acted upon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] offers an amendment which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 35, line 17, after the words "submission of", it is proposed to insert "a notice of a stockholders' meeting, whether or not accompanied by", so as to read:

As used in this subsection the term "to solicit" shall not be deemed to include the mere submission of a notice of a stockholders' meeting, whether or not accompanied by a form of proxy for the convenience of stockholders.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think that amendment can be agreed to without any objection. Let us dispose of it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

PRIZE ESSAY ON LINCOLN

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, one of my friends has sent me an essay on Lincoln. It was written by a 12-year-old schoolgirl, and, in my opinion, is worthy a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is found in the Pawtucket Times, February 14. I ask that the essay may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the essay was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pawtucket Times, Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1934]

ASHTON PUPIL GETS PRIZE FOR LINCOLN ESSAY—RUTH E. JONES IS GIVEN THOMAS LEIGHTON AWARD IN TOWN-WIDE CONTEST

The prize-winning essay written by Ruth E. Jones, 12, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Jones, of Scott Road, Ashton, in the annual contest for the Thomas Leighton prize in Cumberland, is as follows:

"In this day of modern, comfortable homes, with conveniences at every hand, it is hard to imagine a dwelling as crude as that of Thomas Lincoln in the backwoods of Kentucky early in 1800. One would think that such a home could not yield strength and wisdom, but little Abraham Lincoln, who was born there on February 12, 1809, grew to be an unusually strong and intelligent child. At the age of 7 he carried an ax and gun and worked hard on the little farm.

"His schooling had to be acquired 'by littles', and amounted in all to less than a year. However, his mother, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, taught him to read and write. In later years Lincoln said, 'All that I am and all that I hope to be I owe to my sainted mother.'

"Lincoln had few books and would walk miles to borrow others. Lincoln had no light by which to study except from the fireplace, and no paper on which to write, but he did his 'sums' on a wooden shovel, and shaved it clean when finished.

"When Lincoln was 21 he saw for the first time, while on a trip to New Orleans, Negroes chained, whipped, separated from their families, and sold in the market place like cattle. This grieved the kind-hearted man and he decided that if it ever became possible for him to do so, he would fight slavery.

"During these years Lincoln became greatly interested in law and politics and would often walk 12 miles to the law office of a friend to study the books there. While studying with the hopes of becoming a lawyer, he was for a time assistant county surveyor and local postmaster. But in time he accomplished his purpose and was admitted to the bar. In all his law practice he would not defend a case unless he felt it absolutely right and just.

"The feeling against slavery was gaining in the North, while slavery itself was spreading in the South. Lincoln sent out the alarm, 'Slavery is spreading like wildfire', and challenged Stephen A. Douglas to a series of debates. Seven debates followed in towns in Illinois. People came from all around to hear them. Douglas argued that each State should be allowed to choose for itself whether it should be free or slave.

"Lincoln claimed that no man had a right to be master of another, and that a nation divided could not stand. Douglas won the debates, but Lincoln's strength of character made such a lasting impression upon the people that in 1860 they elected him President of the United States. The election caused great bitterness in the South, and several States seceded from the Union and formed the Confederate States of America.

"Four dark years of war followed, during which Lincoln worked, first, for the preservation of the Union and, secondly, for the freedom of the slaves. Meanwhile Lincoln issued and signed the Emancipation Proclamation, setting 4,000,000 slaves 'henceforth and forever free.' Finally in April 1865 the terrible war came to an end with the surrender of the South. The Union was saved, the slaves were free, but this great gladness was turned into sorrow when Lincoln was shot by an assassin.

"The savior of his country belongs to the ages."

In announcing the award the judges issued the following statement:

"It was no task but a pleasure to act as judges for the excellent essays submitted. In every instance it was not alone thoroughness in preparation of subject that should be praised, but neatness of papers, excellence of penmanship, accuracy of spelling, and knowledge of English. The judges wish to congratulate both teachers and pupils."

Students of all Cumberland schools participated in the contest.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 11, 1934

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

Rev. Robert James White, National Chaplain the American Legion, Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Lord God Almighty, we bow before Thee and in humble prayer beseech Thy blessing upon our deliberations.

We again avow our dependence upon Thee, our creator, redeemer, and eternal judge, and repeat with the Psalmist of old: "The Lord is our refuge and our strength."

In Thy boundless wisdom, O Lord, Thou hast given Thy sanction to government in human affairs, because Thou hast made government a necessary instrument to bring to men the blessings of peaceful order, just laws, permanent security, and mutual helpfulness.

Keep us mindful of our responsibility to Thee for our leadership; and let us not forget that though we be leaders of men, we are yet Thy children.

Destroy, O Lord, every consideration of selfishness, of sectionalism or group. Support us, O Lord, in our abiding conviction that we are not only caring for the needs of the passing hour but are working out in part the lasting destiny of our Nation in Thy eternal plan.

Enlighten our minds and strengthen our wills to the end that the ideals we profess may become realities in the lives we live; and over our lives, and acts and thoughts and being, cast, O Lord, the protecting mantle of Thy love and charity, that all may tend to the longed-for "increase of peace and good will on earth."

We ask these blessings through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

A VERMONTER'S POLITICAL VIEWPOINT

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech I made yesterday before the School of Politics in this city.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered before the Political School of the League of Republican Women, May 10, 1934:

Madam Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, a Vermonter's political viewpoint, or in other words, the Vermont brand of Republicanism, is what I have been asked to talk about this afternoon. I may as well say at the outset that the brand is unadulterated, as is our maple sugar, for we take our Republicanism seriously in Vermont.

Undoubtedly we are old-fashioned, but we still believe in the Constitution of the United States, in the Declaration of Independence, in the Bill of Rights, in the Constitution of the State of Vermont, and accept them as our political rule and guide of faith. Incidentally, and it is not generally known, the founder of the Republican Party was an adopted son of Vermont, educated at and an instructor in a Vermont college years ago, and studied law in our State. He achieved prominence in his profession at Ripon, Wis.; took an active part in politics as a Whig, and believing that the end of that party was approaching he consulted Horace Greeley with respect to what ought to be done, and suggested the formation of a new party, and on being asked by Mr. Greeley what the new party should be called, he said, "Republican." Henry Wilson, in the Rise and Fall of Slave Power and in his account of the founding of the Republican Party, gives to Allan E. Bovay the distinction of having founded the Republican Party at Ripon, Wis., February 28, 1854.

From the days of the earliest settlers, Vermonters have asserted their independence. To their descendants have been transmitted many of their outstanding characteristics. Of the hardy pioneers of the early days it was well said that: "Encompassed by enemies they were never conquered, beset by evils they were always undaunted; forsaken by friends they forsook not themselves. The State whose independence they secured is the monument of their labors, and the children to whom they left it rise up and call them blessed." As you very well know, no such storm of opposition ever confronted any other State as was encountered by the men who achieved the independence of Vermont. The struggle, the vicissitudes, the opposition developed certain attributes and outstanding characteristics which have rendered the name of "Green Mountain boys" immortal. Sound common sense—a keen perception of right; promptness of action; calm, steady courage; tenacity of purpose; thrift and unfaltering perseverance; and a strong conviction that God helps those who help themselves are some of the characteristics of the people whom I have the honor to represent.

I am pleased to be here this afternoon and talk to you about their viewpoint and the brand of Republicanism in politics for which they stand. I am doubly pleased to have this opportunity to talk to you, for as much as I am deeply and undeniably interested in every movement of this kind, which has for its purpose the stimulation of interest on the part of the electorate and its education with respect to everything which pertains to the Government and the rights and duties and obligations of its citizens.

The greatest danger that confronts the people of the United States today is not that of a foreign foe or armed invasion. It is a more subtle and insidious enemy, the seeming indifference of the average citizen to matters vitally affecting his welfare, the apathetic state of mind, the seeming numbness, or partial paralysis, of the body politic, a disinclination to assert ourselves to preserve and save and conserve the blood-bought liberties we now enjoy.

The greatest problem of the day and generation in which you and I live, the most important and far-reaching question that confronts us or has confronted this country since the Civil War, the question in comparison with which others seem almost trivial, is this: What shall we do with the indifferent citizen? or, to put it the other way, What will the indifferent citizen do to the Republic?

We must arouse ourselves to a realizing sense of the tremendous crisis that confronts us. America has settled some momentous problems, but as she settles this one, right or wrong, so shall the future of the American Republic be determined—so shall it stand or fall.

War, peace, debt, prosperity, anarchy, safety, the health and protection of our families, the education of our children; an incapable and wasteful or wise and efficient Government; yes, even the question of life and death depends upon your vote. This country must be saved by the ballot, not by bullets!

No such crisis has confronted this country since the day when Abraham Lincoln declared that this country could not permanently endure half slave and half free, and on that declaration the Republican Party was formed, and the Civil War was fought utterly and completely to extirpate slavery from the soil of this Republic. The war was won, that issue was determined, the Union was saved, the fundamental principles of the Republican Party and its policies and leadership were vindicated. The national character of the Union was established, and an end was forever put to the doctrine of secession. Are you so sure that another great crisis is not at hand? It is time to wake up!

I am a Republican, since I believe the Republican Party was born because of a principle, and has lived and grown because of vital governmental principles and policies, for which it has stood and which it has maintained, too sound to be permanently overthrown, too deep and fundamental and underlying to be effaced.

A stupendous task confronts the Republican Party, not too great an undertaking for this party of ours—that sponsored and was responsible for the enactment of the legal tender and sound money laws; for the system of internal-revenue taxation by which a major part of the operating expenses of the Government has been met; not too great an undertaking for the party which forced the adoption of the thirteenth amendment, which abolished slavery; and the fourteenth amendment, which created citizenship of the United States, as distinguished from citizenship of the several States; and the fifteenth amendment, which established equality of suffrage.

It has made mistakes and is big enough to admit them and to correct them, but has maintained a record for achievement and accomplishment which will not permit it to lie down or to admit that its men or women have lost their vision, or that it, as a party, is unable to cope with a situation whose difficulties, compared with those which the Republican Party, as such, has met and surmounted, are at least no greater.

Many panaceas have been offered, many remedies suggested, and so many methods of resuscitation or revival of the body politic have been tried, it is a wonder the patient has survived the ordeal. We are threatened with a dose of inflation which means repudiation or substantial reduction of debts, and deflation, which means an enforced sale of assets at a price far below what they are really worth. Inflation is an insidious method of fooling the people, the workmen and wage earners and the farmers. The farmer is hardest hit of them all. History attests this fact, a fact so often proven as to be an axiom.

To lighten the burden of debt by depreciation of the currency is a benefit to a very small minority of the population at the expense of a large majority. By far the greater part of the population is interested as a creditor rather than as a debtor. Recovery can only be brought about by an increased volume of business done with the expectation of a reasonable profit, for anything that tends to obscure the hope of profit tends to retard recovery. Uncertainty as to the future character and value of money is the strongest single deterent to business enterprise. It has always seemed to me that to stabilize the currency permanently by reducing the gold content of the dollar to approximately its recent value can but result in further and far-reaching disturbances and disaster, causing great harm and injustice to a majority of our people. It will eventually bring about a large increase in the general price level over even that of today, of the cost of living, of the wages of organized labor, measured in the dollars of depreciated purchasing power. While wages may double, so will prices also, and the buying power of the money with which bills are to be paid will be further depreciated.

It does not follow that it is a good thing to raise prices, for unless incomes rise at the same time as do prices, the standard of living must go down. You do not have to argue this hard or long to the people of the State of Justin S. Morrill, George F. Edmunds, or Calvin Coolidge. They know that to issue fiat money, to start the printing presses, or to put our currency on a silver standard, or to attempt to establish a bimetallic standard would but spell national disaster. They know these things from experience, and they know they have been found to be facts by the Monetary Commission, of which the late Hon. George F. Edmunds, Vermont's distinguished statesman, was the chairman. The facts so found exist today.

We do not have many multimillionaires or millionaires among us, and we look with disapproval on all attempts to arouse class antagonism by ranting and raving about the capitalistic system. Every home owner in Vermont and in this land is a capitalist, so are 60,000,000 holders of insurance policies and 20,000,000 of savings depositors, and all those hard-handed, thrifty investors who have purchased United States and State municipal bonds and securities. Every farmer and every wage earner in the land are capitalists. It follows, therefore, that all of us who constitute the backbone of this Republic must suffer by the reduction of the purchasing power of the currency and the resulting increase in the cost of living. No, my friends, Vermont Republicans are for a sound currency and a solid basis for a sure recovery which will be sound, solid, and secure only if it comes of itself.

In my campaign for nomination and election, over and over again, I made the statement that the American people had accepted the N.R.A. solely as a temporary expedient, which would not be permitted to be or become a permanent part of our governmental policy or our form of government.

The delirium of fear with which our people were obsessed as of a year or two ago has now passed, and, as someone has said, "The patient is convalescing and eager to go places and do things." The American people will not much longer stand for those things sponsored and advocated by those who are attempting to saddle upon this Republic a program and policies un-American in conception and unconstitutional in fact and in law. The hard-headed, keen-minded, patriotic people who love their country and believe in the American idea are fed up with the theorists. They want a logically worked out program based on the hard grounds of practicability. They are ready to work. They give Franklin D. Roosevelt, our distinguished President, all the credit to which he is entitled, and that is a very great deal. They have not lost confidence in him, but they question his judgment in the selection of those with whom he has surrounded himself, who are attempting to put into effect a program of which I am sure he cannot approve, and which he must eventually be compelled to repudiate in full, as he already has in part, although he may be helpless in their hands.

Did you read the editorial in the Washington Herald, May 8, in which the statement was made that the country is fed up on Tugwell and all the other apostles of bedlam: "It (the country) does not want to hear much more from, or about, any of them—Jerome Frank, the General Counsel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration; or David E. Lilienthal, of the Tennessee Valley Authority; or Nathan R. Margold, Solicitor of the Interior Department; or Thomas Corcoran, Counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; or Professor Landis, of the Federal Trade Commission; or Benjamin Cohen, Counsel of the Public Works Housing Authority; or Paul Freund, attorney of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; or Charles Edward Wyzanski, Solicitor of the Labor Department; and there are others. The people are ready to rule the entire Frankfurter stable off the turf. They are heartily sick of the 'brain trust'; they perceive in its policies only folly and defect. The names of its members are vinegar to their eyes."

Vermont Republicans do not take kindly to or believe in regimentation or the proposed planned economy featured by the group last named. Regimentation! The very thought of it arouses in them the spirit of resistance and renews their determination to assert anew and maintain their independence. Whether you call it facism or socialism or communism, they know that the program which these men would have us follow can but spell the end of those liberties for which their forefathers fought and which they under the Constitution will seek to preserve. They see in it the end of individual thought and expression, the eventual abandonment of a democratic form of government, and to it and to those who sponsor it they are unalterably opposed. The surrender of the rights of a free people to a dictatorship and to a tyranny, such as the proposed regimentation and regulation and extended bureaucratic experimental restriction and supervision contemplates, is anathema to them. They sympathize and agree with the woman farmer who asks:

"What of our children and our grandchildren? Can farmers hope for the security some of us knew as children? Can any business dare to hope to grow and profit? Will there be any incentive to work hard and try to get ahead when personal income from hard work must be turned over in such large amounts to the Government in income taxes? What will it do to the souls of people that they may find no encouragement to do their best, it appearing that a premium is set upon inefficiency and waste and idleness? We have grown children, married, and bewildered by the problems of achieving any decent existence. They were taught the strange old creed of trying to do all they could and expecting to profit better by doing so—better than those who did not choose to make their utmost effort. When can we teach our baby, now only 5 years of age? What hope can we hold out to her, as she grows up, in a Nation that, having gulped its recovery pottage, must forego its heritage for taxpaying?"

She wonders about dictatorships which can be only because power has been bestowed or seized, and what may be the outcome of them. "Any kind of dictatorship is dynamite to democracy and to order and to progress." She goes on to say: "I look out across our land that we still hold by only such a narrow margin, and I know that if my husband cannot make it pay, nobody else can tell him how, and I know that the blood of generations of independent farm people rises within me to hate dictation, no matter how soft the velvet may be laid over its mailed fist, or how beautiful the bribery it offers us for our inalienable rights, which it is trying to deceive us into giving up.

"I am forced to keep on believing that what is honesty for the individual is honesty for the group, and what is good for business ethics and is reasonable business management for the man is good for the Nation." She cannot understand, nor can any of us, how consumption can be increased by making prices still higher and taxing the poor on the food they eat, so that, afterward, the Government can make levies upon processors of foods to get money to pay some farmers to do less work, and also to pay a lot of Government employees we do not need, to see that the farmers specified do loaf as per agreement. The processing tax on hogs is being paid by those who produce the hogs.

An Australian visitor has recently said that "cutting production is only creating artificial shortage and artificial poverty." She cannot help wondering if those who so gayly destroy pigs ever sat up through a zero night in January, cramped into a farrowing shed trying to help save the babies, or thrilled later to their contented gruntings around the feed trough, or watched growing children tuck away juicy slices of ham—sure they could eat just all they wanted, for there would be plenty. She doubts if those who would advocate the farmer's working on a nonprofit basis would be willing to milk twice a day with no shelter from a northwest winter gale but a barbed-wire fence, so be they even knew from which side of the cow to begin the task!

Where will it all lead? Is a Government-dictated agriculture, with acreage allotments for those who would plant and only so many head of livestock for those who would raise them, coming swiftly upon us? As Government reaches out farther all the time to get into and control what has hitherto been private business, will we come to nothing better than serfdom made the more poisonous by our modern knowledge of transportation and of communication? Are we heading into State-controlled and enforced socialism? Is democracy, as we have known and loved it, doomed? Are private initiative and private enterprise and personal thrift and personal desire for ownership of property to be thrown away as useless? Is the day passing when we can learn anything from history to help us with the present, and are we just naturally too smart to have to abide any longer by the old laws of supply and demand, and right and wrong? Do we not know that economic pills will not cure spiritual ills?

It seems to me that we need to guard our rights as private citizens as never before in the history of our Nation, that we need to examine to see if we have not tacitly abrogated our precious privileges of doing our own thinking, in yielding so much, no matter how imperative may have seemed to be the emergency. "It is all wrong that a business as basic as agriculture in a nation such as ours should have to exist upon Government subsidies, or deliberately cripple itself, like stepsisters cutting off pieces of their feet to try to make them fit Cinderella's slipper, to try to make itself fit the shoe somebody else says it ought to walk in, if it is to get along. It should stand upon its own strong feet, serving as only it can."

How absolutely right she is that "No other business is as completely dependent upon private initiative and private personal devotion and labor as is farming. Take out of American farming the incentive to prosper, to own, to have, to hold, to improve, to enjoy, to be certain of keeping, and the Government had as well have the farms, for you cannot hire anything to take the place of the love of home that has carried so many of us through scorching days of summer and the exposure of winter weather, through sacrifice and losses and shabbiness and deprivation and made us feel that none of these mattered if some day we could have a good farm home and a bit of time to rest in it."

Where do we go from here? Your answer may be far better than mine; but as sure as we live, or anybody lives, we shall go on to something, somewhere, from here, and now is the time to be having something to say about the direction to be taken. The daughter of debt is hate, a terrible thing wherever seen, and we need less of her, and more of the contentment that can be the offspring only of thrift and good management, and courage and faith.

This woman has done some thinking and has thought it through. Hear her again!

"I still believe in personal independence of thought and action, as long as one holds to law and order. I still believe in that individualism that some have lately held up to ridicule and scorn. God gives it to each of us and leaves no directions for later handing it over to scoffers. I believe that lower taxes, lower interest rates, and to have been let alone were all, and still are all, that the farm people need. I believe the same three suggestions would work for many another business now being crippled and maimed beyond recognition by Government interference and political dictatorship.

"This is your country and mine, whether we live in country or in town, are poor or well-to-do; and it is your concern and mine that we assume the responsibility we shall never have any alibi for having shirked, and do what we are able, be it little or much, to see that there shall be no more jeopardizing of the rights our Constitution set forth as ours to have and to cherish."

The people of Vermont are fed up with the N.R.A. and its application to and effect upon them as individuals and in the destruction of their business and the loss by them of their savings of a lifetime. In a recent article in the Detroit Free Press the writer takes occasion to say: "The editors of America have voices and type, but somewhere in New England a little merchant put a sign in his window, in which he sought to make use of the same constitutional provision of free speech, and the whole power of the Federal Government in the hands of General Johnson cracked down on him because he had the temerity to speak his mind about the N.R.A. A United States Senator, CARTER GLASS, can call the blue eagle a 'blue buzzard' and order it out of his shop without being molested."

The man who owns and operates the little business all over this land of ours is the "forgotten man" of this administration.

I have a letter from a neighbor of mine who lives in an adjoining town, who says:

"I operate a filling station and do not employ any help, as this is not a large village, and there are six stations of other brands besides the one I sell. My profit is so small that I cannot have a steady man. I have three children in school. My health will not let me do hard work. This business has not paid my expenses, and I am confined night and day. Can I pay a high-school boy 50 cents a day through his vacation? This would help him in his schools. Or a man a dollar a day that cannot earn any more? I was the second one to join the N.R.A. in this village and am heart and hand in all ways to bring us back to prosperity, but I also wish to make a good home for my family."

I forwarded this letter to the Petroleum Labor Policy Board on April 25, and asked for a ruling on the case, and that a letter be addressed both to me and to the writer of the letter.

On the 7th day of May I received another letter advising me that my neighbor had received a copy of the code directing him that he should pay 40 cents an hour for 8 hours a day. "That", he says in his letter to me, "is more than I receive in profit." And he asks, "Can I have a boy or man by giving him a cent a gallon on each gallon he sells? I would like to get this straight so I might live and let others."

On the same day that I referred this second letter to the Petroleum Labor Policy Board and asked that my constituent be exempted from the operation of section 3 of article 2 of the petroleum code, I received a reply to my first letter, from which I quote: "To pay a high-school boy 50 cents per day through his vacation period, or a grown man $1 per day, because he cannot earn any more would be in violation of the law and would defeat the purposes of the National Recovery Act."

I ask you, in view of the foregoing, what are the purposes of the National Recovery Act, and what, in view of its provisions and the policy it pursues, is going to become of the individual citizen, the small business man, and of the country?

Just a few days ago the Associated Industries of Vermont sent out a questionnaire, the result of which disclosed the fact that a large majority, according to the Honorable E. Lewis Olney, the president of the association, probably 75 percent of the industries of Vermont are having great difficulty in complying with code requirements and remaining in business. "It appears to me that relief to these smaller industries must be quickly afforded if they are to continue in operation or adopt the other alternative of failing to comply and take their chances as to what may follow", he says.

In a letter recently received from Governor Wilson of Vermont, I am advised that "the theories on which the N.R.A. is founded are not working out in practice up here to the benefit of our communities. Part of this is probably due to the theories themselves and part to lack of enforcement of the N.R.A. * * * I have come to the unwilling conclusion that if present conditions continue, our small industries in Vermont must themselves disregard the N.R.A. and fight their own battles as best they may. If there is not a solution before long many Vermont manufacturers will either declare their independence of the N.R.A. or go out of business."

Things are going to be different from now on, whether we like it or not. Changes must come, but there need be no change in our form of government, and there need be no third party! This is the testing time for the Republican Party. Have we the brains to acknowledge our mistakes and the initiative and vision to put this country back on to its feet and to reestablish constitutional government? Or, shall we stand by as slackers and destructive critics and let it follow the path of least resistance along the road that Russia has traveled? There can be but one answer. The solution of our problem calls for the best that there is in us.

The Republican Party has been the party of action and progress and achievement, from the days of its founding, for more than half a century of our national life. The call and the need for its leadership are stronger today than ever before. The political party which has put into effect the principles and policies which saved national unity, freed a race, resumed specie payments, established the national credit, fixed the gold standard, restored prosperity, in short, which always, when it has been brought to a realizing sense of the responsibility resting upon it, has responded to the call and proven equal to the emergency, will once more respond, will continue to keep the faith, will provide the solution of our problems, and, true to its record, will lead this country out of the slough of despond into the sunshine of complete recovery and prosperity, contentment, and peace. The Republican Party is equal to the task.

Go tell the pessimist that we have a vast domain of three million square miles, this Nation of ours, literally bursting with latent treasures, still waiting the magic of capital and industry to be converted into the practical uses of mankind; that what natural resources we lack we have the brains to manufacture, synthetically; a country rich in soil and climate, in the unharnessed energy of its mighty rivers, and in all the varied products of the field, the forest, the factory, and the farm. Tell him we have the man power and the brains, and that the Republican Party, renewing its allegiance to the principles, purposes, and declarations of its founders, with its face toward the light, reaffirming its adherence to fundamental Republican doctrines, will go forward, determined to perpetuate blessings already received and to make sure and secure the achievement of a greater America yet to be!

MOTHER'S DAY AND ITS FOUNDER

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, over all the civilized world the second Sunday in May of each year is now known and observed as Mother's Day. This day was founded by Miss Anna M. Jarvis, a native of West Virginia, who is now a resident of the city of Philadelphia, Pa.

The idea of setting aside one day in each year in honor of the mothers of men was conceived by this splendid and devoted woman over a quarter of a century ago. She transmuted her idea and her dreams into action, and today there is an annual observance of Mother's Day around the world. The day was intended by the founder to be—and is—one of thanksgiving and is an expression of remembrance and gratitude. It is observed not inly in all the countries where English is spoken but also in all other civilized lands of diverse customs and languages. No founder of a great memorial day could have envisioned a more generous and wide-spread acceptance of an idea. The day is given official recognition by England and her colonies; and if it may be said that the sun does not set upon the English flag, then it is true that the day fixed for the honor of the mothers of the race is observed around the world. Our neighboring States in South America give general recognition to this day and to the sentiment inspired and cultivated by its observance. The Government of Brazil gives to this day its annual recognition through official proclamation. Our immediate southern neighbor, the United States of Mexico, recognizes the day by paying beautiful tribute to the mothers of that country. It is said that on this day in Mexico the thatched adobe huts as well as the most pretentious palaces are decorated with flowers in tender and loving remembrance of the mothers of the land, living or dead.

The observance of the day has spread among the races of Africa and Asia, as well as to the inhabitants of the islands of the seas. In our own country and in all its possessions the day is recognized not only by official proclamation and appeal but by an observance marked by the tendermost sentiments and unmarred by the slightest taint of commercialism. It is the one day of all the year upon which the entire world becomes of harmonious accord because of an appeal to the sentiment that lives in every human heart.

As the years pass the importance of Mother's Day becomes more apparent, and the day itself attains greater significance in human life. Perhaps Miss Anna M. Jarvis, the founder of the day, may have dreamed of the time when it would be universally observed, but we doubt that even she ever visualized the appeal that this day makes to human emotions. The world-wide slogan of the day is "Write home." This is an injunction as well as an appeal to the sons and daughters who have wandered far. No record is possible of the joy and gladness that have been brought into aching hearts because of response to this appeal. Year after year, on Mother's Day, letters, telegrams, and gifts come from lands near and from lands far distant to cheer and encourage lonely mothers whose sons and daughters are no longer beneath the family rooftree.

On this day millions of letters are distributed in the United States and its possessions, but as well as throughout other lands. In addition to this, countless gifts are placed in the mails to be forwarded "back home" to the mothers who are thus remembered. The sons and daughters who write these letters and who send these gifts become children again in their love of the mothers who bore them, and the mothers who receive them are again young in their yearning for these evidences of remembrances from those they love.

The real purpose and thought of the founder of Mother's Day, together with the splendid constructive force of the ideal permeating this institution, are recognized by the Army and Navy of the United States. By official sanction the day is appropriately observed in all branches of the Nation's military and naval forces. This year there will also be an observance of the day in the Civilian Conservation Corps engaged in the various reforestation projects throughout the country, and the mothers at home will be advised that "all is well" with their sons. In the schools and colleges throughout the land there is to be a general observance of the day, and it is said that this year more than 100 colleges and universities are planning for pilgrimages which will be made this week to these institutions of learning by the mothers of the college students. These visitors will in many cases be the invited guests of the colleges, and all honor will be done to the mothers of those who are in training for future useful citizenship.

Mother's Day is the one great day of remembrance and of celebration which has never been, and may we hope never will be, commercialized. It is both an ideal crystallized and a dream come true. The idea is founded upon what is perhaps the greatest factor in human happiness—sentiment. Sentiment expressing that intangible, indescribable emotion that grips our hearts, sways our minds, and brings a mist to our eyes. It steals into our hearts as God's sunlight steals across the land and draws us in tender sympathy closer to all the rest of mankind. More than any other force has sentiment been the actuating cause of all social life and brought to us in modern times the instrumentalities of home, religion, and government. The sentiment that causes us to forget for a brief space our present individual strivings and ambitions, our joys and sorrows, our hopes and aspirations, and to walk again in memory with the mother of our childhood, is the purest, sweetest and holiest motive that we could inspire in the hearts of men and women.

What a wonderful inspiration was that of Anna M. Jarvis when she founded Mother's Day! It is true that the mothers of men did not really require a special day upon which to do them honor. In the hearts of men, every day is Mother's Day. And yet it was an act of vision to select one day in each year upon which the peoples of all the earth might show honor to a living mother, or lay a wreath of flowers upon the altar builded in their hearts to the memory of one who is no more.

And now, what may be said in tribute to the one for whose honor this day was set apart? To whom, of human speech, has there been given the power to pay a fitting tribute to the mothers of men? To this there can be but one answer: To none. Words are inadequate, deeds are futile, song and story fail, painting is feeble, and monuments built of human hands are but vanities. Nothing can be said or done that can pay any part of the debt we owe to that most wonderful of all creations of God, the mother. And yet, as she, living or dead, would wish it, we can, day by day and year by year, render to her the only compensation within our power by giving back to her or to her memory just a little of the great wealth of love with which she endowed us.

The poet says that man's justice is "like God's when mercy seasons justice." That may be true, but it is only the leaven of mercy that gives to the justice of man even a semblance to the all-inclusive and pervading justice of the all-wise God. Man's mercy, even at its best, cannot hope to equal the tender and healing mercy of his Creator. There is nothing in which man can hope to equal or even emulate the Divine Intelligence which gave him being. But there is one thing in the world that comes nearer than all others to being the equal of the Divine, and that is the boundless, tender, and enfolding love of a mother for her child.

Going unafraid down into the valley of shadows to bring her child into being, she emerges with the wee mite of humanity resting upon a heart that from that moment is overflowing with a passionate devotion that is never exhausted. With tender eyes she watches the tiny bud burst into the bloom of early childhood. Through days and years of sunshine and storm, of joy and happiness, of hope and despair, of smiles and tears—bending over the cradle, watching with anxious care the first tottering steps, kissing away the pain of little hurts, sitting with tear-dimmed eyes through the long watches of nights of sickness, greeting with smiles of joy the first signs of returning health, listening to childish prattle and soothing childish sorrows with tender sympathy and understanding—always leading, always lifting up, always with her eyes toward the dawn, she brings the child safely through the helpless years into young manhood or womanhood. And the end is not yet. The same untiring, undying, unselfish love lives on, toils on, burns on, gives of its inexhaustible self until toil-worn hands are folded across a heart that can no longer respond.

The most beautiful sentences in the languages of men have been written and uttered about the love of a mother, and why not? It is a theme that appeals to us because we have been beneficiaries of that love. But there has never been a human being, nor ever will be one, who can understand or fathom or measure the depths and intensity of it. There is no place so high to which a child may climb that a mother will not follow; there is no depth too low to which one may sink that the mother will not stoop with outstretched and saving arms; there are no spaces so vast, oceans so wide, or deserts so arid as to deter the mother's following footsteps; there are no prisons so forbidding, no dungeons so dark, no dens of vice and evil so vile that a mother will not enter them in search of a wayward and erring son or daughter.

She will stand with them in their glory in the high places of the world, and in equal glory, but a glory all her own, she will stand with them upon a scaffold. From dawn to dusk of life, the love of mother surrounds us, encompasses us, protects us, sharing all things, enduring all things, suffering all things; nor the winds of adversity, nor the tides of the sea, nor the coldness of the world, nor the fires of hell, will prevail against it. If it can be said that the sacrifice of the gentle Savior, in whom we believe, washed away the sins of those who look to Him in faith, what may not be said of the mothers of the world, of all faiths, creeds, and conditions in life, who with their tears have cleansed the souls of sons and daughters from the black stains of sin and brought them, white and clean, to the foot of God's great throne? In the words of the Recessional let us pray today.

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

And what a beautiful and wonderful thing it is for us to be able to remember. Memory garners and holds for us the brightest, sweetest flowers in the garden of life. It records and preserves for us old scenes, old days, and old friends. It carries us back to the days of childhood when mother's arms enfolded and mother's voice in lullaby soft and low lured our baby minds into the fairyland of baby dreams. It carries us back to the sunkissed hills and blazing meadows of youth. It recalls to us the happiness of years long dead and brings to us from time to time the voices of those whom we loved in the distant past. Memory dwells with us always, and even in dreams we live again the drama and the tragedy, the sweetness and bitterness of other years; and it is only when death shall come to press with gentle fingers our tired eyelids down to eternal sleep, that memory will place her farewell kiss upon our pallid brow.

To many of us with whitened hair, the record of rapidly flowing years, there is left only the memory of a mother. But that memory is not a sad one, it is just a wonderful treasure to keep and hold forever. To those who are yet blessed with a living mother's love and presence, it need only be said that they now have the substance of that which some day may become a memory; therefore all the more should their treasure be guarded with loving care and tenderness.

RIVER AND HARBOR AND FLOOD CONTROL

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for today, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] is recognized for 40 minutes at this time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I will be forced today to do something that I have never done before in my life—that is, to decline to yield. My time is so limited that I cannot possibly yield, and I request Members not to ask me to do so until I have finished.

Mr. Speaker, the President has announced that he has under consideration plans for the comprehensive improvement of our waterway system for all national purposes, embracing navigation, flood control, power development, irrigation, and related subjects. Surveys for these purposes were made under Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session. Commissions have been appointed by the President to submit plans to a board consisting of four Cabinet officers, and we are informed by the press that this board has submitted a tentative report to the President.

The press report given out stated that a predicted result of the Cabinet study is that many river and harbor projects authorized or partly completed will probably be abandoned, though the new policy will not affect those projects being carried out under Public Works allotments. It is expected that the President in due time will present the matter to Congress and ask for appropriate legislation.

I am informed that an effort is now on foot to deprive the Rivers and Harbors Committee of jurisdiction of this proposed river-and-harbor legislation and have it vested in the Committee on Flood Control. Under the rules of the House, when a public bill has been referred to a committee, a contest for jurisdiction by another committee must be decided without debate. Therefore, in the event of such a contest over this proposed legislation, whether initiated by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or by any other committee claiming jurisdiction, the Members might be called upon to pass judgment without an opportunity of debate or investigation. I respectfully call the attention of the House to a few matters which might be deemed pertinent.

In our early history, river-and-harbor legislation was generally under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce. This committee afterward became the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It continued in control of river-and-harbor legislation until the creation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in 1883.

By reference to rule XI, pages 308 and 312, House Rules and Manual, it will be seen that all proposed legislation "relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors" shall be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Under this rule the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has for the past 51 years exercised jurisdiction over bills and proposals for various types and classes of waterway improvements.

These improvements and proposed improvements included navigation; power; oil and acid pollution; damage to reclamation districts caused by seepage under levees on upper Mississippi; diversion of water from Lake Michigan at Chicago for navigation; diversion at Niagara Falls for power under international arrangement; diversion for like purpose at the Soo; maintenance of lake levels on the Great Lakes by installation of weirs, regulatory and compensatory works; the purchase of Cape Cod, Lake Drummond, Chesapeake, and Delaware, and many other canals; installations for water-power development at various places; beach erosion; sea-wall protection of harbor at Galveston against hurricanes; diversion of course and flow of the Brazos River at Freeport, Tex.; erection of hydraulic laboratory at Bureau of Standards; securing of commercial statistics; establishment of harbor lines and various other matters.

Before the creation of the Committee on Flood Control, all flood-control improvements were also under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The impression has been created that the surveys embraced in Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, were made under authority of the flood control bill. This is entirely erroneous. They were ordered in the River and Harbor Act of January 21, 1927. The letter of the Secretary of War transmitting his report under that document shows conclusively the authority under which he was acting. It is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D.C., April 12, 1926.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am transmitting herewith a report dated April 7, 1926, submitted in accordance with section 3 of the River and Harbor Act approved March 3, 1925, which reads as follows:

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army and the Federal Power Commission are jointly hereby authorized and directed to prepare and submit to Congress an estimate of the cost of making such examinations, surveys, or other investigations as, in their opinion, may be required of those navigable streams of the United States, and their tributaries, whereon power development appears feasible and practicable, with a view to the formulation of general plans for the most effective improvement in combination with the most efficient development of the potential water power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation: Provided, That no consideration of the Colorado River and its problems shall be included in the consideration or estimate provided herein."

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War,
Chairman Federal Power Commission.

The surveys ordered under Document No. 308 are nearly all completed, though some of the reports are not yet printed. These surveys have been carried out at a cost of many millions of dollars, and they constitute the base of the proposed comprehensive plans for waterway improvements.

The Committee on Flood Control was created February 3, 1916. The rule for it was presented by Mr. Garrett, then of the Committee on Rules, afterward for many years the very able Democratic leader of the House. The scope of the jurisdiction of the new committee was fully explained by Mr. Garrett in presenting the rule. He said:

The Committee on Rules has recognized the tremendous importance of this subject matter, and that committee has felt that there should be created a standing committee of the House which could give scrutiny and attention to that question (flood control), that committee having jurisdiction of that subject matter only.

The following colloquy took place between Mr. Garrett and Mr. Sparkman, Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, within certain limitations the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House has had charge of the improvement of the lower Mississippi River, appropriating large sums of money each year, and the language appropriating these amounts is always so guarded as to confine the improvement of the river to the building of levees, to protect against floods, of course, and for the purposes of navigation. What I want to ask is, What effect would this rule, if adopted, or this amendment to the rules and the appointment of this committee under it have on the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors over that class of work?

Mr. GARRETT. I should say, Mr. Speaker, that bills relating to flood control would be referred to this new committee if the rule be adopted. I do not think that those bills which refer to the question of the navigation of the Mississippi would be referred to this new committee, but that they would be referred, as they have always been since the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was created, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. Sherley, of Kentucky, who during the World War was Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asked this question.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has stated what the rule proposed to do. Now, will the gentleman state why it is proposed to do that? What is the reason for taking part of the jurisdiction away from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and creating a special committee?

Mr. GARRETT. Because of the realization of the fact on the part of the Committee on Rules that there are aspects of the question of flood control which are not related to either navigation or commerce.

Mr. Sterling, of Illinois, propounded another inquiry, which Mr. Garrett answered as follows:

Mr. STERLING. This rule would take away from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the jurisdiction it has exercised in the past on the question of levees?

Mr. GARRETT. It would not take away jurisdiction of any question affecting navigation or commerce.

Mr. WILSON, now the able Chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, in his speech favoring the new committee, said:

We feel that if given a committee of this kind, that could concentrate its collective thought and combined energies upon the problem of flood protection, this problem could be worked out and a final solution reached.

Our eminent Speaker, Champ Clark, the author of the resolution, expressed similar views. He said:

I introduced this resolution for the purpose of appointing a committee whose sole business it shall be to investigate from the best sources of information attainable to see if it is possible to prevent this destruction of property and life by curtailing the overflows of the rivers.

These were the circumstances under which the Committee on Flood Control was created. It is very evident that the purpose was to have a committee that was not to be encumbered with other problems of river-and-harbor improvements. Certainly, it was never the intention to have two committees on rivers and harbors exercising equal or concurrent jurisdiction over the same subject matter. Neither could such a course of procedure be successfully carried out. We might just as consistently contend for two committees on ways and means; two on appropriations, on rules, and on the judiciary.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON], Chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, now claims jurisdiction over many waterways for all purposes, and says:

If the major portion of the project is improvement on rivers and harbors, it goes to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

If the main portion is flood control, it goes to the Committee on Flood Control.

In another connection he made the statement that the major features involved in all those questions relate to flood control. So there we are.

If it were practical to carry on under such a course of procedure, it is plain to be seen that we would soon be confronted with innumerable controversies and contentions as to jurisdiction. Furthermore, with some of the waterways under the one committee and some under the other, and each acting from its respective viewpoint, how would it be possible to secure the coordination the President is seeking. Instead of uniformity of treatment of the various sections and interests to be considered, it is plain to be seen that our waterway map in a few years would become a veritable crazy quilt.

Pursuant to the thought that flood control is the major question in every case, there is now under consideration before the Committee on Flood Control a bill to create a board to take over, under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control, the Mississippi River, including all the navigation works now being installed above St. Louis, including 27 locks and dams under construction, involving a cost of $124,000,000. This project was adopted by Congress in the river and harbor bill of 1930, and the expenditures were authorized by the Public Works Administration.

A similar measure is before the Committee on Flood Control to take over in like manner, under the jurisdiction of that committee, all the navigation works on the Missouri River, on which approximately $137,000,000 has been expended, including the allotments under the Public Works Administration. The approximate 400-mile section of this river below Kansas City was authorized by Congress in the river and harbor bill of 1910. The 400-mile section between Kansas City and Sioux City, in the river and harbor bill of 1927. The approximate 1,200-mile section above Sioux City up to and including the Fort Peck Dam was authorized by the Public Works Administration on report by the Chief of Engineers on a survey authorized in the river and harbor bill of 1927.

If the whole program of river-and-harbor improvement is now to be transferred to the Committee on Flood Control, as is being contended for, then, in fact, if not in name, that committee would become the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Furthermore, it would defeat the purpose for which the Committee on Flood Control was created—that of concentration on flood control and flood control only.

It is not my purpose, in this connection, to attempt a defense of expenditures for river-and-harbor improvements for navigation. If any are found to be unmeritorious, they should be abandoned. I will simply say that the approximate three quarters of a billion dollars expended upon our ocean and gulf ports and harbors, through a period of 110 years, has created them into gateways for the systematic passage of our foreign trade, of a normal value of more than $9,000,000,000 annually, to say nothing of our enormous coastwise trade.

General Markham, Chief of Engineers, in a speech delivered before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress on April 30, called attention to the fact that through our ports and over our inland waters in 1929, 880,000,000 tons of freights were carried, and that the maintenance cost of these waterways was slightly less than 3½ cents per ton of freight moved.

In the same year 1,339,091,007 tons of freight were hauled over class I of our railroads, the maintenance cost of which, as approved by the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, was $2,058,267,113. Of this maintenance cost, $885,364,867, was for maintenance of way and structures, and $1,202,912,246, for rolling stock and other equipment. This amounted to $1.53 per ton cost.

Of course, 1929 was one of the peak years in our movement of commerce, both by rail and by water. In 1932 the maintenance of all our ports and inland waters was $23,791,815.30. The water-borne tonnage for that year was 445,648,000, representing a cost of 5.3 cents per ton. The railway maintenance for that year for way and structures and for equipment was $970,119,814. The freight hauled by rail were 646,222,818 tons, representing a maintenance cost of $1.50 per ton. To any one who has had experience, or who has made a study of traffic problems, these figures should be of interest.

Flood control, of course, is one of the major considerations on some of the rivers to be dealt with. Navigation and power development are also major considerations, especially is this the case as to power. Then there are other problems to be taken into account. This is to include, as we are advised, many of our harbors, which are to be considered for abandonment.

Many of our most important rivers, such as the Hudson, the Delaware, and many others, while involving navigation to a marked degree, and power to a certain extent, the flood-control problem there is either nonexistant, or, negligible in comparison.

The Great Lakes and their connecting channels and contiguous rivers present no problem of flood control. On the other hand, they possess enormous interests, both present and potential in power and in navigation. Instead of flood, low lake levels constitute the major problem to be dealt with in this great system.

The Great Lakes and their connecting channels constitute the greatest system of inland transportation in all the world. More than 160,000,000 tons of freight have been handled there in a year, at a cost of about 1 mill per ton-mile. Ships engaged in this traffic carry heavier cargoes on a draft of 19 feet than is possible to be carried on ocean ships on a draft of 30 feet. To conceive these things as a flood-control problem would require a wide flight of the imagination.

The Committee on Flood Control has functioned quite extensively in recent years, in some of our most important legislation. Especially has this been the case since the great flood in the Mississippi which brought about the Jadwin plan. On the other hand, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has not been permitted to function except to authorize surveys and studies by the Corps of Engineers and conduct hearings and investigations. These duties, however, the committee has not failed to perform. As a result, a vast fund of pertinent data is available for immediate consideration.

I am advised that the data accumulated by the engineers of the War Department in response to surveys and investigations initiated by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in surveys carried in river and harbor bills; and in resolutions of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, would cost approximately $12,000,000 to reproduce. The reports by the Chief of Engineers embracing this data have already been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and upon the major portion of them hearings have been conducted, and further studies made.

The flood control work that has been carried on by the Committee on Flood Control, will, in any event, continue as heretofore under that committee. No one is seeking to deprive that committee of its jurisdiction. So far as we are advised, that work is not to be subjected to molestation under the program contemplated for other river-and-harbor improvement. As evidence of this, an unusually large appropriation for this work has been made for the coming year. No appropriation whatever, except for actual maintenance has been made for river and harbor work, except insofar as it is being carried out under the Public Works Administration.

Since the organization of the Board of Engineers in 1902, and up to May 2 of this year, 3,864 surveys and resolutions for consideration of waterway projects were submitted to the Corps of Engineers. They have submitted reports upon 3,638 of these surveys, of which 1,314 were favorable, 2,293 rejected, and 31 without recommendation, simply reporting facts and conditions.

From this it will be seen that about one out of every three submitted to the engineers has been favorable, and that about two thirds have been rejected as unmeritorious. From this it will be seen that the Corps of Engineers has been one of our greatest bulwarks in protecting the taxpayers of the United States. Furthermore, the pork-barrel practices that formerly prevailed have been completely eliminated.

To those who are now seeking to destroy the Committee on Rivers and Harbors by taking from it practically every element of river-and-harbor improvement, under its jurisdiction, I desire to say, in the language of Holy Writ:

> Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's.

That, of course, includes his jurisdiction, also.

Mr. Speaker, we have been told that in the building of King Solomon's temple, the timbers were cut, hewn, and prepared in the forests, and the stones cut, squared, and numbered in the quarry. When brought together and erected into that grand edifice, they fitted together with such exact nicety that the structure, when completed, resembled more the handiwork of the Supreme Architect than that of human hands. We should have this picture before us in the building of our waterway system. Each project should constitute a unit in the whole, and capable of being fitted into its place to round out the system. All works for navigation and commerce should be under the same committee of the House, and the work carried out under one agency, the Chief and Corps of Engineers of the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Does the gentleman not think if we are going to abolish anything, we had better abolish the Committee on Flood Control?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is a very important committee. I would not want to see it abolished nor one iota of its jurisdiction taken away from it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Now, does the gentleman not think this whole scheme is to kill off inland water navigation for the benefit of the railroads?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think that some people behind the scenes may be trying to scatter and divert and make a crazy quilt of the whole proposition.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman not believe that, if they would establish this new agency in which they contemplate the employment of civilian engineers, it would not only cost the Government a great deal more in administration expenses, salaries, and so forth, but the Army engineers would not get an essential training that would be useful to them in case of war?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think the gentleman is entirely correct.

If I may be permitted, I will call attention to the actual service of some members of the Board of Engineers in actual river-and-harbor work.

Colonel Barden, the senior member, has been engaged on river-and-harbor work for 24 years and 4 months.

Colonel Hoffman, 22 years and 7 months.

Colonel Brown, 24 years and 6 months.

Colonel Tyler, 18 years.

Major Fox, 11 years and 10 months.

The only two members of the Board having had comparatively short terms of service are Colonel Woodruff, 6 years and 7 months, and Colonel Lee, 7 years.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the distinguished gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The chairman said he was unwilling that jurisdiction should be taken away from the Flood Control Committee or that committee abolished. The Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is not willing either that jurisdiction should be taken away from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It will never be done with my consent nor with my vote.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DIES. It is inconceivable that any attempt would be made to take this jurisdiction away from the Rivers and Harbors Committee. If the attempt is made, it is going to prove unsuccessful, but will the gentleman answer one question? How many bills has the Flood Control Committee favorably reported that have been enacted into law since the date of its creation? Does the gentleman have that information?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; I have not that information.

Mr. DIES. It does not exceed over three or four major bills.

Mr. MANSFIELD. There have been quite a number of survey bills, but only three or four major bills, perhaps.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman from Texas has suggested that it would be inconceivable to take from the Rivers and Harbors Committee jurisdiction over this subject. Is it not a fact that under legislation passed in the special session of the Seventy-third Congress the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee over some of these matters has already been taken from it and that the money actually to be expended on river-and-harbor improvements is no longer under the jurisdiction of that committee, nor under the jurisdiction of the Board of Army Engineers, but that it is now entirely under the discretionary jurisdiction of the Administrator of Public Works?

Mr. DIES. That is true of nearly everything.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Of course, no river-and-harbor work has been carried on the past year except through that agency.

Mr. MOTT. That is my understanding. Now, is it not also correct that many of the river-and-harbor projects which were included in river-and-harbor bills, projects approved by the Board of Army Engineers, have been turned down by the Administrator of Public Works?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is true with respect to many of them.

Mr. MOTT. There are four or five river-and-harbor projects in my own State, which have been approved by the committee and the Board of Army Engineers, but which, so far, the Public Works Administration has not allowed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. COLDEN. Our esteemed chairman has mentioned the work of the Board of Army Engineers in connection with the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Is it not a fact that the Board of Army Engineers has proved itself efficient, has practiced economy, and has produced results of the very highest order and has kept scandal out of this work?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it not a fact that several of the engineers on the Board and in the various divisional offices saw service during the World War and found their previous river-and-harbor experience of great value in their war service? If this be so, will not the younger members of the Board and in the divisional offices find their experience of great benefit to them should this country engage in another war?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is no question as to that.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection I ask unanimous consent to insert in my speech a brief statement of the course of training of the engineers in the Army Corps of Engineers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, May 11, 1934.

Hon. JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR JUDGE MANSFIELD: I am in receipt of your inquiry as to the special training received by officers in the Corps of Engineers to qualify them for their civil duties in the Government service.

The officers of the Corps of Engineers are all graduates of the United States Military Academy, or of recognized civil technical institutions of established standing. The graduates of the Military Academy are, in addition, provided with 1 year of post-graduate training at recognized civil institutions, such as the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cornell University, University of California, and Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, where they obtain a course of studies agreed upon by the institution as most essential to their future work. In addition, all officers are required to complete a year's course at the Engineer School, Fort Humphreys, Va., where particular attention is given to a course of study specializing in hydraulics, navigation structures, and general river and harbor engineering. Moreover, selected officers receive, under special conditions, additional opportunity for research work, and in this connection four of the junior officers of the Corps of Enigneers have been selected for study in hydraulic research in Europe, under traveling scholarships sponsored by the leading engineering organizations.

This course of study is augmented by well-planned and progressive practical training. Young officers, on completing their technical courses, are assigned as assistants to district engineers, where they are placed in the field with definite responsibilities to obtain field experience. As their experience broadens, they are assigned to positions of greater responsibility, and after 12 or 15 years of service are placed in charge of the smaller districts. When they have thus had the opportunity to fully demonstrate their ability to supervise the projects in a small district, they become eligible for consideration as district engineers in larger districts, and for the other activities of the Department. Many young officers receive valuable experience as assistants in the hydraulic experimental station at Vicksburg, and in special studies and investigations of an engineering nature, of which there are always a large number before the Department.

I believe it accurate to say that there is probably no organization in existence in which the members are required to successfully pass a more rigid course of instruction or have more opportunity to obtain a diversified training in the various phases of engineering dealing with the development of our rivers and harbors, and I believe that this course of training and practical experience combined is a requisite to preparation for the supervision of the many and complicated engineering problems which attend the military operations in war. The greatest asset of the military engineer to his country lies in a broad background of large-scale operations enabling him to accept immediate and great responsibilities.

Very truly yours,

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, May 11, 1934.

Hon. JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR JUDGE MANSFIELD: In recent months it has come to my attention that many of the opponents of Federal development of our waterways are using the word "creek" to imply that the Federal Government is spending large sums of money annually for the maintenance of a large number of insignificant waterways bearing practically no commerce. This is, of course, entirely misleading.

The word "creek" is of colonial origin, and was applied haphazardly to many streams which are rivers in fact. In general, the creeks developed and maintained by the Federal Government have been tidal waterways bearing, during the period of their improvement, a considerable commerce.

I find now that we have on an active maintenance status some 52 projects listed as creeks. I further find that prior to the depression these creeks handled a maximum commerce of 12,386,657 tons, and even in 1932 a tonnage of 6,952,772. This tonnage has been handled at an average annual cost for maintenance since their adoption as projects of approximately $61,000.

It is manifest from these figures that these so-called "creeks" are important arteries of commerce which have been improved and maintained at a cost which is probably lower than the maintenance cost for almost any other type of waterway under development.

Very truly yours,

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DIES. There has been some criticism of river-and-harbor projects that have been approved by the P.W.A. Is it not a fact that our committee advocated some projects that have not been approved by the P.W.A?

Mr. MANSFIELD. We failed to approve some that they have approved. We took no action either for or against, except that we declined to approve them after holding hearings on some of them. They have failed to approve quite a number that were approved by our committee and by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. That did not prevent the project that the P.W.A. recommended from getting the money, did it?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Oh, no, no; we have no voice over that.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors advise the House how many times the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has overridden a report from the Board of Army Engineers?

Mr. MANSFIELD. None within my recollection.

Mr. DONDERO. I thought I recalled a statement that they had done so in only four cases.

Mr. MANSFIELD. In our entire history?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The only thing that came near it of which I recall since I have been a member of the committee was when the Missouri River above Kansas City was put into the bill. It was put into the river and harbor bill on the floor of the House over the protest of the committee, but it had an Army Engineers' report 20 years old, and they based it on that. That comes the nearest to it in my experience.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry I was not present to hear all of the gentleman's speech, but I understand he spoke about a matter we have had up here at different times under the Consent Calendar, of bills that were reported by the Flood Relief Committee. Heretofore, up until this year, those of us who have had the duty of objecting to certain bills have been objecting to the Flood Relief Committee coming forward with these bills. Heretofore they have been brought up by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. As I understand it, that was to some extent the burden of the gentleman's speech.

Mr. MANSFIELD. They have jurisdiction of surveys for that purpose the same as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman think that eventually this is going to result in a good deal of discord over the question of jurisdiction?

Mr. MANSFIELD. During the 17 years that committee has been in operation—I have served on both committees; I served on that committee 4 years and on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for the rest of the time I have been in Congress—I have never known of any friction until the present time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I got the impression, although I may be wrong, that the Flood Relief Committee came into prominence only since the Mississippi Valley flood. Is that right?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; since the last flood, perhaps, the committee has been more prominent than it was when I served on it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Thus the Flood Relief Committee has no jurisdiction over matters other than Mississippi River matters.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not with regard to navigation improvements. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

THE ROADS BILL

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 365.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 8731, a bill to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Roads, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to make in order the consideration of H.R. 8781, known to this body as the "roads bill." The rule is an open rule, and provides for 2 hours' general debate, to be in control of the Chairman of the Roads Committee and the ranking minority member thereof. The bill is subject to amendment.

This bill seeks to authorize an appropriation of $400,000,000, similar to the amount carried under section 204 of the National Recovery Act, but in addition provision is made for an authorization of $50,000,000 for roads and highways in the parks and in the forests and an emergency authorization of $10,000,000 for emergency work in connection with the restoration of roads which are damaged or destroyed by unusual and unnatural causes, such as earthquakes, floods, and so forth. While I am on this subject, may I say that I believe this is one of the most valuable features of the bill, and is a provision made for a character of work that we are met with frequently in this country, due to the number of these extraordinary occurrences, that we find in many instances our systems of highways are broken and traffic interrupted because of the disconnection of a very small segment.

It is unnecessary to offer argument on the value of the work received under the operation of our road program. That there is a dire necessity for it no one familiar with the conditions will dispute for a minute. The strongest possible argument on behalf of this bill was presented by the Director of Public Roads when he said that with the exercise of the most energetic action on the part of his organization and the various State organizations, and with the liberal allocation of funds in the past year, he is no more than able to keep pace with the increase in motor traffic. So that leaves us faced with a situation that is delicate, and one which is of grave importance, that is to avoid the interruptions to our road-construction program. We are conversant with the conditions in the various States. We know that because of the economic distress those States are no longer able to comply with the requirements of the original road law carrying the contributing feature and under which we operated from the date of the passage of that act in 1921 up to the passage of the Industrial Recovery Act of the past year.

It is useless to take up time to argue the material value to the Nation of the expenditure of these public funds. It is of lasting importance and one very necessary to the Nation as a whole. It is equally useless for me to present an argument to this House on the virtue of the expenditure of road funds in relieving the unemployment condition of the Nation, for no one can conceive of a better system of spreading this relief than is offered by the road program that we have consistently followed for the past 2 years. It reaches into every State and every community of the different States.

Some question was addressed to me on the floor a few days ago in regard to the formula under which this money would be allocated. You are aware of the fact that they used under the old contributing system, one third based on population, one third on mileage, and one third on area, but when we added section 204 within the past year under the Recovery Act there was a change made in the formula which was advantageous to the more populous States, and instead of the old one-third system we have been employing ten twenty-fourths on population, seven twenty-fourths on area, and seven twenty-fourths on mileage. This gives to States, such as New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and the more populous States, an advantage which if you will consider seriously the different elements in the Road Act, they were entitled to. The same formula is carried in the act now proposed to this House.

One feature that I rather regret to express to the House a very serious doubt on is the amount of money which we may possibly secure for this purpose. I think that he who expects, under this authorization, to receive $400,000,000, is just kidding himself. From all the information that we have now, the amount of money we may hope to apply to the activities of our Public Works organization will be very greatly reduced, possibly within a limit of $1,500,000,000. If this is true, it can hardly be expected that we will receive $460,000,000 of that amount. No doubt, we will be required to do what we are frequently faced with the necessity of doing—securing a fair allocation.

On the basis of the apportionment of the money available to the Public Works activity of the past year, the $400,000,000 road fund amounted to about 8 percent of the whole. If we receive this same proportion out of the funds this year, and we should do that as a minimum, there would be applied about $200,000,000 of the money for road purposes. I at least hope that we shall be able to secure this advantage for the continuance of this most important governmental operation.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I notice in reading over the bill there is allowed $50,000,000 for public lands and Indian reservations. Does the gentleman think that amount is needed for public lands and Indian reservations as compared with $400,000,000 for the balance of the country? It seems to me proportionately large when we consider the amount we have spent in those lands during the last few years on roads and trails.

Mr. DRIVER. The gentleman from New York is addressing a question with very considerable meat in it, because I am personally aware that out of the many activities employed during the past year, much of it was directed to the character of work in these Federal areas mentioned by the gentleman, and, therefore, I have no doubt a very considerable amount of the demands have been met, but, of course, I am not peculiarly informed about that. The members of the Roads Committee could possibly give the gentleman more accurate information on that than I am prepared to offer.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] 30 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to oppose this rule which brings the legislation on the floor. I agree it is a subject to which the House should give careful consideration. I am deeply interested in the legislation and the form in which this measure comes before us. The bill comes under the cloak of unemployment relief and yet, as framed, it cannot be classified as anything but "pork barrel." Furthermore, it is a "pork barrel" of the very worst type, because it means if we should allocate the $400,000,000 under this road bill the F.E.R.A., the P.W.A., and other administrations which distribute relief to every city and town in this country will be deprived of money that will be sorely needed.

I do not say this in any partisan spirit because I believe I am in harmony with the administration in this matter.

The other day there was great concern in the House when the Rules Committee reported a bill which would investigate the oil code. Some of the membership felt the proposal was out of step with the Democratic administration. There may have been some question about it, but I do not believe there is any question about this measure. I do not believe the administration wants this House today to authorize $400,000,000 for public roads.

If there were any justification for such a large appropriation it would be as a means of giving relief to the unemployed people of this country. When you bring in this legislation in a way that the great industrial States like New Jersey, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois only secure a small part of the money, it is quite evident the bill is not here to relieve unemployment.

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BEAM. Has the gentleman any information as to just what is the amount of money allotted to the State of Illinois?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Illinois received out of the last appropriation of $325,000,000, $17,000,000.

Mr. BEAM. What was the proportionate amount of taxes paid? Has the gentleman that information?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have not those figures available, but I know Illinois is one of the great tax-contributing States of the Union.

Mr. BEAM. They paid more taxes than the amount of money they received?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. An infinitely larger amount, and they do so every year.

Mr. BEAM. And the same thing is true of New York. Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and New Jersey?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

We, who are from the great industrial sections that pay the bills of the Nation, do not object in good times to having these roads built with these allocation ratios put into effect. We are then willing, because we all know, if we are patriotic citizens, those who have the money must pay to develop the rest of the country.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I heard the gentleman from Massachusetts characterize this measure as a "pork-barrel bill."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Under present conditions, when we are being heavily taxed for relief purposes, if you bring in a bill far in excess of what you would ordinarily appropriate, then I say it is a "pork barrel."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I have heard that term used quite frequently in partisan debate——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is not partisan debate, because I think I stand with the administration at the present time.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I almost thought it was. In the past session, in the N.I.R.A. Act, that carried $400,000,000 for public roads, I do not recall hearing anyone characterize that appropriation as a "pork-barrel" measure.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I answer that question by asking the gentleman a question? Does not the gentleman think if we are only going to have a limited amount of money for relief purposes, and the President and his advisers have so stated, that it is wrong for us to allocate $400,000,000 to sections of the country where the unemployment is not so great?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman seeks to sectionalize the country. This is merely a part of the relief for the unemployed in all the States.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I am not sectionalizing the country at all. I am making the broad appeal in this period of dire distress, in this period of financial stringency, that the resources of the country be devoted to relieving the unemployed of the country. This should be our first purpose.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. This is an authorization for the relief of unemployed, and I submit to the gentleman from Massachusetts the testimony is plain, unequivocal, and cannot be contradicted that moneys expended for the building of roads go to the laboring men in larger proportion than in any other kind of public work. For instance, the testimony before our committee last session was that 85 cents of every dollar of money used in building roads went to the laboring men of this country. If this is not unemployment relief, I cannot understand what could be.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman fails to take into consideration the fact these roads are going to be built in a good many sections of the country where the unemployment is not great. We have taken care of many of the States through processing taxes, and we have taken care of them liberally through direct relief, because in the same States the Federal Government has paid practically every dollar of the relief that has been distributed.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If that is the position of the gentleman, let me say there will never be a time when the more populous States will not be here getting their share in public benefits.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD. Does the gentleman prefer the dole to employment?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is not the question here. I would prefer every city and town in this great country of ours should have an allocation so that through their own projects they may take care of the unemployed. I am interested in seeing that the people who really need relief get it, and this is my purpose in opposing this large allocation today.

Mr. FORD. This measure provides for that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman has said that if we pass this authorization, we will have pork-barrel legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I do not believe you are going to get it. I do not believe the administration will give it to you even if we should authorize it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman agree that under the agency he has mentioned we have had a nonpartisan distribution of funds?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As far as I know, we have; I am not finding fault with the distribution. In my section I have not received any complaint.

Mr ANDREWS of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Can the gentleman give us any information that he has received from the Federal administration of relief?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not want to give any information that I have received over the telephone from gentlemen who may not have desired to be quoted. As I see the question here today, we have in this country at the present moment 10,000,000 more men and women out of work than we had a year ago. That is the statement from a governmental agency, that there are more people out of work at this moment than there were a year ago. If this is a fact—and I do not know whether it is correct or not—I am like Will Rogers, all I know is what I see in the papers, but the report comes from a Government agency. If that is correct, the American people will find it a stern necessity to conserve their money. Funds must be prudently expended and with relief the paramount consideration.

I do not believe it is wise to say to this administration, "We are going to authorize $400,000,000, and you must spend it for this purpose."

I believe the men charged with this great relief program should be trusted to determine the distribution. They should know better than we where it is needed; they should know better than we where it can be spent to the best advantage.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that this Congress has appropriated $950,000,000 for relief without allocation?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How do we know that that is going to be enough? Let us face the situation frankly. The gentleman knows this administration is going to be hard pressed for money to pay the cost of relief in this country, and we must be careful in authorizing expenditures.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that we appropriated $500,000,000 last session and $900,000,000 direct relief, and do I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to increase that amount?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not know whether I do or not. I do not want to make it so that when the people do need relief they are prevented by the action of the House from getting that relief. When there are millions of the people of the country out of work it is a serious problem we are obliged to face.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Is it not possible that the remonetization of silver would solve this question?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Oh, that is too big a subject to tackle right now.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Does the gentleman know of any better way of getting relief than that?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not object to road building. I am objecting to this large amount of money being authorized at this time and the major proportion of the money going to sections of the country where the population is not so great, and the relief need is not so heavy as it is in the large industrial centers.

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Do I understand the gentleman would favor this measure if the money were allocated in States where there is real distress upon the face of the population?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There would be more justification for it, because then it would be here upon its proper basis as a relief measure. Today it appears to be here simply under the cloak of relief so that a large stake can be obtained.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Early in his remarks the gentleman said something about "pork" being in this bill. If I remember correctly, the gentleman voted to change the system of law in regard to the allocation of funds, and as he just indicated he would favor the population basis rather than the road-construction work where roads are really needed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If we are considering distributing the money on merit and justice, there can be but one yardstick and that is population and where the people are out of work. I am not opposing the granting of this rule, but I sincerely hope, when the bill comes before us for consideration, that it will be properly amended.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman know that the $400,000,000 appropriated for road building at the last session of Congress provided for an average amount of unemployment of around 300,000 persons and over half a million persons during the summer time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am objecting to the bill on the ground that a great State like Massachusetts, for illustration, where the unemployment is great; where thousands and thousands of men are walking the streets, a State which is a large contributor to the National Treasury, should have received last year from the appropriation of $400,000,000 only about six and a half million dollars.

Mr. HOLMES. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, for every dollar that Massachusetts got from the highway Federal fund, she contributed back $6 in return.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman is aware that the area of his State, as well as the road mileage, is comparatively small, and that of the $6,000,000 allocated to Massachusetts, about $5,000,000 was used for road and street construction in municipalities, where more people were employed than in any other form of road building.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman but emphasizes what I say. That is true, but people can get hungry in States of large population like Massachusetts, just as well as they can in other States, and if this is a relief measure it should be so used to take care of people who are actually out of work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that this is desirable legislation at the present time. If one should concede that something should be done by the Federal Government for highway construction, the amount carried in this bill, "not less than $400,000,000", plus $50,000,000 to be expended on highways in national parks and national forests, and plus $10,000,000 for emergency purposes, a total of $460,000,000, is beyond all reason.

Undoubtedly, the easy thing to do would be to go along with it and say nothing, but it is so out of harmony with what I think ought to be done that I shall take a moment at least to express my opposition to it.

On the 30th of April of this year, less than 2 weeks ago, the people of the State of Michigan, by a referendum vote, defeated a proposal to bond the State for an institutional and road-construction program by a vote of over 5 to 1. I cannot conceive that they would support this legislation, which would require them by taxation to pay into the Federal Treasury $2, and over, for every dollar that could be allotted to the State out of this fund.

It should be kept in mind that this is for new construction, for the construction of new highways. No part of it can be used for the maintenance of existing highways. It is nothing that must be done to preserve anything under present conditions. It is not to relieve the States from some obligations which they must meet. It is not for the purpose of relieving individuals from obligations which they are unable to meet and which must be met to prevent irreparable loss. It is to make new roads, and if there is any one thing more than another in the United States that we can refrain from doing on a large scale, such as this legislation contemplates, temporarily at least, it seems to me that it is the building of additional highways.

This legislation comes in here under amazing conditions. There is no great popular demand for it that I have sensed. The bill is not recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, nor is it a part of the President's program, as I understand it. The bill comes before the House upon the unsupported statement alone of the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, Mr. MacDonald. Mr. MacDonald is an admirable man, but no one would say of him that he is purely a disinterested witness, on a question relating to the building of roads. There was no other testimony taken before the Committee on Roads than the statement of Mr. MacDonald. There is no report from the Bureau of the Budget and, as I understand it, the bill was not even submitted to the Bureau of the Budget by the Roads Committee, nor by the Department.

I sometimes wonder if there are more than a handful of people in the United States, aside from those directly interested in the building of roads, either in an official capacity or as contractors or material men, who would approve of legislation of this kind under existing circumstances. Certainly the recent vote in Michigan does not indicate that there are.

I have great respect for every official in the road business that I know, from the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads here in Washington, down to the township overseers, of highways of the townships of my State. We have two of the best county road commissions in the State of Michigan in my congressional district. My home county boasts of having the best county road system in the United States, as distinguished from the Federal and State roads, due to our very efficient and capable road commission. The road commissioners are all friends of mine. I have great respect for them. If it were a matter of personal friendship I would vote for this legislation in a moment. I have not heard from them on this legislation and I cannot conceive, under existing conditions, that they would recommend the passage of this bill. Certainly the general public of the State of Michigan, if we can judge from the vote cast 2 weeks ago, would not approve of it.

It is put forward partly on the basis of furnishing employment to the unemployed. As I have said, the hearings are all on one side. The statement is made by the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, Mr. MacDonald, that this appropriation will furnish a certain amount of employment direct and indirect. The calculations as to the indirect employment are very elaborate and involved and not at all convincing to me. I think the conclusions in this respect are largely guesswork.

To point to one inconsistency only. The advocates of this measure say that machines will be done away with in the construction of roads and that as much of the work as possible will be done by hand, so as to give a maximum amount of employment to the unemployed. At the same time, Mr. MacDonald, in the hearings before the committee, in commenting upon the amount of industrial employment that would be created by this appropriation laid emphasis upon—I quote his exact language:

The amount of industrial employment that is provided through the furnishing of materials, transportation—a very large item, the building of equipment, and other supplementary employment, all of which are a part of the operations of road building.

But there is no guesswork about the direct employment which this appropriation will give. On that point Mr. MacDonald is very definite and specific. In that connection it is well to bear in mind that we have in this country at the present time somewhere between eight and twelve millions unemployed. How many people do you suppose are going to be given direct employment per year by this appropriation of $400,000,000?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. In just a moment. I quote from the hearings on page 5. Mr. MOTT, a member of the committee, asked Mr. MacDonald:

How many men are employed now?

I wish the Members of the House would keep this particularly in mind.

Mr. MACDONALD. For January about 130,000 directly. It takes $160 per man-month.

One hundred and thirty thousand out of eight or twelve million unemployed working on the construction of roads!

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I should like to complete this quotation from the hearings and then I will yield.

It takes $160 per man-month. That would mean $16,000,000 per month additional, would it not?

The printed record says "Mr. MOTT" again, but I think that is clearly in error, because Mr. MOTT's name is at the beginning of two consecutive paragraphs, and this is evidently a continuation of the answer of Mr. MacDonald. He goes on to say:

That is near enough; maybe $200,000,000 total. Perhaps $600,000,000 additional appropriation would be needed if you wanted to keep the employment on road work up to the present point for another year.

One hundred and thirty thousand employed in January. It will take, not $400,000,000, as this authorization contemplates, but $600,000,000 to keep 130,000 men employed on road work for a year. If anyone thinks that is going to be of any material help to the unemployed in the United States, then he is just fooled. That is all.

According to my mathematics, that is $4,615 per year for every man who is given a year's employment. Certainly this Congress ought not to pass any such appropriation as that as an unemployment relief measure. The taxpayers simply cannot afford to pay any such sum.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. MAY. In opposing this appropriation, does the gentleman give any weight to the fact that the money is to be expended in making permanent and lasting improvements that are to be used by the entire public of the whole Nation?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; but I think in this time of distress we ought to forego luxuries and take care of the absolute necessities and that we can well cut down on the building of roads.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman regard a pick-and-shovel man's job as a luxury or as a necessity?

Mr. MAPES. I just tried to answer that. The testimony given by the advocates of the legislation, indicates, as I have pointed out before the committee, that it takes $4,615 to provide work for one man for a year under this system.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The 130,000 was for the month of January?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In the middle of the winter. This is out-of-door work, but in all fairness now, will the gentleman not read that part of the director's statement where there is no confusion and no typographical errors, on page 1, where he says:

So in the summer of 1934, at the peak of employment, when we have 280,000 continuous jobs going, we will reach with the supplementary employment added about 1,350,000 men employed by the Federal and State highway programs.

Mr. MAPES. I say to the gentleman that includes the elaborate calculations of Mr. MacDonald as to the direct and indirect employment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I not, in all fairness, direct the gentleman's attention to this statement——

Mr. MAPES. In just a moment. I said at the beginning of my remarks that his calculations for indirect employment were not convincing as far as I was concerned.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The direct employment would be around 5,600,000 men at the peak in June or July, as shown by the hearings.

Mr. MAPES. Yes; but he says it will take $600,000,000 to keep 130,000 men employed over a year. No matter how many are employed at the peak, to keep 130,000 men going for the whole 12 months in the year, taking his own figures, would cost $600,000,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think, if the gentleman would permit, in all deference, that is a typographical error.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I understood the gentleman to state that it would take $600,000 to keep 130,000 men employed for a year.

Mr. MAPES. I did not say that. I quoted the language of Mr. MacDonald, the Chief of the Bureau of Roads.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I am asking for the purpose of getting information. Does that mean 130,000 men employed directly upon roads, or does it include those employed in the supply industries, for instance, the manufacture of cement and other materials?

Mr. MAPES. I repeat what I have said before, that it means those directly employed. The gentleman evidently just came into the Chamber and did not hear my other statement.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I do not agree with the gentleman in his interpretation of the figure given by Mr. MacDonald. That figure was only for the month of March. He said that during the peak employment period in the summer months, half a million people would be working directly on the roads.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, we have gone over that. It is simply the same question the gentleman from Mississippi asked. That does not do away with the fact that Mr. MacDonald said that to keep 130,000 men employed during the year would take $600,000,000.

Mr. MOTT. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that that is not my interpretation of Mr. MacDonald's statement.

Mr. MAPES. That is exactly what Mr. MacDonald said. I do not think it is subject to any difference in interpretation.

Mr. MOTT. If Mr. MacDonald said that, he is wrong.

Mr. MAPES. The Government certainly cannot afford any such expenditure, and the taxpayers should not have this additional burden placed upon them.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I think my friends from the other side of the aisle, especially from the populous centers, are unduly alarmed about the amount of money that will be provided to continue relief activities. I do not think it justifies my Republican friends in opposing the road bill, for I am thoroughly convinced that the $950,000,000 we have appropriated will largely be directed to those big centers and will provide the necessary care for the unemployed in those places.

Another feature of this bill is that under the formula set up for the operation of State administrations, 50 percent only of this money goes to Federal-aid roads, as we term them, the United States roads. Twenty-five percent as a minimum is to be expended within the cities and the towns in order to make the necessary connections with the improved highways. This provision was expressly made in order to provide employment in those populous centers, in order to spread employment, and in order to give the widest possible benefit from the money expended, 25 percent more—really 28.8 percent, for they added 3.8 percent to it—was expended on the farm-to-market roads, carrying that fund into the most remote areas of our Nation in order to give employment and the means of livelihood to those people there who need it.

Let me say to the Members of the House that the very best relief we can carry to the people of this Nation is to give them an honest day's work for an honest dollar [applause]; and that we are undertaking to do through this bill. Let me say further that the very best expenditure we can make of public funds is made when we get in return a permanent and enduring investment; and we certainly get it out of our roads.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. What does this bill provide toward making mandatory the use of hand labor rather than machinery?

Mr. DRIVER. I fully agree with the thought the gentleman has in mind, that wherever we can spread employment we ought to do so.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I am asking what language is carried by the bill to bring about that accomplishment?

Mr. DRIVER. That is a matter that comes within the discretion of the administration of the road organizations.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Of each State?

Mr. DRIVER. Of the States; the same direction there was under the last Federal-aid bill.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that, having been on the Roads Committee, I am familiar with good-roads legislation, and I know it to be a fact that all over the United States, under rules and regulations of the administration of Mr. MacDonald, machinery is not allowed to be used in the building of roads where it is possible to do the work with hand labor. I know from an experience I had in my district. In the case I speak of it was absolutely impossible to do the quarry work and the grinding of the stone by manual labor, but I even had to make a trip to Washington to get an exception made so that they could use machinery for handling rock in the quarry before being ground. The same situation prevails all over the country.

Mr. DRIVER. Manual labor is being employed on this work just as much as possible under the regulations issued by the administration.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I should like to see some specific language carried in this bill if possible to make certain that manual labor is employed to the fullest extent in lieu of machinery, for this bill is in the nature of emergency relief, and the vast majority of these projects can be built by manual labor instead of machinery.

Mr. DRIVER. That will be worked out by the administration.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Arkansas will yield, I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that section 206 of the Public Works Act of 1933, which is applicable to the pending bill, makes it mandatory that hand labor be used instead of machinery where it is possible to use hand labor.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I am glad to get the information.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Speaking of the more populous States, with the permission of the gentleman from Arkansas, I may state that we have 207,000 miles of Federal-aid highways approved, of which only 107,000 have been completed. In the State of Michigan, for instance, there is an approved Federal-aid highway system 5,237 miles in length, of which only 2,339 miles have been completed. In the State of Massachusetts there is an approved Federal-aid highway system 1,494 miles in length, of which only 875 miles have been completed.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, let me say that the amount of money we are here seeking for the purpose of carrying on this road program is not an act for which we are required to make an apology. The present annual receipts from the excise taxes on automobiles and automobile accessories amounts to $280,000,000. This money comes directly from the operation of motor vehicles on the improved highways of this Nation. We say, therefore, that it is only fair to the interests demanding this road legislation that we should share liberally in the amount of money appropriated for further activities of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A NEW DEAL AND THE SOUTH

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by my colleague, Mr. RAMSPECK, over the radio last evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered yesterday by my colleague, Mr. RAMSPECK:

The network over which I am speaking tonight covers the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana, and Arkansas, and for that reason the figures I shall use refer only to those States.

I am grateful to the Columbia Broadcasting System for their invitation to make this address and for the opportunity it gives me to speak to the people of my State and section.

In common with the entire country, on March 4, 1933, the Southern States were prostrate, business and commerce were at a standstill, the banks were closed, and our people viewed the future with little hope.

The magnetic inaugural address of the new President caught their attention. It turned their faces toward the rising sun of a new day, one in which hope was renewed and courage was reestablished. His prompt and effective methods in dealing with the banking crisis electrified the Nation and brought to him the most remarkable support of public sentiment in the history of our country. A willing Congress, convened in special session, rapidly enacted his plans into law.

In less than 100 days the Congress wrote into law emergency legislation constituting the first chapter of the new deal, thus making it possible for the President to organize the agencies that have wrought such a change in conditions throughout the country. Never before in America has a President had such loyal support from Congress, and never before have our people recovered so rapidly from the deplorable conditions of a panic.

The Southern States referred to, in common with the other States of the Union, have received concrete results from the new deal. Federal money has been spent freely to "prime the pump", thus starting the wheels of private business and industry. As a result, millions of our people have been reemployed.

To get a clear picture of the remarkable success of the new deal, we need only to scan the prices of commodities in March of last year and compare them with those existing today. Cotton and wheat have almost doubled in price. Steel mills and automobile factories are again operating at high speed, and other industries long closed down have been reopened and are sending their products throughout the land.

Retail sales have climbed rapidly. The people are showing new courage as all lines of private activity take on new life. In fact, so rapid has been the improvement that some selfish people are now inclined to be critical. They are like the sick person, who, beginning to recover from an illness, feels like dismissing the doctor whose attention is restoring him to normal health. We must at this time have patience. We must not dismiss the doctor until we are sure that recovery is permanent. We must be sure that we do not return to the abuses and excesses which brought about the panic of 1929.

The Government, during the first year of the new deal, has put into operation relief and other agencies that have distributed in the States named approximately $1,237,000,000.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has paid to the farmers of the States named $91,000,000 for rentals, cotton options, and other benefits accruing under legislation enacted to help agriculture. For the first time in many years the farmers of the South made money last year. They were enabled to pay their debts and to buy many things they needed from the merchants of the towns and cities of our section.

It was my privilege to handle the bill for the establishment of the Civilian Conservation Corps for the administration when it came up for consideration in the House. This organization took from the streets 300,000 young men, gave them healthy outdoor employment, and enabled them to send money home to their dependents. The sum of $68,000,000 has been spent in the States named for this purpose. The work of these young men has largely improved the value of our forests, prevented forest fires, and greatly aided in the conservation of our timber resources. The President is deeply interested in this matter, and I am happy to have had a part in its creation.

The Public Works Administration allotted to the States named $67,000,000 for the purpose of building highways. This money is being spent in the cities and towns as well as on the main highways. It is furnishing much employment and is assisting our States in completing their highway systems. This agency has also allotted to these States $296,000,000 for other public-works projects, such as construction of waterworks, sewerage, bridges, and public buildings for cities and towns. We expect to appropriate further sums for public works before this session of Congress adjourns, including additional funds for roads and for the building of post offices and other Federal buildings.

The Farm Credit Administration, created to supply our farm population with proper credit facilities, has loaned in the States named $128,000,000. These funds have saved many farmers from foreclosure on their lands and provided loans for making crops. It has reduced their interest rates and gives them liberal terms of repayment.

Our great President believes that no citizen of our country should be permitted to suffer for want of food and clothing. For carrying out this belief Congress appropriated funds and the President established the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. It has expended in the States named $105,000,000 for civil works and $90,000,000 for direct relief for those who could not be employed.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been expanded under the new deal. Before the creation of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration this agency loaned the States for relief the sum of $82,000,000. It has also loaned in these States $242,000,000 to banks, railroads, and other financial institutions, including large sums for the payment of depositors in closed banks. This agency has saved many of our institutions from bankruptcy, thus protecting the savings of millions of our citizens. Before Congress adjourns I hope to see it authorized to make direct loans to individuals and corporations to help them expand employment.

In the belief that many persons in cities would be helped by enabling them to own small farms, the President provided a plan for establishing subsistence farms. For this purpose, in the States named, there has been allotted three and one half million dollars. Other such projects are now under consideration. This plan will provide a new and better life for many of our citizens now stranded in the cities.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has saved in the States named approximately 25,000 homes from foreclosure, having loaned for this purpose $60,000,000. These loans are made at reasonable rates of interest and upon liberal terms of repayment. The creation of this agency will, in my opinion, permanently improve the conditions under which home building is financed. It is my hope that this Congress will provide further funds for building new homes, and especially for the renovation of the thousands of buildings now in need of repairs. I believe that the building industry can and will furnish much employment if these funds are made available.

The new deal has brought to the South the Tennessee Valley Authority, a Government-owned corporation for the development of the Tennessee Valley. Under its operations our electric-power facilities will be enlarged, prices of such power reduced, and it is expected that many new industries will be attracted to that section.

I have given you a brief summary of the direct money benefits that have come to our section through the new deal. Similar benefits have gone to each State in the country. Thus the impetus has been furnished for the revival of private business and industry. Thus employment has been furnished for millions of our fellow citizens. Thus hope has been brought back and courage for the future revived.

In creating the machinery for the new deal the Congress has shown its loyalty to the President in a degree never before equaled in the history of our country. We have been accused of passing anything the President wanted without consideration. This is not true; but we have given him our utmost support in most instances, and we believe that in this emergency it was our duty to so cooperate with the President.

In the Congress the Southern States have had a leading part in shaping the legislation asked for by the President. The leader of the majority forces in the Senate is from Arkansas. The House majority leader hails from Tennessee. Many of the chairmen of the leading and most important committees in both branches of the Congress come from the States in which my talk is being heard tonight. These men and women in the Congress have worked long hours in an effort to uphold the hands of our great leader. All of the Members of Congress and Senators from these Southern States have loyally aided the new deal through their support of the measures designed by the administration to bring relief to the suffering population of our country.

The success of the new deal has been due not only to the rapid cooperation of Congress and loyal public sentiment favorable to its aims throughout the country, but also to the courageous and inspiring leadership of that great President who occupies the White House. His heart beats in sympathy with the masses of our people. He is the new deal. His courage and his honest effort to operate the Government in the interest of all of the people has brought to America a new day and a new hope.

In putting into effect the policies of the new deal, the President has called to his aid many of the outstanding men and women of the Southern States. This has aided our section because it brings to the Government machine a better understanding of our problems and our needs. These men and women of the South are filling many positions of importance and power in the new deal. Time does not permit me to name them, but they are rendering effective and capable service in every branch of the Government.

The people of the South are for the new deal almost without exception. They recognize in the President a man who is a part-time citizen of our section, who understands us. They have seen the beneficial results of his efforts. They have confidence in this great humanitarian and under his direction they will carry on with him to the end that we may all enjoy a more abundant civilization in America.

NOTHING NEW UNDER THE SUN

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the Bible is the most remarkable of all books. It is the anvil against which the hammers of ignorance, bigotry, and superstition in all ages have beaten themselves out. From its inspired pages can be drawn inspiration to make wise the foolish, satisfy the ambitious, caution the careless, and encourage the discouraged. Its philosophies are as sound as truth; it scales the heights and it plumbs the depths of all human activities, mental and physical. The author of the book of Ecclesiastes was reaching high into the ether of philosophy when he said:

> The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and
> That which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun.
> Is there anything whereof it may be said: See, this is new?
> It hath been already of old time which was before us.

There is a strong tendency in these modern days to doubt the philosophy of the author of this book of the Bible who styles himself in his first verse as the preacher, the son of David, the King of Jerusalem. For in these days of the new deal and the "brain trust" we are led to believe that our problems are all new and that the methods employed by the administration in solving our problems are new in the history of governments. But, verily, "there is no new thing under the sun."

There has recently come to my attention an article written by a student of the history of governments that shows a most interesting and striking parallel between the conditions and events of our day and the conditions and events of the days of 2,000 years ago. Most of what I say hereafter in this article is taken literally or in substance from that article, the subject of which is Novae Tabulae, which means "new accounts" or "new deal." This was the name applied to the economic program of Diocletian, who ruled Rome in the third century of the Christian Era.

In the year 285 A.D. Rome was at low tide. Diocletian believed that the time had come to remodel society. He decided that the Emperor should be the sole fountainhead and source of authority, and that his edicts should be the law of the land. He undertook a planned economy. He divided the Roman Empire into provinces and kept them all under his domination and proceeded to inaugurate a system of benevolent despotism. History records that while "the image of the ancient constitution was religiously preserved in the Senate, its authority became moribund in consequence of a lack of defenders."

Another historian writes, "He was an inveterate organizer of governmental bodies." A multitude of inferior officers lay heavy on each territory and almost each city. There were conservators of different degree and deputies of administrators. A public-works program was planned. He built public halls, factories, and places of amusement. The project at Reedsville, W.Va., fostered and mothered by the First Lady of our land, was probably patterned after his plans. A great army of collectors were sent out to collect the revenue from the people. The currency was debased. Formerly the number of aurei coined from a pound of gold was 50. Diocletian ordered that this should be changed so that 60 would be the required number. Then he changed this to 72, where he pegged it in true modern style. Silver, too, was coined in true Bryan ratio of 14.7 to 1. In order to assist him the better in holding his power over money, he burned all books and scientific information teaching the art of making gold. When his money manipulations failed, he proceeded to control the prices of commodities. One of his edicts published by way of inscription is extant today. It reads like the product of the modern "brain trust." With great vehemence he dwells upon the greed of the money changers much after the fashion of a more modern executive with dictatorial tendencies, and proceeds to fix prices of all the commodities of life and to regulate the wages of laborers, artisans, and school teachers. This was a gigantic experiment in government by codes. His experiment was a disastrous failure. He also inaugurated an A.A.A., which included all the principles of the modern A.A.A., including the now famous Bankhead brothers' cotton formula. He undertook to restrict the production of grapes and ordered the plowing up of one third of the vineyards of Italy. He did not bother to write into the law any language giving him authority to inflict punishment or to lay penalties. He did that without any statutory sanction. He had that advantage over President Roosevelt, who, although enjoying more power than any other President ever enjoyed, has not yet the power to lay penalties without some sort of a trial.

In effect, though he has much of this kind of power when he turns loose that modern Nero, General Johnson, to seek out those whom he may devour and who is ever ready with his administratiion gun to crack down on those who, although probably acting within their full constitutional rights, incur his displeasure. When Diocletian found a farmer unusually prosperous, he did not give him credit for industry and frugality, but proceeded to punish him for not keeping within the restrictions. This is the practice in Soviet Russia. This is the course which the administration is taking under the guidance of that group of young agricultural reds who are headed by Secretary Wallace. Farming by force of bureaucratic power is not conducive to that great freedom that should come to him who tills the soil; but, on the contrary, it harks back to the days of peonage and feudal servitude.

Diocletian's bureaucratic system failed and loaded the government with an intolerable debt from which it was never able to extricate itself. So great were the debts and so far was the budget out of balance and so heavy were the taxes that people everywhere gave up trying to pay them until those who were delinquent with their taxes far outnumbered the wage earners of the country. How tragic, yet how modern! "Farms were abandoned, cultivated ground became woodland, and universal dismay prevailed." Verily, "there is nothing new under the sun."

The unstatesmanlike activities of Diocletian marked the beginning of the end of the Roman Empire. Gradual was the decline of the Roman Empire from that time. Thereafter followed an unending series of clamors and conflicts. (May the chain of similarity break here.) Diocletian became more and more a dictator. Access to him became more and more difficult, for he was surrounded by many scholae—which is Latin for "brain trust"—who kept him from the contact with the common people. Our President should beware of the advice of those who seem to think that our national activities so far have been a gigantic failure, and that a new deal transferring sovereignty from the people to a dictator is the only way to "proclaim liberty throughout the land and unto the inhabitants thereof." Our national memories are our richest heritage and proudest possessions.

While the points of similarity between the events of the present administration and those of the rule of Diocletian have been cited, we feel no uneasiness from any thought of imminent danger, but let us profit by the mistakes of Diocletian. Let us remember what Thomas Jefferson wrote to James Madison when he was discussing the tyranny of the legislative branch of government. He said:

> The tyranny of the executive power will come in its turn but at a more distant period. History is repeating itself making only such changes of program as the growth of the nations and citizens require.

THE ROADS BILL

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Cartwright bill, H.R. 8781, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object merely to ask some questions; may I ask the gentleman whether or not his committee would be favorable to an amendment to this bill which would require all those employed by the expenditure of this money to be American citizens?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I cannot agree to anything of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. In some sections the contractors have employed aliens from foreign countries, and the white citizens, who have for generations lived in those States, get very little of this employment. The bill should be amended in this respect. I am going to insist on such an amendment. This ought to be an American bill for Americans only.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is.

Mr. BLANTON. We should restrict this expenditure in that way. I am going to offer such an amendment and I hope the committee will help us get it passed.

My attention, Mr. Chairman, has just been called to the fact that the provision we put in a former bill requiring that only Americans, or those who had already filed their papers to become American citizens, should be employed, will apply to this measure, and will prevent aliens from being employed, hence it will not be necessary for me to offer the amendment I mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, my rising at this time is caused by certain remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON]. As far as I am concerned I have always voted for good roads, and I am in favor of this bill. I reserve, of course, the right not to go beyond any appropriation which the administration may want.

It may be true that the great State of New York will contribute about $135,000,000 of the total amount in taxes. It is also true that that State will only receive $22,000,000, I understand, as its allotment, but I think that is a very narrow view to take, because the people of New York are interested in the entire country. They use the roads of the entire country to a certain extent the same as people from other States use our New York roads, and I do not think we should approach the question from any such narrow sectional viewpoint.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman misses the point entirely. That might be true if this was a road bill coming here in the ordinary way, but this bill comes here in the disguise of a relief measure to help unemployment. That being the case, does not the gentleman think the millions of people who are unemployed in Massachusetts and New York should be given full consideration?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think they have been and will be taken care of in other ways, as has been pointed out heretofore.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But now is the time to take care of them.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think any road-building program is a national program and should not be considered from that viewpoint.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC ROADS

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, Federal responsibility in cooperating with the States in the building of roads is not a new issue. The first Federal-aid road was built under the supervision of President Thomas Jefferson in 1806. While this effort in colonial times was not continued, the Federal Government 24 years ago, by the appointment of a special committee of the Congress composed of 5 Senators and 5 Representatives, made an exhaustive study of this situation. Their investigation covered a period of 2 years. They reported to Congress, unanimously, that it was a Federal responsibility and duty to cooperate with the States in building an interstate system of highways. They based their decision on the following constitutional provisions: (a) National defense, (b) interstate commerce; (c) Postal Service, (d) general welfare. Following this report of the special congressional committee, the Congress, in 1916, made an authorization of $5,000,000 to cooperate with the States in building roads, having in mind to demonstrate the practicability of this movement.

ROAD POLICY ADOPTED

Ever since that time not a single year has elapsed that there have not been some Federal funds provided for this work. It has not been a partisan issue, and I am glad to say that every bill reported out of the House Committee on Roads during these 18 years covering this subject, has received a unanimous report from the committee.

Following the approval of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921, under which a definite system of roads was outlined, for the construction of which Federal funds might be expended, each Congress has made an authorization for the carrying out of this act with varying amounts.

EMERGENCY ROAD APPROPRIATIONS

Three years ago an extra appropriation of $80,000,000 was made in addition to the regular Federal aid of $125,000,000, to aid in the employment of more men in highway work, due to the lack of employment in commercial lines. The situation not improving, the following year an emergency appropriation of $120,000,000 was made, and this was in addition to the regular authorization of $125,000,000. Last year the situation became so desperate in the unemployment problem that, under the National Recovery Act, we made an appropriation of $400,000,000. This fund, however, was not made available to the States until about the 1st of August. All lines of industry were so slow to absorb the unemployed in jobs that the administration urged the highway departments to place all of this $400,000,000 immediately under contract. This entailed a vast amount of work in the preparation of plans so that the funds might be judiciously expended. However, that part of the work has now so well advanced that today about 88 percent of that fund is obligated for contract and, of course, some has already been expended.

PURPOSES OF BILL OUTLINED

The bill before you contemplates an authorization for the same amount as made by the last session. Your committee has unanimously recommended this authorization, basing their request upon a very detailed investigation and complete statement from the Bureau of Public Roads, through the Chief of the Bureau, Thomas H. MacDonald, showing that the funds now obligated for contract will be, to a large extent, transferred into labor by the last of August.

These projects will be carried on in 90 percent of the counties of the United States, and at the peak of employment there will be directly and indirectly employed, over 1,000,000 men. In view of this situation and the fact that there are still millions of men unemployed, it seems that it would be a catastrophe should this vast number of men be thrown out of employment in September.

NEED FOR THIS AMOUNT—ROAD USER PAYS THE BILL

It was also disclosed at the hearings held by the committee that even with the authorization of the same amount as appropriated last year, the entire road program for the country for 1935 will not equal that of this year—1934. This is due to the fact that State funds have been greatly depleted or transferred to other purposes to aid in the unemployment situation. It should always be remembered that the States are required to bear all the expense of road maintenance.

Likewise we should realize that the returns to the Federal Treasury from taxes levied directly upon the road user and indirectly through sales taxes show that the entire $400,000,000 authorized will be returned to the Treasury from these sources during the period of its expenditure. The gasoline tax, together with motor-license fees and miscellaneous taxes as paid by the highway user last year, amounted to $257,000,000. If they pay, they should have more roads and better roads.

OPERATES UNDER RECOVERY ACT

As I have stated before, the first section of this bill before you would authorize $400,000,000 to be appropriated and expended under the provisions of section 204 of the National Industrial Recovery Act. This means that the funds will be expended under the Bureau of Public Roads by the same methods as have been adopted for the expenditure of the present funds. All of the provisions concerning employment, wages, hours, and so forth, that now prevail in the National Industrial Recovery Act will apply to the expenditure of these funds, including funds for the construction of "feeder roads."

The only addition to that section proposed by your committee is granting permission for the expenditure of not to exceed 1½ percent of the fund allotted to any State to be used for making surveys and preparing plans for projects for future construction on the Federal-aid system. It seems wise for us to make provision for future work and aid the States in this important particular.

ROADS THROUGH GOVERNMENT-OWNED LAND

The next section of this bill makes provision for the authorization of $50,000,000 to be expended for highways in Government-owned land, such as the main highways through the national forests, national parks, Indian reservations, and public lands. This is a rightful policy of long standing, and is so well understood that it seems to me unnecessary to make further explanations as to the necessity and value of this work.

SPECIAL RELIEF ROAD FUNDS

The third section of the bill sets up $10,000,000 as an emergency relief fund to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture, under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, in such States as may have suffered destruction of highways resulting from floods, hurricanes, earthquakes, or landslides. It has seemed needful for several years for the Federal Government, under these special cases, to make special appropriation to rebuild highways destroyed under circumstances over which we have no control. This special fund will permit the carrying out of this work without it being necessary to bring in, from time to time, special bills for special States, covering conditions that warrant such appropriations.

RESTRICTIONS REMOVED

Section 4 of the bill proposes to make permanent the legislation which now exists and has existed for 3 years, of setting aside the old regulations that do not permit the construction of roads into towns of greater population than 2,500 and limits Federal funds to $15,000 per mile. This has not been a practical thing during recent conditions. In fact, authorities, both State and Federal, have felt for some time that this is a restriction that no longer is needful and which is really a hindrance in many instances.

REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS WITHDRAWN

When the emergency appropriation of $80,000,000 was provided several years since, it was thought that the unemployment situation was so temporary that deductions could be made from any future Federal aid granted to the States to replace this appropriation. Therefore that bill provided that this money was to be repaid by the States in amounts of one fifth per year out of future authorizations. Unemployment still persisting the next year when the $120,000,000 emergency road fund was provided, that bill proposed that 0.1 per year of the fund be subtracted from future Federal appropriations. It can readily be seen that the conditions of these obligations would soon leave the patient without any funds left from authorizations made. In view of the continued unemployment situation and the great value of road work well illustrated by the appropriation made last year, your committee feels that those provisions concerning the repayment of these funds should be repealed.

GREAT NEED FOR IMMEDIATE AUTHORIZATION

This is an authorization, as you well know, and not an appropriation. The amount of actual cash needed for the remainder of this calendar year from this authorization will be very small. If this bill passes, provision, of course, will be made by our Committee on Appropriations covering the needs at that time. It is highly important, however, that we make an authorization at this time in order that the States may know what to depend upon. They must provide for surveys and plans in order that there may be a continued program after the 1st of September instead of a period of time elapsing during which thousands of men will have no employment whatsoever.

OKLAHOMA

Of the funds allotted to the States under the National Recovery Act during the past session the quota for my State, Oklahoma, was $9,216,798. Of this amount on the 5th of May our highway department had under obligation for construction $8,552,000, or 92.2 percent of the entire allotment.

It can readily be seen, then, how necessary it is for my State, which is typical of most other States, that we should make arrangements at this session for a continuing road program if we desire to keep thousands of men from being thrown out of employment.

OTHER STATES

The following table gives, by States, the apportionment of this fund and the amount obligated as of May 5, 1934:

Wyoming	4,501,327	4,275,000	95.0
District of Columbia	1,918,469	1,918,000	100.0
Hawaii	1,871,062	1,613,000	86.2
Total	394,000,000	345,223,000	87.6

This table shows the amount of Federal funds obligated as of last Saturday, May 5, for highways in the several States under the Recovery Act total $345,223,000. It shows an average for all of the States of 87.6 percent of the total amount being obligated to definite contracts. This is complete proof that the funds under this legislation will all be transferred into labor by early fall, and unless this Congress makes arrangement before adjournment for additional funds, hundreds of thousands of men will be out of employment.

CLOSING

In closing I wish to say that much valuable time could be spent in delineating the wonderful progress made in building a system of highways in this country that are interstate in character and are of great commercial and social value to the entire country; but the work is far from completion. There are over 3,000,000 miles of highways in the United States and less than 800,000 miles of highways that have any kind of surfacing whatsoever.

It should be a matter of great satisfaction to all to realize that the funds expended for road building, in addition to furnishing employment in virtually every county in the United States, is adding to the permanent wealth of each community. This work is being supervised with economy and integrity, which should be a source of great satisfaction to all high-minded citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is there any provision in this bill which would prevent convict labor from being used on this work?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that there is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think such a provision should be included?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I do not think so.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mrs. KAHN. As long as this is primarily an unemployment measure, would the committee accept an amendment confining the materials used to materials of American manufacture only, because this would certainly spread employment?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. We should not be technical with the State highway commissions. They should have some latitude.

Mrs. KAHN. We do this in connection with other departments of government. We compel the War Department and the Navy Department to buy American-made goods and as this is an unemployment measure I do not see any objection to including a provision in the bill that the road materials used shall be of American manufacture. This certainly would spread employment.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who have criticized this bill seem to have proceeded upon the assumption that we are here authorizing the appropriation of a large amount of money which, but for the bill, would not be expended at all. This is not the case.

The money that will be used for road construction under this bill will come from the funds made available by the Public Works bill which is to be passed at this session. Nobody knows, of course, just how much this will be. It may be a billion and a half, it may be two billions, or it may be two billions and a half. But whatever the amount may be, this money to be appropriated in the Public Works bill is going to be expended for public projects throughout the United States. It is going to be spent both for the purpose of helping to solve the unemployment problem and for the purpose of building sound public works.

Now, this billion and a half or two billion dollars—it is going to be spent in any event. It is all going to be spent whether this road bill passes or not. What this bill does—and this is the whole issue here involved—is to earmark $460,000,000 of that Public Works money for road construction. Instead of allowing all of the $2,000,000,000 to be expended in the discretion of one man or one bureau, we declare by this bill that the Congress shall have something to say about how part of it, at least, is to be expended. In other words, in this bill Congress is at last reasserting itself and is recapturing a part of the jurisdiction it surrendered to the executive department last session.

We think if the Government is going to tax the people for a Public Works program of $2,000,000,000, or whatever the sum may be, that out of that fund an amount of at least as much as the $400,000,000 authorized by this bill ought to be earmarked for the purpose of building roads.

Personally, I think the entire amount to be appropriated in a Public Works bill ought to be earmarked by Congress for definite, specific purposes. That is an issue we will have to meet and solve when the time comes. So far as roads are concerned, we face the issue now, and we are going to earmark the amount of Public Works money we think ought to be expended for roads.

If this authorization is made we will have to go to the Appropriations Committee for the actual appropriation bill. Maybe we will get the entire amount and maybe we will not, but whatever we get for roads we will get it by virtue of our own authority as the lawmaking body of the Nation and not as a gift or a favor from the Public Works Administrator or any other executive officer.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is it not true that the allocation of this money, if appropriated, will be along the same line as set out in the National Recovery Act.

Mr. MOTT. The bill provides that it shall be expended under the provisions of section 204 of the National Recovery Act. That, however, is purely an administrative feature of this bill, providing for the manner and method of distributing and expending the money authorized to be appropriated by this bill.

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. COLE. Can the gentleman tell us, if he knows, how much of the $2,900,000,000 of Public Works fund, remaining after the $400,000,000 for roads was taken out, went into roads in addition to the $400,000,000, under the 70-30 contribution?

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman refers to the Public Works expenditures for roads in last session's bill? I could not answer that question, because I do not know that any such Federal money went into roads aside from the roads allotment item in the Public Works bill.

Mr. COLE. A great deal of it went into roads, I may advise the gentleman, under a 30-percent outright gift.

Mr. MOTT. I do not see that that is important. About $400,000,000 went into road construction under last session's bill. If the Public Works Administrator spent more than that, it was because of the almost unlimited emergency power the bill gave him. His power, I think, may very properly be restricted in the next P.W.A. bill.

I was interested in the observations of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], that this bill is pork-barrel legislation, and in the observation of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], that there was no demand for it.

Let me answer the first criticism by saying that if legislation which gives to all the people of the United States, and to all of the States, the same thing equally, and which gives them meritorious projects that they all are in legitimate need of, if that is pork-barrel legislation, then pork-barrel legislation is something much less objectionable than I had imagined.

As to the criticism that there is no demand for the legislation, the facts do not bear out that assertion. There is no legislation that has been proposed at this session or at the last session that has met a greater or more urgent demand than this. There is no legislation that has so met the general approval of all the people or that has been so popular as this road legislation. And the reason for it is this: The people all want roads and the road money has been expended in such a way that there has been no ground for criticism from anyone in any part of the country.

People have criticized the Government for the money that has been spent on the Boulder Dam. They have criticized the expenditure of money for Muscle Shoals. The same criticism has been directed by different people from different sections of the country against almost every public project that has been undertaken. But no criticism has ever been directed by anybody, in any section of the country, against expenditures of Federal money for roads.

The reason for that is that everybody needs roads, everybody wants roads, everybody knows about roads, and everybody uses the roads. When we use our Public Works money for road building we are using it for a purpose we are familiar with and for a purpose we all approve of.

We have commissions composed of experts who make programs for road building in every State. In every county we have county boards, and boards of county commissioners whose business it is to make roads. Road building is the one form of public works that the people themselves are familiar with.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman think that this $400,000,000 is to come out of the sum for Public Works?

Mr. MOTT. Certainly. This will come out of what is appropriated for the Public Works fund. This bill earmarks $400,000,000 of the Public Works money so that it cannot be used for any other purpose than road construction.

Now, there is another point I want to bring out, and I think it is important. It has become more and more the policy of the Federal Government in recent years to participate in the road-building programs of the States. The reasons for this are two. In the first place the States alone can no longer build the kind of roads that the people of the United States need. The highway system of our country has become too extensive and too expensive for the States themselves to finance under their old obsolete systems of State taxation. Neither in my State nor in any other State can we build by State taxation alone the roads that modern interstate automobile traffic requires. No State has money enough to do that. Our highway problem has ceased to be a State problem. It has become a national problem. I think the time will come and I hope it will come soon, when the matter of road building in all parts of the United States will be almost entirely a function of the Federal Government and this bill takes a long step toward that goal.

I do not see how there can be any just criticism of this bill. As I said a moment ago we are going to expend this money for public works anyway. Why not expend part of it for the kind of public works that will do the most permanent good to the greatest number of people? For the kind of public works that will distribute the money most equitably and which will furnish the most employment to the people who need it most. Public money spent for roads will do all this. It will furnish honest, honorable employment in every community in the United States, and that employment will result in the creation of honest public projects which everyone wants and which every community needs. This bill deserves to pass unanimously.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not quite agree with some of my brethren on the Republican side in their opposition to this measure. I expect to support it. There is one feature advanced by gentlemen on the Republican side that has merit to it and that is that probably a greater proportion of this appropriation should go to the more populous States. Let me give you a little bit of the history of how this system of allocation was heretofore developed. When the N.R.A. bill was being prepared in the Ways and Means Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, we had that matter under consideration and gave it a great deal of thought. At first it was decided that we would apportion 25 percent of this amount to be divided among the States according to population, but later, after more deliberate consideration, it was decided that 12½ percent would be probably the more accurate amount. Therefore, this proposition made by gentlemen on the Republican side is not a new proposition. While it has a good deal of merit, there is no reason why this program, if it is meritorious, which I think it is, should not be carried forward, that argument to the contrary notwithstanding.

If you will bear with me for a moment I should like to explain to you just how the road money was divided before the N.I.R.A. was passed. It was divided on three bases, first, the factor of population of the States. The second factor was the area of the State, and the next factor was the road mileage of the State, a third to each. You can see how reasonable that would be to a great State like New York, having a great population, or, let us take Massachusetts, a smaller State in area.

Massachusetts is a small State in area but quite a large State in population. She would get her road mileage because of her population. Now, take Montana, for instance. A large State in area and mileage, with a sparse population. Unless we should have some protection for her by way of mileage and area she would be cut out. So this is a properly considered formula, but when the N.I.R.A. came up for consideration, it was primarily an emergency law, it was primarily a law to relieve unemployment, and we took out the first 12½ percent and set it aside to be divided according to population. At that time I was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and was in favor of the 25 percent, because I thought it was right, and from the standpoint of policy. I come from a State of large population, and it would have meant eight or nine million dollars more for Ohio. However, I was glad to get 12½ percent, but would have voted for the old formula had it been necessary to employ it as the formula of distribution.

What I rose for today is not to argue for this measure, for I think it will carry. I want to propose an amendment to this bill, and I think my amendment will receive unanimous support, because it is fair and it is honest, and it is practical. I have talked to practically every member of the committee, and all of those to whom I have talked have agreed to it, and the chairman of the committee expresses no unwillingness. I know my colleagues from Ohio, especially the southern part of Ohio, will support me to the limit in what I have to say with reference to it, and I want your attention on this proposition for the remainder of my time.

The N.I.R.A. does not provide how this money shall be disposed of after this allocation is made. Take States like Ohio. She got $16,000,000. The law provides that the money will be disposed of according to the regulations laid down by the Federal Highway Department of the Department of Agriculture in collaboration with the State highway director. Very well. Let us take the $16,000,000 appropriated to the State of Ohio. The Federal highway director wrote out some regulations, and I have a copy of them here. Here is what they are. First, not more than 50 percent of the funds going to each State shall go to the main market roads. That means the Federal highways. Well, next it provides that not less than 25 percent shall go to the State highways going through municipalities. There is no restriction as to what municipalities are included or excluded. But the language says that not more than 25 percent shall go to secondary or feeder roads; I repeat not more than 25 percent. That means nothing, for all he needs to do is to apply $1 and that would be a compliance. If the State highway director wants to keep it for his own organization to work on the main thoroughfare, he may do so. I want that language changed so that it shall read "not less than 25 percent shall go to secondary and feeder roads, including rural routes and school bus routes." That is right and that is fair.

Let me put it to a test to show you how it is right and how it is fair. We tested it out in the State of Ohio. Here is the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SECREST] whose district adjoins mine, and he knows that I speak the truth. We started a movement in my district. It was started by the rural mail carriers. A very intelligent and up-to-date county engineer in my district, whose name is Mr. Chauncey Fife, started this movement. I want to give him credit, because he was the real originator of this idea. We put this to a test, and some of those interested went to the State highway commissioner to see if he would not give us something on township roads as feeder roads. He interpreted feeder roads to mean State roads that feed into the main-market roads. We maintained that that was not the intention, that was not the interpretation intended, because all of these State highway directors are jealous of their power. They want to distribute the money on the roads over which they have jurisdiction. They do not want to distribute the money on roads over which they have no jurisdiction because their political organization is not strengthened by that kind of a program.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. Is the gentleman reading from the N.I.R.A. when he says that not less than 25 percent?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I am reading from the regulations of the National Highway Commission in collaboration with the State commissions. There is nothing in the N.I.R.A. with reference to that.

Mr. FULLER. Oh, there certainly must be. It uses 25 percent—25 percent and 50 percent repeatedly.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It does not say that. That is where the language is lame. It apportions the money to the States, but it does not apportion it after the State gets it. It leaves it to the State highway department. Here is the language:

> On which projects shall be submitted by the State highway department and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That is the language. That is not sufficient.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The allocations were made by regulation, but I am not at all in accord with the gentleman's statement, and I really think he has overstated the matter insofar as the views of the committee are concerned. I want to effectuate the purpose that you have in Ohio. My judgment is that the bill as written will do the very thing the gentleman desires. In this connection I want to call attention to regulation 4 of the rules and regulations, so as to show that the very thing for which the gentleman is contending may be done without doing an injustice to other States in the Union under existing law.

Mr. FULLER. It is in the rules and regulations, then?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am reading regulation no. 4.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But will the gentleman read the latter part of it? The regulation provides for not more than 50 percent for highways, not less than 25 percent for extensions through municipalities, and not more than 25 percent for feeder or secondary roads, and then further provides:

Upon a proper showing by any State that either all needed improvements on extensions of the Federal-aid highway system into and through municipalities can be completed with an expenditure less than 25 percent of the State's apportionment, or that municipal authorities are unable or unwilling to obtain the necessary rights-of-way for needed improvements, or for other reasons, the Secretary of Agriculture may revise the above percentages with reference to such State. The reconstruction of existing facilities that are adequate for traffic shall not be considered needed improvements.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I can answer the gentleman's question by showing the practical method in which it is enforced. The language which the gentleman read does not mean as much as a snap of your finger. The language says "not more than 25 percent." That is captious language. That is language put in there for a particular purpose, so that they are not bound to give anything. It says "not more than 25 percent." We organized our district on this matter—the Rural Carriers' Association, the County Commissioners' Association, and the County Engineers' Association—and we got about 35 counties in southeastern Ohio into our organization, and we went before the Governor of Ohio, and how much do you suppose we were getting out of that $16,000,000? We were not getting a dime for these little roads. We took 150 citizens right into the main office of the Governor of Ohio. We met his engineers there, and we told them how this was, and we sent a representative down to Washington to the Federal Highway Department. The Federal Highway Department told us they were not going to hold up on that 25 percent but were willing for a liberal interpretation of that. But the director of highways in Ohio wanted to maintain his organization; and that is the way they are everywhere. I can prove that by the testimony of people who have been to see me about my proposed amendment.

I am not asking just for the State of Ohio. North Carolina is interested. There are many States interested in this proposition, because it is a fair proposition. It is a fair road proposition. What is the use letting the State highway director draw up regulations with the force of a law when we know what we want? Let us tell him and not let him tell us. We want 25 percent of this money to go to the school busses, the rural routes, and to the farmers' routes. I have an amendment that is carefully prepared and meets the situation in any State. It has the approval of the rural mail carriers all over the Nation. It has the approval of the school teachers of the Nation. It has the approval of the school children—God bless them. It has the approval of the farmers.

Mr. MAY. So the farmer can drive a dairy wagon into town?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes. In most of the Southern States they are called "feeder roads" and "farm-to-market roads." Now, this amendment is not a sectional amendment. It is not a political amendment. It is a question of whether or not you want to say to the county commissioners and township trustees in the out-of-the-way places that you want to arrange that some of this money can be spent on their roads where they can put pick-and-shovel men and teams to work in their own communities, or do you want all the money spent on the main thoroughfares—on the roads that have already been built at $100,000 a mile? I say it is right and it is fair, and I want the sanction of this committee. I am a little zealous about it because I have been in the battle to bring justice to groups of the Nation's best people. I have tested it out. It is right and fair and proper.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I suggest to the gentleman that his grievance is against his State authorities and not against the law, and that you ought not handicap every other State in the Union because you are not getting what you want.

It is not enough to say that the money may be used; we should say that the money must be used.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, every word my colleague from Ohio has uttered is true; and he has not stated the half of it. The same condition exists in northwestern, northeastern, and in every other part of Ohio. We have received practically none of these funds. They have been budgeted so they could be used for further improving the good highways, such as those that run between Cleveland and Cincinnati so that the Governor and his highway director can speed over them in their Lincoln limousines.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the force of a committee recommendation. Likewise I appreciate the force of the opposition of the committee. I appreciate the fact that individually I cannot pass this amendment. I do not approach this from the standpoint of politics. I implore you to do this because it will be supported by my Democratic colleagues from Ohio, and there are 18 Democratic Congressmen to 6 Republicans in Ohio. So it will be supported unanimously by the Members from my State; and from the statements made by the gentlemen from California and Arkansas and others, I know there are many Members who want such a provision in the bill.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. In my State we got exactly $16,000,000, but Los Angeles, with over 40 percent of the unemployed of the State, got only $2,000,000 of this fund; yet I understand that this is a relief measure.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FORD. Does the gentleman concede that this bill was originally proposed as a measure of emergency unemployment relief?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. FORD. Then, why do we not write into it language that will force the State commissions to spend this money in accordance with the specific instructions of this Congress?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is what I hold should be done. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. STUBBS. I come from California. I most certainly shall oppose the gentleman's amendment, because I feel that our highway commissions have adopted reasonable programs and that we should stick by the programs.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Of course, each Member has the right to say what he would like to see done. But not all of us are so fortunate as to have State highway commissions which carried out the obvious intent of the act. The language of the bill should be such as will insure the carrying out of the desires of Congress.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. With the legislation in its present form does not the gentleman feel there is a possibility of shifting the proportion so that the great centers of unemployment may receive a greater share of this fund?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would be in favor of that, too. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, 1 year ago last March, when our distinguished President was inaugurated, this country was faced with the problem of increasing the purchasing power of its citizens. We were also faced with the problem of placing idle men and women to work. In order to carry out this great undertaking it was necessary that the whole country work as a unit, every group and every individual cooperating for the common good of all.

I know of no legislation that has so equitably and fairly benefited all the people alike as has that providing for the improvement of the public roads of the country. This has been the verdict expressed by the people of every one of our 48 States. So it seems that to earmark this fund similar to the way the allotments were made in the bill of last year would meet with the general satisfaction of the American people.

This is an authorization and not an appropriation, and it is necessary that this Congress authorize the roads program now in order that the States may make surveys and prepare necessary plans as each State has machinery already set up to carry on this work.

Practically all of the appropriation of $400,000,000 for last year has been allotted to the various States and contracts have been let.

The limitation to municipalities of more than 2,500 population has been removed.

I have the honor of being a member of the Roads Committee. There was not a dissenting vote to favorably report this bill.

Practically 90 percent of the money expended on the highways of our Commonwealth goes into labor of different forms, so I know of nothing more beneficial to unemployed which at the same time results in more permanent improvement. Everyone can see the positive and concrete results of the expenditure of this sum granted to the public roads of the various States, and I ask that the Members of this House support this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECREST].

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Chairman, I want first to address myself for a few minutes to one fundamental change in this law which I believe will be of advantage to every State in the Union, and that is the removing of the limitation of $15,000 as the amount the Federal Government may spend for each mile of road. In the State of Ohio a few years ago when times were prosperous we realized large sums of money from collections of the gasoline tax, and at that time in the building of a road the Federal Government could give us a maximum of $15,000 per mile. We took that $15,000 per mile and put with it enough of our State highway money to complete the road. In other words, if a road cost $60,000 per mile, of this sum $15,000 would be furnished by the Federal Government and $45,000 by the State government. The same thing was true in every State of the Union. Today gasoline-tax revenue has fallen off and we find in our State that we have obligated nearly every dime of our gasoline-tax money in order to receive Federal aid, and because of this we have but little money left for the improvement of the rural or smaller State roads. This bill will permit the Federal Government to spend more money per mile and the State less. It will be a real help to the rural sections of our country.

When the original public works bill was passed carrying the road appropriation with it I voted for it gladly. That provision carried a limitation that 25 percent of the fund should or could be spent on feeder roads. In Mississippi and many other States this was interpreted intelligently and 25 percent of the money was spent on the rural roads by the highway departments. However, under the terms of that bill it was not necessary to spend the entire 25 percent on county or township roads.

In the State of Ohio, where we were given an allotment of $16,000,000, we were entitled to $4,000,000 to be spent on roads in the rural sections of the State. As an actual fact, we received but $600,000, and the rest was spent on other types of roads.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SECREST. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And that is the reason causing our opposition to this bill and why we are all insisting upon the money being definitely earmarked. Not only are the rural sections of Mississippi and a few other States entitled to share in all the advantages of the National Industrial Recovery Act, but every rural section of the United States is entitled to share likewise.

Mr. SECREST. We are asking that you cooperate as nearly as you can with the State of Ohio in order that our people may be assured that 25 percent of this appropriation which I shall vote for today may be used on school bus routes, mail routes, and other rural roads because of the fact we find our appropriations for these roads gradually reduced.

May I also call your attention to one other thing? Under the C.W.A. program, in nearly every rural county of Ohio, and throughout the United States, rural roads were selected and men were placed to work improving them. We find today that with the curtailment of C.W.A. many rural roads that have been graded and partially completed stand there awaiting some further action or further appropriation. As I see it, this is the only opportunity we will get to complete these roads. This is not a problem alone of my district, but a problem of all other districts in the United States. I expect to vote for this bill, and hope that this amendment will be adopted for the benefit of countless people who live in the rural sections of our country and who look to us to fight for their common good.

Mr. WILLFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SECREST. I yield.

Mr. WILLFORD. On the floor of the House the other day we spoke about advancing so much money per mile for rural letter carriers, which amounted to some $4,300,000. If we may spend this money to develop the rural carrier routes we can reduce the mileage and the upkeep of the rural carriers' vehicles.

Mr. SECREST. I dare say that this one amendment alone will make up for any additional appropriation we may make on behalf of carriers or other employees.

I hope the committee will consider and discuss the matter and accept this amendment. I feel it will hurt no State and will help practically every State in the Union. I believe that these two things alone would make it worthy of anyone's support. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, communications in this country over vast distances and enormously populated areas have been made possible by our extensive highway systems. Our country is indeed a country of highways, and this vast network has been made possible not by State action alone but by Federal aid to the States.

In the past the 50-50 basis has been adhered to. Since the depression the State contribution has necessarily been eliminated but the Federal has been increased. Regardless of State contributions, I am firmly convinced that Federal aid to our highways should be continued. An outline of recent activities in the highway system should not be overlooked.

Development of this extensive and improved highway system has involved tremendous expenditure. In the period between 1915–25 the most rapidly expanding governmental function was the construction and maintenance of highways. In 1915 a total of $447,000,000; in 1929, $1,958,000,000. From 1923 to 1931 about $12,000,000,000 was approved for highways, of which amount 57 percent for new construction, 28 percent for maintenance, and the remainder for administration. In this development Federal aid has been beneficial in two ways: As a stimulous to increasing State expenditure and by actual contributions.

A review of Federal aid for 1934 is most instructive. The total expenditure of Public Works funds for highways as of January 31 of this year was $394,000,000, of which amount over $15,000,000 on part of 12,000 miles under construction, and about $81,000,000 for 117,000 miles approved for construction.

These vast sums have had an enormous influence on the development of the country and for this reason have convinced me that assistance should be continued.

Road construction is one of the most immediate ways of relieving unemployment. During the past 6 months there were nearly 6,000 employees working on roads financed from Federal aid appropriation. All new road work is being financed by the Federal Government—taken from Public Works funds—as all previous appropriation funds for this purpose have been exhausted. There were, during January and February of this year, about 10,000 at work. Reports showed in February that there were almost 4,000 highway projects under construction, with a total estimated cost of about $213,000,000, thus giving employment to 126,000 men. In addition there were 681 highway projects completed. The $400,000,000 highway fund was approximately divided. According to the actual valuation, roads on the Federal aid highway system 50 percent, extensions of main routes through municipalities 25 percent, and secondary or feeder roads 25 percent. In this way employment was spread throughout the States. If we should fail to secure grants to roads in this Congress it would have a disastrous effect upon highway construction workers for it is readily seen that almost 90 percent of the allotment goes into labor. It is estimated that for every person directly employed on the road work two others are employed on the average in the manufacture and transportation of road materials and equipment. Federal expenditures, having for their objective the development of this country and at the same time the employment of men and women who want to work, have received my unqualified support during my work in Congress and shall continue to be the object of my solicitude.

Highway construction is self-liquidating. The manufacturers' sales tax on motor vehicles and the gasoline tax actually exceed the amount of Federal money allotted to highway construction, so that this amount is returned to assist in financing road construction. Abandoned or curtailed now, no real construction is expected. In 1933 the Public Works Act appropriated $3,300,000,000. Of this amount there was ear-marked for public highways $400,000,000, which will be used up before next session of Congress. I am taking this opportunity to urge that Congress seriously consider that funds, in addition to those already set aside, be appropriated, so that during 1935 better roads may be constructed, unemployment figures decreased, the morale of our citizens raised, a frontal attack made on the depression and general prosperity assisted throughout our land.

It will indeed be a serious blow to the country if this Congress adjourns without passing the appropriation of $460,000,000 for highway construction. The whole amount should be carried in the last deficiency bill and if I am not tied down with a rule that forbids the offering of such an amendment, I will give the Congress the opportunity to provide these necessary funds.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] may require.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. This bill, which authorizes the appropriation of $400,000,000 for the construction of public highways, is, in my judgment, one of the very best emergency relief measures which Congress could pass. It will put more men to work in quicker time and leave as a result of their work permanent and needed improvements in every State, which the entire citizenship will both use and enjoy.

In all of the vast expenditures of the Federal Government that which is expended for public highways brings more direct benefit to the citizens of the United States than any other.

The Government is expending large sums of money in a building program throughout the United States to put the unemployed to work. According to Mr. Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, of the funds expended for highways, about 80 to 85 percent goes into labor or employment of some kind.

Such a high percentage for labor will not be found in any other type of public construction. The celerity with which highway funds are expended is in striking contrast with the amounts allocated for other construction work by the Government.

The act approved June 16, 1933, appropriated $400,000,000 for public roads, and every State in the Union has already realized benefits therefrom, while of the remaining amount appropriated for other public construction very little has yet been expended.

According to Mr. MacDonald's testimony before the Committee on Roads, in the summer of 1934, when the Bureau expects to have 280,000 continuous jobs going, it is estimated that 1,350,000 men will be employed by the Federal and State highway programs.

Another advantage that the highway-construction program has over other kinds of building projects is due to the fact that each State has its highway commission already organized, and these commissions, cooperating with the Bureau of Public Roads, are prepared to begin construction immediately and intelligently, whereas other public works require considerable time in setting up personnel, in passing upon the individual projects, and as a result their construction is greatly delayed, as has been clearly demonstrated during the past year.

In Texas, of the $24,000,000 allocated to Texas last year, on March 2 of this year Mr. Gibb Gilchrist, State highway engineer, wrote me as follows:

> We have already awarded 359 projects and have 35 additional ones due for bids, this work being spread over 226 counties (89 percent) at this time and involving a total of $20,379,014.04.

Mr. Gilchrist also stated in his letter to me of that date that by April 15 he thought the entire program for Texas would be contracted.

So far as I am informed, not one penny of money allocated for other public works at the same time the appropriation for roads was made has been expended in Texas.

Those from the thickly populated States who oppose this measure, on the ground that their States will not receive as large a sum as some of the newer and undeveloped States, manifest selfishness and shortsightedness. It is to the interest of the entire Nation that highways be improved in every State in the Union, and the Government has for years had a most equitable plan of distributing these funds, taking into consideration three elements: Population, area, and aggregate mileage of rural routes.

In the younger and more sparsely settled States the need is obviously greater than in the older and more highly developed States. To illustrate, Texas ranks thirty-ninth among the States in proportion of improved State highways. Only 63 percent of her State system is improved at all, and only 23 percent is paved in any manner. For comparison: California has 75 percent; Illinois, 78 percent; Pennsylvania, 83 percent; Ohio, 99 percent; North Carolina, 89 percent; and West Virginia, 79 percent. Our entire section, from Nebraska south and Georgia west, lags far behind, and even in this area half a dozen States surpass Texas in improvement.

I am indebted to Mr. W. O. Huggins, president of the Texas Good Roads Association, for this thought:

The situation in Texas is aggravated by the fact that, given reasonable road improvement, Texas will be the focal point for North America's motor travel in the next 3 years. Already the magnificent new Pan American Highway from Laredo to Mexico City is passable, and beginning next year it will draw millions of vacationers. Colliers and Cosmopolitan magazines have already had feature articles about the trip, and it is expected to get remarkable publicity. In addition, Texas' own centennial in 1936 is sure to be a tourist magnet of first rank; and while motor touring has declined, due to the depression, we must remember that 42 percent more automobiles were sold in 1933 than in 1932.

That Texas will receive more funds under this bill than any other State is due to the fact that we have the largest area, hence the greatest road mileage, and our needs are therefore greatest. The highways in Texas will be used and enjoyed, not only by the citizens of our State but tourists from every State in the Union.

I trust that the equitable and just method of allocating funds to the various States, based upon area, population, and road mileage, which method we have used for many years, will be continued under this bill, and that any effort to change that method may be defeated by the House. This bill should pass by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this measure as I voted for the measure a year ago, providing for the same general purpose. May I say just one or two things with all the emphasis that I am able to bring forth that in order that this money may be expended and reach the purpose for which it is being appropriated some amendments, and especially one amendment, should be made to this bill. Unless such an amendment as I have in mind is adopted, then so far as California is concerned, the money appropriated under this bill will go far wide of its purpose, as it did last year.

Mr. Chairman, we have in Los Angeles County today, and this is just 1 county of 58 counties in the State of California, according to the records of the Relief Bureau in Washington, under Mr. Hopkins, not my figures, but those of the Bureau, approximately 500,000 men, women, and children living from daily aid. That is more people than live in the District of Columbia altogether, in one county alone. There are people there on the daily aid list, I dare say, from every congressional district of the United States with the possibility of a few exceptions. People naturally gravitate to that section by reason of the warm climatic condition where they may live as they believe under favorable circumstances. I repeat that 500,000 men, women, and children are on the daily aid list in one county.

Of the $16,000,000 that was allocated to California under this bill last year, Los Angeles County, with 49 percent of all the unemployed in the State of California, according to official figures, got 13.45 percent of the money allocated to that State, and that is exactly the way this thing is going to operate this year unless the amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] is adopted. I sincerely hope when the amendment is offered that it will be accepted.

Mr. FULLER. What amendment is that?

Mr. EVANS. The amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FULLER. Is that the same as the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know. I was not here when Mr. JENKINS spoke. I will state to the gentleman the substance of the amendment. It will provide that the money allocated to the States shall be distributed on the basis of unemployment in the political subdivisions of the State. I am not exactly familiar with the wording, but that is the substance of the amendment. The county or other political subdivision of the State should be the unit for allocation of the funds, based on unemployment.

There can be nothing wrong, nothing unfair, or inequitable in that at all. This will place the money right where we want to place it. How can employment be relieved in Los Angeles County unless the money goes there?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This amendment will not disturb the allocation to the States on the basis of population?

Mr. EVANS. Not at all. It leaves the allocations undisturbed in the States, but makes it mandatory that the money go where the unemployment is located.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I yield to my colleague from California.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I am afraid the gentleman may overlook this point, and I want to bring it out: California cannot help itself, and the State highway commission cannot help itself in the way it must allocate this money. It could not help last year, giving us only $2,000,000 out of the $16,000,000, because of the state of the law that requires the commission to distribute the money according to the law of the State, which was the former method of distribution of the gasoline tax.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from California is exactly correct. That condition prevailed last year under this allocation, notwithstanding the provision of the emergency law of 1933 allocating this fund, which is as follows:

In selecting counties in which the projects are to be allocated, consideration shall be given to the relative need for employment in such counties.

We want to make this provision mandatory.

That was written into the law last year, but the California State Highway Commission and other authorities considered that merely advisory, so we want a provision this year with some teeth in it. The people of Los Angeles County cannot bear the expense of feeding this large army of unemployed. In large measure they are not citizens of that community, but there simply as sojourners—migratory.

Mr. DOWELL and Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. EVANS. I yield first to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. I was simply going to suggest to the gentleman that he have teeth put in the laws of his own State and have the highway commission do what the people of the State want it to do.

Mr. EVANS. But the Legislature of the State of California is not in session, and the California State highway law was enacted years ago with no matter of unemployment in mind.

Mr. DOWELL. We certainly ought not to amend general laws here for the purpose of having States do the things that the people of that State want done.

Mr. EVANS. You are not amending any permanent law. This is an emergency provision for the allocation of this fund, and the proposed amendment can be accepted without disturbing the permanent Federal highway law. It would apply to this emergency measure only.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. I did not understand the gentleman, when he first got up, to say whether he was in favor of this measure or opposed to it.

Mr. EVANS. I first said I was in favor of the measure. I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. WARREN. We might as well have it understood in the very beginning that if such an amendment as the gentleman has discussed is adopted, of course, it will completely wreck and destroy the entire measure and cause me to vote against it, along with many others who are interested in the bill.

Mr. EVANS. May I ask how such an amendment will destroy the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Because you are trying to change the entire system of allocation and putting it on an entirely different basis. Personally, I do not think the amendment is germane to the bill, and I shall make a point of order against it if it is offered. If you want to wreck the bill, adopt such an amendment, and in that event, we might as well table the entire measure.

Mr. EVANS. I entirely disagree with the gentleman that it will injure the bill at all. In my opinion it will perfect the purpose of the bill.

Mr. HENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I yield.

Mr. HENNEY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that under the proposed amendment 49 percent of the funds allocated to the State of California would be expended in Los Angeles County?

Mr. EVANS. Not necessarily. I stated that 49 percent of the unemployment is located in Los Angeles County, and we got only 13 percent of the fund that was allocated last year, and that will be the case again this year unless some direction such as I suggest is put in the bill.

Mr. HENNEY. I understood that, and it seems to me it would be entirely unfair to the rural communities that help to pay the taxes and need the improved roads to allocate the money in that way.

Mr. EVANS. This money is to be allocated for unemployment purposes.

Mr. HENNEY. In my State there is plenty of unemployment in the rural communities. All of the unemployment is not in the cities.

Mr. EVANS. I quite agree with the gentleman, and I think it would be wise also if some plan could be written in the bill by which the unemployment that is concentrated in the large cities could be drawn back to the rural communities, where these roads are needed worse than they are in the big congested sections. If this could be done, I think the money should be spent there. But what are you going to do about the big unemployment groups in the centers of population?

Mr. HENNEY. I certainly think the money should be distributed in the communities where the roads are needed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, during the time I have served in Congress, until I was recently elected a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I have served on this Roads Committee. Ever since we have been appropriating money to the State and Federal Governments for roads I have taken an active interest in the matter.

I feel a great interest in this particular measure. I think it will do more to build up the country and give relief than any other measure we could possibly think of. In the breakdown of a dollar spent in this way, from 85 to 90 percent of the dollar goes to labor. It not only goes to the labor that works upon the road but it also goes to the labor that hauls materials on the freight trains and to the workers in the cement factories, in the quarries, and everywhere else. It also creates a demand for the buying of equipment with which to do this work.

It not only does this but it also builds up the community and leaves a monument to the money that has been appropriated. It is not like a lot of this C.W.A. work, where we went out in an emergency and endeavored to give employment and in order to give such relief paid very little attention and devoted very little time to the formation of proper rules and regulations. We did not have time to formulate substantial projects. The money was paid to men to perform labor which in many instances left little substantial benefits. This was done just in order to give them work and a little money to allow them to get by and keep from starving and to help them clothe themselves and their families.

This road program is worked out on a real system, and the work done will leave a monument that will be of benefit to the people of the Nation.

Mr. FORD. Is the gentleman interested in monuments or in human beings who are out of work?

Mr. FULLER. I am interested in both. Why does the gentleman ask such a question?

Mr. FORD. I am not interested in building monuments now; I am interested in giving work to people where the unemployment is great.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman's question is not germane to my argument that when you build these roads you leave a monument for the money you have spent and relieve unemployment.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. If that is the intent of the legislation, why not put in a provision that will provide employment in the districts where unemployment is the greatest?

Mr. FULLER. I rather agree with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], although I can see the force of the argument of the gentleman from California and others about having it allocated in the communities where unemployment is greatest; but that is a local matter. If you have not people in whom you have confidence running your highway departments, you ought to put some pressure back of them and make them do right. They are not in line with this administration or the new deal or the best thought in your own State as to what ought to be done. We cannot remedy all of those matters. We cannot cover up every little gap here, and I am rather of the opinion that you would change the organic law by procedure of that kind. However, I do believe that this money should be spent in the communities where men are out of employment and where the necessity for taking care of the people is the greatest.

The only authority we have under the Constitution to appropriate money for roads is that provision that provides for rural mail routes. We have to provide the money, and yet, do you know, my colleagues, a great portion of the money has been spent for building turnpikes—military roads—from one end of the country to the other. Well, that is right; that is the only way we have to build them. It gives the main traveled ways from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf to Canada. But we have got these roads pretty well built.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman hold that this bill has any chance of being passed and getting the money to build the roads?

Mr. FULLER. This is only an authorization, and we know the views of the administration. It is true the President may not favor as much as the Congress demands, but we are hopeful. We hope that we will get a large sum. We will have it earmarked in the bill, not only the $400,000,000 authorized but the $60,000,000.

Now, I want to say to you that it is time you were looking after the feeder roads, when we go back to the forks of the creeks, where people are out of employment. We have not had any trouble in our State because of the requirement of 25 percent for the feeder roads, 25 percent for city paving, and 50 percent for Federal highways. We want the highway departments to know that this Congress demands that this 25 percent be spent on rural and farm-to-market roads and not on high-class State roads.

Well, if in Ohio they do not do what is contemplated by the rules and regulations, what is the matter with earmarking it and saying that they shall not use more than 25 percent for this purpose and 25 percent for the other, and so forth?

Now, here is an amendment I am going to offer: On line 8, page 2:

Provided, That not less than 25 percent of the allotment of this appropriation shall be applied to secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, Rural Free Delivery mail roads, the public-school and bus roads.

There is no reason why this amendment should not be adopted; it does not hurt the bill in any way but improves the same.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill goes altogether too far with the road question. I think it provides for more money than we ought to spend at this time and more money than will be expended efficiently. I call attention to several situations that exist throughout the country. There is just one argument for the bill, and that is that the expenditure that is provided probably will not be any worse than the other expenditures that are going to be provided in the so-called "relief work." I was very much interested in what the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] said when he opened the debate on this bill—that first we appropriated $100,000,000 in the nature of emergency relief for roads, and then we got up to $120,000,000, and all the time conditions got worse. Now, we got up to $400,000,000 last year besides the regular appropriations, and this year we are proposing $450,000,000, and unemployment conditions are getting worse. If we want to keep them getting worse right along, we want to go right on with our spending program. Things are not going to get better until the Government takes hold of itself and stops this spending program.

It has been said that these things provide a lot of employment. Let us take the hearings and figure the thing out and see for ourselves whether they do or not.

Mr. MacDonald, on page 1, said:

So that in the summer of 1924, at the peak, when we have 280,000 continuous jobs going, we will reach, with the supplementary employment added, about 1,350,000 employed by the Federal and State highway program.

For that summer there is a hold-over of approximately $200,000,000 of the $400,000,000 allocated in the N.I.R.A. bill for roads. There is $30,000,000 of the appropriation that is made in the agricultural appropriation bill, as I remember it. There will be large amounts, probably fifty to one hundred million dollars, appropriated by the States. There will be, probably, if this bill goes through, $200,000,000 of this, so that there will be available for this job approximately $450,000,000 to $500,000,000, and with $450,000,000 to $500,000,000 we have 1,354,000 people employed, at a cost of $3,000 per man to put one man to work, and that will not be continuous employment through the year either.

That is the situation you are working to, and that is the headway that you are making in this thing.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I decline to yield. I have three or four things I want to explain to the House. If I have any time, I shall do it later. On top of that, instead of going ahead with the kind of roads that are worst needed—and, frankly, most all of our main highways are pretty well built throughout the country—we are going ahead in many places with solid, high-priced concrete roads, where cold-pack roads would be better and provide more employment and not cost so much. We are spending so everlastingly much money that there is no way out of this depression for the Government or the people if we go on piling up this burden on our taxpayers. Let us use a little sense about it. If we authorize $200,000,000, we would be going a long way. I am going to suggest when we get to that point that we cut that authorization down to $200,000,000 instead of having it at $400,000,000.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. In a moment. I am going to suggest cutting down this item for roads and trails and that sort of thing, and I think we are going pretty far in this authorization of $10,000,000 for emergency relief work, available for expenditure by the Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion. In the past, when there has been anything in the nature of an emergency, where people could not take care of themselves, they have come to the Congress, and the Congress has acted upon it. Is it not time that we stop delegating to somebody else the power to determine whether we should appropriate money? That is the curse of the situation that we are in at this time. Congress has given up almost all of its authority to appropriate money, and we ought to stop that kind of thing and take care of our own job and do our own work instead of turning it over to somebody else. The President cannot look after these things. He has to delegate them to somebody else. The result of the situation is that the delegation is made to somebody who does not know half as much about it as Congress knows with the experience that it has had.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. Is it not true that in appropriating or earmarking this money we are recapturing our jurisdiction, and instead of letting the Director of Public Works say how the $400,000,000 shall be expended, we say in this bill how it shall be expended?

Mr. TABER. We did that last year on the $400,000,000 for roads. That part was taken care of in the same way, with practically the same language, but we do allot a great amount of money to public works for general allotment. What is going to be proposed this year when the bill comes in I do not know. No one knows. It has not been taken up for consideration.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman is quite satisfied that a public works bill will be passed at this session of Congress?

Mr. TABER. Oh, I should not expect so.

Mr. MOTT. Would not the gentleman rather have the $400,000,000 of that put into roads than to leave it in the discretion of the Public Works to administer?

Mr. TABER. That is the only argument for this bill. It is too much money for us to spend, and if we do not stop spending so much money on this sort of thing we are never going to get out of the depression. If we go on spending this money and more money and more money we will just make the depression worse and get the people deeper into the slough, and we will never get out of it by spending.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman's argument might better be made against the Public Works bill than against this bill.

Mr. TABER. It will be directed against the Public Works bill when it comes out, I do not have any doubt, if I am able to be here, and I expect to be here.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ELTSE of California. If this is reduced to $200,000,000, will that not also cause a reduction in the P.W.A. appropriation?

Mr. TABER. I should hope so.

Mr. ELTSE of California. So that it does not follow that we have to vote this in order to get that much out of the general appropriation for P.W.A., does it?

Mr. TABER. Of course, the general appropriation for P.W.A. will probably come in under a rule, and I do not know what it will be proposed to do. I will not favor anything in that bill which delegates to anybody else any authority as to how it shall be spent where Congress is responsible for that delegation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS].

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, I think we all realize that this is the day of national planning. If I interpreted the newspaper article correctly the other day, our President is thinking in terms of national planning. We have a National Bureau of Public Roads. We have State highway commissions. They have programs of highway building. In driving across the continent and up and down my State I have decided that they have, at least up to this time, done a splendid job in that planning. I know they are doing a splendid work, and I think it would be a mistake for this Congress to cumber this piece of legislation with a group of amendments that would destroy the planning of our State and National highway authorities.

I am opposed not only to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] but to the proposed amendment of my colleague from California [Mr. FORD]. The gentleman from California ought to realize that all roads run into Los Angeles from California, and I think he does realize it. I represent the great middle part of the State of California, a large area. The gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] realizes that in the planning out over a number of years, the Highway Commission means to take care of the rural districts of California. So I am opposed to this amendment because I think it will weaken the legislation.

I am heartily in favor of earmarking this $400,000,000 for highway construction. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the lady from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY].

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, we have approximately 42,000 heads of families unemployed in my State out of a voting population of 153,000. Those men who work on the roads are the men who have kept their courage and their morale, because they have received legitimate, sound wages, and they know that they have a job that belongs to a man, in building the arteries and veins of the Nation. I feel that everyone of us should jump at the chance to vote for a bill that gives our friends who have no way of earning their living, a program affording the right to earn as men like to. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I endorse what the distinguished gentlewoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY] has said with reference to the employment that will be given by this program to those people who need it most. I think the road-building program, one nationally devised and supplemented by the advice of State highway commissions of the various States, is one that will go furthest in providing employment for the people of our Nation who need it now. I believe the time has come when the highways are more than a State problem. On account of the speed of automobiles you can go through more than one State in a single day or night. Our roads have become nationalized.

It is the duty of the Government to aid in the building of those roads. When we are seeking to provide emergency relief we should take those methods which will add to the permanency of the improvements of the country, and in no way will we find where money will be more widely distributed than in a road-building program. By this method you provide work in every nook and corner of every county in every State in the United States. This work which we seek to do now is not merely raking leaves from one side of the road to the other, but it is permanent work; work that will be there in the years to come when we shall have come back to prosperous days.

I am in favor of the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. I believe that as far as possible we should go out in the crossroads and provide work for the people there. In building these farm-to-market roads, I think it is proper to provide that a certain specific part of this money shall go to the feeder roads, the farm-to-market roads. If Ohio or any other State is not permitted by its highway commission to accomplish those purposes which the gentleman from Ohio related, I say it should be the duty of the Congress to see that that is done so that feeder roads may be provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] has expired.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill in the form in which it was reported by the committee. I am in favor of the bill even though I represent a district of the State of New York, the most populous State in the Union, the State incidentally which will contribute the greatest amount to the Federal Treasury. I am in favor of the bill because I think it is a national project and I do not believe we should resolve the question upon any narrow or sectional lines. The fact that Texas is larger than New York, that Oklahoma may not be so rich in resources, and that because of these facts these States may get a larger proportion of the money than my own State, does not deter the people of my district and of my State from wishing me to register my vote in favor of a national project.

We are not a sectional nation. I shall be very happy if some of this money will go to the States that need it, because we are using those roads, and indirectly the money will react to the benefit of employment in the State of New York. Not only will money be spent for actual road work in New York State but employment will be furnished indirectly through the manufacture of machinery and materials for road building.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] spoke this morning in favor of an amendment that would limit the relief to be extended under this bill to citizens of the United States. I appreciate that, perhaps, in some sections there exists what amounts to contract labor, and I am willing to support the gentleman's amendment, provided it is qualified to allow the benefits to be extended to aliens who have filed a declaration of intention to become citizens.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Both of those matters are taken care of by existing law.

Mr. SISSON. There are aliens in my district for whom we have to care—people who have filed declarations of intention—and in this respect I think they should be treated as citizens.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, perhaps it is unnecessary to say more with reference to this legislation, but I want to emphasize, if I may, the fact that no money expended by the Government is more equitably distributed amongst the people than the money which goes for road building. In every State of the Union there is a highway department well organized and well equipped to take care of the road work in that State. There will be, in my judgment, less waste of appropriations for the construction of highways than there will be of appropriations for almost any other purpose. This gives to the man who seeks employment a job where he can earn pay for the support of his family.

It is my judgment that more economy in its expenditure and better results from its expenditure will come from road construction than from almost any other construction work for which appropriations are made by Congress.

I wish now to say a word with regard to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, but first I want to refer to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Up in Massachusetts they have only short roads; most of them have been constructed; and, therefore, the gentleman from Massachusetts does not need more roads.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not opposed to road building. I believe we ought to spend a reasonable amount for this purpose; but I say that when we make an appropriation for road building it ought to be made under a road-building program and not under the cloak of being a measure for the relief of unemployment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I come now to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. I really hope the amendment he intends to offer will be adopted. This bill has for its purpose the building of roads where they are needed, and where they will be used by the farmers to bring their produce to market. When this road system was first inaugurated the roads were known as the farm-to-market roads. And I hope the amendment will be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the thought that if there is to be a large appropriation for public works, as much of that appropriation as possible should be for road building, because I am informed that money expended for road building gives more employment to labor than in any other kind of public works. Nevertheless, I have some misgivings about this measure, and I am wondering whether we have thus far made a sufficiently careful survey of the probable relief needs of the country during the next year to be able to make any definite allocation of relief funds at this time.

I am led to ask that question by the deplorable condition which exists at the present time in the section of the country in which I live, the Middle West. At this very moment a cloud of dust 1,500 miles long, 900 miles wide, and 2 miles high is sweeping over this city, and we are informed that it comes from the Dakotas. Yesterday Dr. Willis R. Clegg, Chief of the United States Weather Bureau, made the statement that the present drought in the Middle West breaks the record of all time; and at the same time the United States Department of Agriculture made the statement that the hay crop will be smaller this year than it has been for 50 years. The present indication is that in large areas there will be no small grain whatever raised this year, and unless rain comes soon, no corn.

Only this week Dr. Coffey, dean of the College of Agriculture of the University of Minnesota, told me that he had recently visited Lincoln County in western Minnesota and had found conditions that beggar description. One farmer, with many horses, cattle, and chickens to feed, had no grain on the premises except two bushels of wheat, and no forage except some straw. On one farm the cattle were trying to sustain life by salvaging feed from manure piles. Farmers were working their fields with horses so weakened and emaciated that anyone putting a harness on them under ordinary conditions would have been prosecuted by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Such is the situation with which we are confronted in the great middle western region. I fear that before next year's crop can be matured we shall be called upon to provide the means of sustenance, not for thousands, but for hundreds of thousands of people in that midwestern empire. In the large cities of the country there is a condition of unemployment that will probably test to the utmost the capacity of the people of this Nation to prevent actual starvation and privation.

The situation is one that should challenge the conscience of the Congress. The administrative officials of the Government have made contributions from the regular $950,000,000 appropriation for relief of distress in the Middle West, but what they have been able to do is not enough. The amount of feed doled out has been pitifully inadequate. There should be no attempt to disguise the fact that heroic measures will have to be taken to prevent a major catastrophe during the next year, a catastrophe that will give the Nation a blow from which it may take a generation to recover. It is my conviction that we should quit frittering away the resources and credit of the Government by expending billions of dollars for expensive buildings and such other forms of public works as give the minimum of relief to the unemployed, considering the amounts invested, and that we should husband the Nation's borrowing and taxing power in order to make it go as far as possible in preventing actual privation.

The depression is not over. It is due to be with us for a long time, and we should not deceive ourselves. I would urge upon the appropriate committee of this House to begin immediately to reconsider the whole relief problem, to recast our policy on a long-time basis, acting on the presumption that the march back to normality has hardly begun.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I am not in sympathy with the proposal to appropriate $10,000,000,000 or some other fantastic or extravagant amount. Such an expenditure would leave us with an aftermath of debt that would prolong the depression, exhaust national debt, and force us speedily into unmanageable inflation. Let us, on the other hand, so recast our policy and methods of relief that every dollar of the taxpayer's money spent provides 100 cents' worth of the necessaries of life, that no one may want. The end of the session is approaching, and there is no time to lose. We cannot afford to adjourn, we must not adjourn until we have provided the means and outlined the policy necessary to avert the greatest calamity that ever confronted the American people in peace or in war. We must provide means and outline a policy that will make it possible for millions of distressed people in this country to live; and we shall not meet that responsibility, in my opinion, unless we adopt a plan that will make the money available do its utmost in effective assistance to the people.

In general I favor this above all other appropriations for public works, because in road construction $3,000 keeps a man employed a year, whereas in the erection of needless and extravagant public buildings it takes $5,600 to give a laborer a year's employment. But I am wondering whether even this does not involve a program the American people cannot afford at this time, in view of the unusual demands this critical condition has imposed and is due to continue to impose upon us. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is an emergency measure to increase employment through the authorization of additional appropriations to provide for the construction of public highways and related projects.

It follows very closely the provisions of section 204 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933. In that act the President, from the $3,300,000,000 made available for emergency purposes, was authorized to make grants to the highway departments of the several States in an amount not less than $400,000,000 to be expended by such departments in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act approved November 9, 1921.

The hearings disclose that approximately all of this money has or will be allocated, perhaps before this bill becomes a law.

The National Industrial Recovery Act changes the formula of apportionment of the funds to the several States, and this bill follows that apportionment so that the money will be apportioned as follows: Ten twenty-fourths on population, seven twenty-fourths on area, and seven twenty-fourths on mileage. Under legislation enacted prior to passage of that act, it was apportioned one third each on population, area, and mileage.

In my judgment, the expenditure of public funds through the improvement of highways relieves more unemployment, reaches more people, and does more permanent good than through the expenditure of any other money made available by the National Industrial Recovery Act. That act, subsection 2, provides for expenditures in emergency construction on secondary or feeder roads, to be agreed upon by the highway departments of the States and the Secretary of Agriculture.

I should like to see more of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this bill allocated to the construction of secondary or feeder roads. If I had the writing of this bill, I would make it mandatory to apportion the money so that a part of it would be expended on every road used by rural mail routes and star routes.

If you will take a map of the respective States and congressional districts, and examine the rural and star routes over which mail is carried, you will find that they traverse all the populous and more productive rural areas and connect them with the marketing centers. If more money were expended on these roads it would enable every farmer to remain at home and secure a share of this work. This would connect up all rural communities with the marketing centers, would add to the value of all farm lands, and result in permanent benefit to the people all over the country. The county commissioners of the various counties, out of other funds which they have available, could be relied upon to improve the connecting links. When this money is expended there should be a fair system of secondary or feeder roads gridironing the entire country. This is the one thought I want to emphasize. Of course I am in favor of building the better type of roads, but this is emergency legislation and its principal objection is to relieve unemployment. The improvement of roads such as I have suggested would do two things, first, relieve unemployment at the least expense to those who are desirous of securing work which will permit them to remain at home; and, second, it would connect up marketing centers and be of lasting and permanent benefit.

The Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, as shown by the hearings, estimates that 85 percent of the money expended for road improvement goes for labor. If men could remain at home and at the same time secure work, it would permit them to pay taxes, buy clothing and other necessities for their families.

I have always been a good roads enthusiast. During my first term in Congress I made a speech in support of a bill then pending creating a Bureau of Roads and to authorize the expenditure of a sum of money over a period of years. This bill was approved July 11, 1916. This was really the beginning of road building and increased amounts have been authorized for road improvement from year to year and appropriations have followed. The largest amount was that provided for in the National Industrial Recovery Act, when $400,000,000 was set apart as grants to States for road improvements. Under that act Oklahoma was allocated $9,216,798, and inasmuch as the same formula is used in this bill as was used in the National Industrial Recovery Act for the distribution of the funds, the several States should and will receive the same amounts they received under the Recovery Act.

I heartily favor the legislation, and repeat that from every standpoint appropriations for road improvements for emergency purposes are justified.

In conclusion, let me repeat, in order to emphasize it, that I should like to see a mandatory provision in the bill requiring a larger amount to be expended on secondary or feeder roads, including all roads over which mail is carried either by rural or star routes. Improvement of these roads does not require the use of so much machinery. Men with teams and picks and shovels are prepared and equipped to do this work. With a small amount for the maintenance of these roads, they can be kept in good condition for travel at all times. Their improvement will reduce the cost of marketing farm products. It will greatly aid in the back-to-the-farm movement. We already have fairly good roads leading to the more important commercial centers. We need to improve the rural roads connecting up every county seat, town, and the smaller marketing centers. I am going to support any amendment that will earmark the expenditure of this money so as to require it to be spent in part on improvement of rural roads. I want to interpret feeder roads. This is Federal money. The States do not match it. Why should we not direct how it shall be spent? I know the sentiment of my district, and the people there want rural roads—farm-to-market roads—improved.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. MCCARTHY].

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. I had prepared a similar amendment myself, which I intend to offer. The only change I have in my amendment is in the way the money shall be spent.

I heartily agree that this money should be spent on secondary roads, feeder roads, mail routes, and public-school bus routes. The only additional suggestion I have is that this money be spent for reemployment as is intended, and, therefore, be spent under the supervision of the State reemployment director and by him disbursed to the county commissioners, instead of being spent, as in the present system, under the State highway commissions. In our own State this money is used for political purposes, while people of both parties are in need, and should not be the subject of a political distribution. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, several Members have been harping on the idea that this measure interferes with relief. Mr. Hopkins called me up the other day and stated:

> I understand you have received word I am opposed to the public-roads appropriation. It is quite the contrary. I think road money has been a lifesaver to this country. I just wanted to relieve any misapprehension you may have regarding my attitude on the road bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

FEDERAL HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION SELF-LIQUIDATED

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the country is without a definite program for highway construction. Population is increasing, traffic is multiplying. There are 25,000,000 automobiles in daily operation on the highways of the Nation. A continuing program of highway construction is essential to meet new needs.

The pending bill is primarily an authorization. There must be an authorization, so that an appropriation can be made. The authorization of $400,000,000 for highways and the authorization of $50,000,000 for roads in national parks, forest roads, forest highways, public lands, and Indian reservations is identical with the authorization and appropriation that was made in the National Industrial Recovery Act in 1933 not to relieve unemployment altogether but to contribute to the relief of unemployment.

The Public Works title of the National Industrial Recovery Act provided for $3,200,000,000 for public works to relieve unemployment. No one has ever contended that highway construction would altogether relieve unemployment. The conditions in the country differ from conditions in the cities. Conditions in the industrial areas are different from the conditions in the agricultural regions. Four hundred million dollars were definitely allocated as grants for the construction of highways to relieve unemployment.

It is my judgment that the money appropriated for highway construction in the Public Works Act of 1933 as grants to the State highway commissions has been more generally satisfactory in aid of unemployment than any other Federal public works. [Applause.]

The provisions for highway construction in the Public Works Act of 1933, adopted by Congress under the leadership of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, is the most constructive legislation ever passed for highway building. [Applause.]

Heretofore, Federal appropriations had been to aid only Federal highways. The Public Works Act of 1933 liberalized the existing law. The appropriation was available for construction of Federal highways, for extensions of Federal highways through municipalities, and for emergency construction of secondary or feeder roads. In municipalities provision was made for the elimination of traffic hazards, the elimination of grade crossings, the building of footpaths, and the replacement of unsafe bridges.

The basis of allocation was changed so as to provide for larger allocations to the more populous States. From the beginning of Federal aid in 1916 the allocations were based upon area, mileage, and population, with one third to each. The formula adopted in the Public Works Act of 1933 is ten twenty-fourths population, seven twenty-fourths area, and seven twenty-fourths mileage.

Moreover, labor is safeguarded. Minimum wages are established. The 30-hour week obtains. Only citizens of the United States and aliens who have declared their intention of becoming citizens are to be employed. Mr. BLANTON, of Texas, suggested he would offer an amendment that only citizens of the United States should be used in such employment. Such is the law. We wrote that law a year ago. It is said that veterans should have the preference. That is the law now. The provision is contained in the Public Works Act of 1933.

The bill authorizes $400,000,000 to be appropriated, allocated, and expended as provided by section 204 of the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933. This section is under the Public Works title. Section 206 provides the legislation with respect to labor and employees to which I have referred. Inasmuch as the pending bill provides for the expenditure of the appropriation as provided by said section 204, and inasmuch as section 206 contains the provisions that cover all appropriations under the Public Works title, it is my view that said section 206 will apply to the pending bill.

Let me make this suggestion insofar as amendments or changes in the provisions of the bill are concerned: The provisions have been tried. They are generally satisfactory. They embody the best features of highway construction since Congress first passed legislation for Federal highway aid in 1916. I, therefore, suggest we be exceedingly careful in making amendments on the floor to the substantive law that is continued in the pending bill.

I appreciate the viewpoint of those who come from the more populous States and from the large cities. Highway legislation, under the present administration, has been more liberal to the cities and more populous States than previous highway legislation. The provision for larger allocations to the wealthier and more populous States obtain in the bill under consideration.

During the depression every administration, both Democratic and Republican, has promoted the building of highways in aid of unemployment. It is not a partisan or a political question.

Under the administration of Herbert Hoover, in the Emergency Act of December 20, 1930, Congress appropriated $80,000,000 to supplement the annual appropriation of $125,000,000 for Federal aid to highway construction. In 1932, $120,000,000 was contained in the Emergency Relief Act. With the regular appropriation, more than $200,000,000 was thus available. In 1933, with from twelve to fifteen million out of employment, the Democratic administration doubled the allocation, making the appropriation a grant instead of an aid.

Congress has conferred unprecedented authority on departments in public building and in public works during the depression, but in every emergency appropriation thus far Congress has insisted that there be a definite amount allocated for the building of highways. I believe this policy should be continued. Such is the purpose of the pending bill.

But the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Michigan say that the larger and more populous States are discriminated against. We live under the dual system of government. There is the State and the Federal sovereignty. In modern commerce, for many purposes State lines are disappearing. Massachusetts cannot live within herself. She must sell her products to other States. Many of the leading insurance companies are located in Massachusetts, and yet their profits are derived from business with citizens in Arkansas, New Mexico, and Mississippi. No State can live unto itself. In a national emergency it is more important than ever that national questions should be considered from the national viewpoint.

It is said that New York pays from 25 to 30 percent of the income taxes of the United States. It may be that this percentage is collected from citizens of New York, but the taxes are paid by the people of the entire country. Let me give you an illustration: The Union Pacific Railroad is located west of the Mississippi River. Its general offices are in New York City. Its income is credited to the city of New York and the State of New York. It paid some years ago an annual income tax of about $4,000,000. New York obtained credit for the payment, but the property was located west of the Mississippi River and the earnings came from the citizens of that part of the United States. The people of the United States, 125,000,000 citizens, no matter where they reside, pay the income and other taxes of this country, regardless of their residence or location. [Applause.]

The pending bill authorizes an appropriation of $400,000,000. Under regulations adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway commission, approximately 50 percent will be expended on highways, 25 percent on extensions in municipalities, and 25 percent on secondary or feeder roads.

I am familiar with the amendment respecting secondary or feeder roads that has been suggested. I live in an agricultural State. I am in sympathy with the building of roads from the farm to the market. The pending bill provides for a Federal grant. The principle is that those who use the roads should pay for them. Primarily the obligation of Congress is to provide for the construction of those roads that are largely used by the people of the entire country. Congress, in the very nature of the case, cannot provide for main thoroughfares and all secondary or feeder roads. The Federal highway program contemplates the building of 206,000 miles of Federal-aid highways. Only about 108,000 miles have been completed.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] criticized the pending legislation. As I recall, he lives in a congressional district that embraces a large city and probably one county. Grand Rapids has been able to construct her highways because her furniture is sold in every State in the Union. In Michigan, however, less than half of the Federal-aid highways has been completed. In the State of Massachusetts the same situation obtains—about one half of the system has been completed.

I shall discuss the proposed amendments when the bill is being read for amendments. I call attention to the fact that in Ohio, as disclosed by the hearings, substantially one fourth of the amount allocated to the State of Ohio has been used in the building of secondary or feeder roads.

I am sympathetic with the problems of the great cities and the industrial centers. The greater part of the $500,000,000 for Federal relief appropriated in 1933 went to the large cities and the industrial centers. An additional allocation of $400,000,000 was made for civil works. The larger part went to the industrial centers. While the municipalities share in the benefits of highway legislation, such legislation is not intended to solve altogether the problems of unemployment in the cities.

Much has been said about secondary roads. Provision was made for the building of these roads under the Civil Works program primarily in aid of unemployment in the areas where unemployment was most wide-spread. The amendments, therefore, that would undertake to limit the expenditures of Federal-aid funds would do an injustice to the less populous areas of the country.

One of the first acts of the present session of Congress was to appropriate $950,000,000 for the relief of distress and unemployment. It is now available in the drought areas in Kansas and the Middle West generally. Our friends from the cities and the more populous industrial centers should be satisfied. If they receive, as they view it, less benefit from Federal-aid legislation, they certainly receive more benefit from relief legislation.

I believe that the expenditure of the appropriation should be left largely to the State authorities. I am an advocate of State rights. There is too much centralization. If some States have done an injustice to certain areas in those States, the remedy is to change the administration in the States and not to change the general law so as to do injustice to other States.

It has been suggested that $400,000,000 is a large amount. It was inserted in the pending bill after careful hearings. These hearings disclosed that contracts would be awarded for the entire $400,000,000 appropriated in 1933 by the 1st of July 1934. The amount will be largely expended by the close of the calendar year 1934. The Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads estimated that it would require the grant of an additional $375,000,000 to hold employment without a precipitous drop during the latter part of the year 1934 and during the year 1935 on the assumption that regular Federal aid would be resumed for the fiscal year 1936. Unless provision is made for Federal-aid construction from 500,000 to 1,000,000 men who have been engaged in highway construction for the past 4 years will be out of employment. Under the appropriation of 1933 the construction will be largely completed in the latter part of 1934.

We are interested in the relief of unemployment in the cities, but what about unemployment among the people who live in the countryside? The proposed authorization will provide for employment in 75 percent of all of the counties in the United States. Highway construction is the most generally satisfactory of all public works.

SELF-LIQUIDATING

Highway construction is superior to all other public works in providing employment and permanent benefits. If those who use the highways should pay for them, it follows that there must be better roads.

Federal aid and Federal grants for highways are self-liquidating. In every emergency for public works, highway construction has provided for employment in every State. The American motorists have more than paid for the cost of all appropriations for Federal highways. The original Federal Highway Act was passed in 1916. For the period 1917 to March 1, 1934, collections for motor vehicles, including, for 1933 and 1934, the excise tax on gasoline, oils, tires, and tubes, as reported by the United States Internal Revenue Department, amounted to $1,502,584,784.95. According to the records of the United States Bureau of Public Roads for the same period, the total Federal-aid highway expenditures aggregated $1,472,250,824.15.

In the Public Works Act of 1933 there was a definite allocation of $400,000,000 for highways. For the first 6 months of the year 1933 the excise tax on automobiles, motorcycles, parts and accessories, trucks, tubes, gasoline, and oil aggregated $167,000,000, and for the calendar year 1933 aggregated approximately $257,000,000. By the time, therefore, the appropriation of $400,000,000 has been finally expended the collections will equal substantially the expenditures.

Under the leave to extend my remarks, I include herein a tabulation showing the highway expenditures and income as follows:

Comparison of Federal-aid highway expenditures and Federal-tax income from motor vehicles

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT

Statement as to previous ratios of appropriations for Federal highway aid and for forest, park, Indian reservations, and public-land roads

Prior to the first emergency appropriation for roads in December 1930 it had been the policy of Congress to authorize regular Federal-aid appropriations and appropriations for forest roads and trails in the ratio of 10 to 1, such as for the fiscal years 1931 and 1932, when Federal aid was given $125,000,000 and forest roads and trails $12,500,000.

In addition, appropriations for the National Park Service covering park roads were made separately in varying amounts from year to year without reference to the amounts appropriated for Federal highway aid.

In the emergency acts the following amounts were allotted for the purposes indicated:

Legislative acts	Federal aid	Forest highways	Forest roads and trails	National-park roads	Indian-reservation roads	Public-land roads
Emergency, December 1930	$80,000,000	$3,000,000		$1,500,000	$3,000,000
Emergency-relief construction, 1932	120,000,000	5,000,000	$5,000,000	3,000,000	1,000,000	$2,000,000
N.I.R.A., 1933	400,000,000	[1] 15,000,000	[1] 10,000,000	[1] 16,000,000	[1] 4,000,000	[1] 5,000,000

[1] From lump sum of $50,000,000 distributed by P.W.A.

It will be observed that, in addition to the $50,000,000, the Administrator of Public Works allocated approximately $47,000,000 additional for roads and physical equipment and other improvements in the forests, national parks, and Indian reservations.

Under the Public Works title of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Administrator was authorized to make grants of 30 percent and make loans for 70 percent of the cost of construction of roads, highways, and other public improvements. I am advised that in addition to the amounts hereinbefore appropriated, the Administrator of Public Works had made loans for highway construction with 30 percent grants up to March 15, 1934, to the amount of $41,742,811.

EARMARKED

The pending bill will provide for definitely earmarking grants for highway construction. It is an authorization. The whole amount may not be appropriated either for highways or for forests and parks during the current year. The matter rests largely with the President. The amount appropriated will depend upon his Public Works message, but I insist that Congress shall make definite allocations and appropriations for all public works, including highways, public buildings, rivers and harbors, and flood-control works. It is essential that the public funds be safeguarded and that permanent improvements be provided. Congress has a responsibility. Congress levies the taxes. It should provide for definite appropriations.

URGENCY

The States are unable to match Federal aid. They cannot borrow money, nor can they sell bonds. They are unable to provide, in many cases, for local relief, hence the necessity for Federal grants. It is my view that the grants should continue until provision is made for regular Federal aid. Such provision, I believe, should be made for the fiscal year 1936. Meantime, the States have difficulty in maintaining their highways. In the interest of employment and to promote the public good, the pending legislation should be passed.

ANALYSIS

Section 1 and section 2 of the pending bill provide for grants in the amounts and under the provisions of the Public Works Act of 1933. One and one half percent is allowed for surveys and plans. The allocations and the provisions of the Public Works Act of 1933 were eminently satisfactory. The Committee on Roads conducted hearings. They believe the amounts and the provisions should continue.

Section 3 is new legislation, or rather I should say it provides for a definite policy so as to eliminate special acts that have been passed from time to time. A fund is provided for the rebuilding of Federal-aid highways destroyed by floods, hurricanes, earthquakes, and landslides. Inasmuch as a permanent policy is provided, the authorization of $10,000,000 is not a grant but is to aid in rebuilding Federal-aid highways, as provided by the Federal Highway Act, on a 50-50 basis.

The Public Works Act of 1933 stipulated that the limitations of highway construction within municipalities imposed by the Federal Highway Act should not apply to the program of 1933. The pending bill makes permanent the provision.

In the Emergency Act of December 20, 1930, and in the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, provision was made for the repayment by way of deduction of prior advances or loans in future allocations to the States. The pending bill definitely eliminates the provision. The program of 1933 was a grant and not a Federal aid. The pending bill is a grant, and the public interest and public good will be promoted by the elimination of the requirement for repayment of the emergency advances in all future Federal-aid legislation.

ALLOCATIONS

Under the Public Works Act of 1933 the method of allocations was changed so as to provide for larger allotments to the more populous States. Formerly, allocations were based upon population, area and mileage, one third being allocated for each purpose. The formula is now 10/24 population, 7/24 area, and 7/24 mileage. It will obtain in the pending bill.

SECONDARY ROADS

Provision is made for secondary or feeder roads and employment is thus provided for. Secondary roads employ a much larger percentage of common labor. I favor farm-to-market roads. More labor and less machinery is used on secondary roads; unemployment is thus aided.

MUNICIPALITIES

Construction through municipalities is continued as it was in the Public Works Act of 1933. Cities as well as the country are again provided for.

GRANTS

The States are unable to match Federal-aid highway funds. It is believed that by 1936 conditions will be normal. A Federal-aid highway program is then contemplated. On account of the depression and the inability of the States to match Federal highway funds and that the States may know definitely how to provide their future programs, it is essential that provision be made during the remainder of the emergency for grants for highway construction.

GENERALLY MORE SATISFACTORY

There is no more satisfactory public work than highway construction. All States are benefited. All counties in all of the States are aided. Labor in both the city and country is benefited.

The passage of the pending bill is important in the completion of the program for recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Inasmuch as this is a grant to the States, not to be matched by the States, why should not the Congress here earmark and say how it shall be expended?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is a fair question. I stand for highway construction. As the Congress of the United States we cannot build all of the highways in the country. We have a Federal-aid system. It has 207,000 miles in round numbers. We have completed about one half of it. Take the State of Michigan for instance. In Grand Rapids, where my friend MAPES lives, they may have built all of their roads, but they have not completed half of their Federal-aid system in the State of Michigan. That same condition obtains in Ohio. I maintain that last year we went further than any administration has ever gone, and we provided for the first time for feeder roads and secondary roads.

Mr. HASTINGS. But what was "feeder roads" interpreted as? It did not mean anything rural in my country.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We said secondary and feeder roads, in the language of the law, and if you say it again, you cannot make it any plainer. The fault is not in the legislation, it is in the administration of it, by the State highway commissions. The responsibility of Congress is to provide the funds. It is the responsibility of the States to provide for their allocation and disbursement in the States.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. There is nothing new or novel about this system. We have had it before. Of course, there is a limit to good things that you can do. What definite information came before the gentleman's committee that made them feel that they were justified in appropriating $50,000,000 for roads and trails in public reserves?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is also a fair question. We have authorized $400,000,000 for highways. The question occurred to me: Why allow $50,000,000 for roads in national parks, forests, public lands, and Indian reservations? There is none in my district. The only additional funds for highways in order to provide satisfactorily for the national parks, forests, and public lands was that the Administrator supplemented the $16,000,000 of the $50,000,000 by an additional $9,000,000, and moreover, provided for $37,000,000 more for providing for necessary improvement in the forests of the country, as I have heretofore shown. The committee was of the opinion that inasmuch as the Administrator supplemented the $50,000,000 of 1933 by almost $50,000,000 more, in the pending bill an authorization of $50,000,000 would be reasonable in the continuing emergency.

I say, in all fairness, the provision for $50,000,000 carried in this bill in reality will be approximately $47,000,000 less than that expended during the current year for that same or similar purposes as I have pointed out.

Mr. SNELL. Was there any evidence produced to show that it was necessary to put that amount at this time in that work?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No. This is an authorization. Yours is a fair question. If the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations shows that it is not necessary to appropriate that entire amount, it is not compulsory and will not be appropriated.

Mr. SNELL. I know the gentleman says it is only an authorization, but the statement has been made on the floor of the House that they want this authorization so that they can go ahead and make their plans, and the gentleman knows that when we pass this authorization, you will expect the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate that money.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In many cases the entire authorization is not appropriated in 1 year.

Mr. SNELL. But you admit you have not any facts before your committee?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Oh, I have said that they have spent this year approximately $97,000,000 on this and similar items, and that we only provide for $50,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. But they have done all the work that is necessary.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If it is not necessary I say the money should not be appropriated.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. TABER. You say "not less than $50,000,000"?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have no objection to saying "$50,000,000" if that will satisfy the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include, first, a schedule showing the amounts collected from motor-vehicle and gas taxes from 1917 up to 1934, and expenditures for Federal-aid highways; secondly, the allocation of the $400,000,000 appropriation of 1933 to the States, and thirdly, allotments of the $50,000,000 to the various national parks and forest highways, roads, and public lands, and Indian reservations, trails, and the allocation of the additional approximated $9,000,000 and $37,000,000 to which I referred, for the national parks and the improvement of the national forests, parks and Indian reservations, and generally to revise and extend my remarks on the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of increasing employment by providing for emergency construction of public highways and other related projects there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of not less than $400,000,000 for allocation under the provisions of section 204 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (in addition to any sums heretofore allocated under such section), in making grants under such section to the highway departments of the several States to be expended by such departments pursuant to the provisions of such section, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed 1½ percent of the allotment of this appropriation to any State may be used for surveys and plans of projects for future construction on the Federal-aid system in such State.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. The language of this section provides that there is authorized to be appropriated the sum of not less than $400,000,000. That is, in effect, a mandatory piece of legislation, and must result in an appropriation. This bill does not come from the Committee on Appropriations and therefore this section, with that language in it, is out of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order is not well taken. This is not an appropriation. If it were, the point of order would be well taken, but this is an authorization. Therefore, the point of order does not lie.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have an amendment in my hands which I propose to offer making the amount definitely $400,000,000. I stated a moment ago that such an amendment would be satisfactory to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GLOVER). The Chair is ready to rule. This is simply an authorization, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", strike out the words "not less than."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this amendment, as I understand it, is satisfactory to the members of the committee on both sides, and it is offered as a committee amendment. It simply provides definitely for $400,000,000, rather than an uncertain and indefinite amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULLER: On line 8, page 2, strike out the period after the word "State", insert in lieu thereof a semicolon, and add the following: "and provided that not less than 25 percent of the allotment of this appropriation shall be applied to secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, and rural free-delivery mail roads, and public-school bus routes."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not desire to argue the matter.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard if there is any question about it in the mind of the Chair.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to be heard, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, this is not subject to a point of order. It is germane. It is dealing with identically the same subject, and the appropriation or authorization is for the purpose of road building, and the amendment is specifying in what manner it shall be used.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. This is the same amendment that I proposed to offer. I have consented that Mr. FULLER introduce it so as to remove any claim that it is partisan. I maintain that this is germane, because it follows the proviso in the same section. It provides for the disposition of a certain percentage of this money, and it says how it shall be disposed of. This amendment does the same thing. It designates how the money appropriated under this section shall be disposed of. Both of them are positive amendments and do the same identical thing.

It is therefore absolutely germane. The point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. On February 27, 1932, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was presiding, when a similar question arose. The Chair held at that time that a similar amendment was germane.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I may say that this amendment, to all practical purposes, is the Jenkins amendment. I discussed the amendment with the gentleman from Ohio a few moments ago. In my own mind I am convinced that it is perfectly satisfactory to Mr. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads. If it were not, I would not favor it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have a communication here saying it is not satisfactory.

Mr FULLER. I should like to see it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall be very glad to read it in my own time to save the gentleman's time.

Mr. FULLER. In other words, the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads is doing this very same thing now, in a way, through rules and regulations carrying out the intent of Congress which was that not more than 25 percent should be used for rural post roads or feeder roads. Some State commissions, however, take the attitude that if they use $1,000 for this purpose that is sufficient to comply with the language "not more than 25 percent." In my own State there is no controversy about this provision. We feel that it is mandatory; at least we know the intention of Congress, and we seek to carry out the spirit and the letter of the law and use 25 percent for secondary roads, 25 percent for pavements inside cities, and 50 percent on Federal or main trunk lines.

The difficulty arising in the interpretation of the law is that in certain States the highway commissions have held that the classification "feeder roads" means first-class State roads. We know that is not what was originally intended. The result of such an interpretation is that the little communities and townships suffer most, yet they are the places which have the most desperate need. They do not get the relief it was intended they should receive when this law was passed.

The effect of this amendment is to make it mandatory that 25 percent shall be spent on these secondary and feeder roads in every congressional district in the United States. This will prove to be the most popular provision of the bill. The only way we can appropriate money for this purpose under the Constitution is to appropriate it for rural post roads. Adopt this amendment and it will be carrying out the wishes of our constituents.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. This legislation is for the purpose of building roads; that is the purpose for which the money is to be appropriated. Does not the gentleman think it would be of decided advantage in this particular amendment to specify the places and projects for which the money should be earmarked?

Mr. FULLER. Certainly. We all know it to be a fact that in some of the States a Congressman is looked upon as just a joke when he tries to say anything about the places in his State where money appropriated by Congress is to be expended; the State highway commissions pay no attention to him. Pass this amendment and they will pay attention to Congressmen, and you will have the experience of seeing this money spent in every congressional district reaching out into the byways and hedges; and relief will be afforded where it is most sorely needed.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Many counties rely on this money to afford relief in caring for the poor, and they now are asking that 50 percent of this money be earmarked as proposed by the gentleman in his amendment. The time has come when rural and farm-to-market roads should be improved, especially during these trying times. If State highway commissions and the Bureau of Public Roads desire further cooperation and appropriations, they had better carry out the intentions of Congress and stop using all the money for Federal and high-class State roads.

In the building of these feeder or rural roads Congress does not intend that the money should be used for surveys and plans on a large scale, nor for the spending of thousands of dollars per mile. If present conditions are not corrected, I predict that much of this money will be allowed to counties to be distributed by the county road commissions.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL], who has served so many years on this committee, how he feels about specifically earmarking 25 percent of this fund for this specific use? He is well acquainted with Mr. MacDonald and Mr. MacDonald's views with reference to this work.

Mr. DOWELL. I am heartily in favor of it. I think it ought to be adopted. Mr. MacDonald is one of the finest road engineers in the country.

Mr. FULLER. In that I fully concur and know he desires the rural roads should receive aid.

Mr. DOWELL. I think we ought to follow his suggestions.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio very kindly submitted substantially the same amendment to the Chairman of the Roads Committee 2 or 3 days ago. The gentleman from Arkansas submitted the amendment to the committee during the general debate. Members of the Roads Committee considered the amendment and referred it to the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads because it was thought by members of the committee that in writing substantive legislation we should be careful. It is rather difficult to get it written properly on the floor of the House.

I call attention to the fact that this is an authorization for a grant. The Federal Government cannot build all the roads in a State. I am in sympathy with those who speak for the feeder roads. This authorization provides for the expenditure of the money under the provisions and allocations of section 204 of the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933. This section provides in paragraph 2 for expenditure in emergency construction of secondary or feeder roads to be agreed upon by the State highway departments and the Secretary of Agriculture.

The pending amendment is that not less than 25 percent be applied to secondary or feeder roads. I cannot see that repeating the language here is going to change the meaning.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman if he will give me a chance to make my statement. I am profoundly interested in improving these secondary roads.

I repeat, we are using Federal money not to match but to grant, and it strikes me that we had better follow the liberal provisions that we made last year in order to satisfy our friends from the cities and populous States. There was a regulation that 25 percent be expended in the cities and 25 percent in secondary or feeder roads. The regulations provided not to exceed 25 percent for feeder roads. That is the difference here. The bill contemplates not to exceed 25 percent, and the amendment not less than 25 percent.

I referred the matter to the Chief of the Bureau of Roads, and I want to read to you his report; quoting from a letter to me from Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, dated March 9, 1934, in response to my request for his opinion as to said amendment:

> With respect to the further proviso that not less than 25 percent of the amount of the appropriation shall be applied to secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, mail roads, and public-school-bus roads, it is believed that such a provision would work a hardship in some of the States that are so far behind in the improvement of their main highways. It is suggested, therefore, that any provision along this line should be limited to not more than 25 percent and preferably that it should be left to be taken care of in the certificate of apportionment and in the regulations in a similar manner to what was done when the $400,000,000 was apportioned among the States on June 23 of last year.

Mr. MacDonald says wherever it is possible to put that program in effect it is being done. He calls attention in this letter, from which I read, to the fact that Congress did not undertake to make the allocation in the act last year and that provision was made for 50 percent to be allotted to Federal highways, 25 percent to municipalities, and 25 percent to feeder roads by regulation. Here is the language of the regulation; I believe that it is sufficient. If in Ohio and if in Arkansas you want more feeder roads and can otherwise comply with the Federal regulations in connection with the expenditure of the money, it can be taken care of, because here is the regulation; and I quote the regulation:

> Not more than 50 percent of the funds apportioned to any State under this act shall be applied to projects on the Federal-aid highway system outside of the corporate limits of municipalities; not less than 25 percent of such funds shall be applied to projects on extensions of the Federal-aid highway system into and through municipalities; and not more than 25 percent of such funds shall be applied to secondary or feeder roads until provision has been made for the satisfactory completion of at least 90 percent of the initial limiting Federal-aid highway system in such State.

This 90-percent provision was inserted in a highway bill reported by the committee at the request of our friends from Ohio a few years ago.

Here is the further regulation:

> Upon a proper showing by any State that, either all needed improvements on extensions of the Federal-aid highway system into and through municipalities can be completed with an expenditure less than 25 percent of the State's apportionment, or that municipal authorities are unable or unwilling to obtain the necessary rights-of-way for needed improvements, or for other reasons, the Secretary of Agriculture may revise the above percentages with reference to such State. The reconstruction of existing facilities that are adequate for traffic shall not be considered needed improvements.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 4 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. MacDonald concludes the communication by saying:

> It is believed that it will be much more desirable from the standpoint of the States as a whole.

We are legislating for the Nation. There must be some flexibility. The Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads has demonstrated that he wants to comply with the desires of our friends from Ohio and elsewhere where he can. Let us not hinder those States that have not completed as much as 40 or 50 percent of their highway program.

Mr. MacDonald states and I quote further from said letter to me:

It is believed that it will be much more desirable from the standpoint of the States as a whole to fix the percentage applicable to secondary or feeder roads by the method followed last year as indicated by the above quotations from the certificate of apportionment and the regulations, than to incorporate such provisions in the statute where it would be less flexible for meeting particular situations.

The committee follows his recommendation and thinks the amendment unnecessary and that it should be left to regulation rather than statute.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. In the last appropriation we made of $3,200,000,000 for public works were certain allocations for highways.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Under the very regulations that the gentleman has read, is where all of these abuses that were discussed on the floor of the House and these discriminations have occurred. May I ask the gentleman as one Member out of 435 of the House if he knows what is being done with the $3,200,000,000 which we appropriated.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will be glad to discuss that with the gentleman anytime. For my part I favor earmarking all Public Works funds, including highway, flood-control, public buildings, and river and harbor improvements.

Mr. FULLER. There is 75 percent earmarked now. The gentleman from Mississippi does not seek to leave the impression before the House that he is speaking for the chairman and all the members of the committee when he says that they are opposed to this amendment I offered?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No. I endeavored to answer the gentleman's question. I am sympathetic with the gentleman's purpose, but I believe as a member of that committee or of any other committee that it is my duty, as it is yours, and I think the Members will agree with me, to give the facts to the House and when Mr. MacDonald was quoted here as favoring the amendment that the gentleman proposed, I thought the House was entitled to have the statement that Mr. MacDonald made on the subject.

Mr. FULLER. I know the gentleman has been of great service to the country, but I did not think he was attempting to quote the chairman or the members of the committee when he said they were opposed to my amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No. I was reading from a letter of the Chief of the Bureau of Roads in response to my request for his report on your amendment and I want to say in all fairness that no matter how sympathetic I may be with the gentleman's amendment and his purpose, in my judgment, it is better to go along with the act as it was written last year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, may I put the gentleman right as to the amendment?

Mr. FULLER. Did not the gentleman tell me he was for the amendment not 5 minutes ago?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I said I was not sure.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

This is the same amendment which heretofore in these discussions has been referred to as the "Jenkins amendment." Mr. Fuller introduced it with my approval. I am glad to see the sentiment of the House is overwhelmingly for the amendment, and I appreciate it. It is very evident there is no serious opposition to this amendment and, on the contrary, there is overwhelming support for it. As to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], who sought to quote Mr. MacDonald, I should like to say for his information and for the information of all those who would like to support this amendment, that an interview by an engineer from my district with Mr. MacDonald and his assistants was responsible for the agitation out of which this amendment comes.

I am not here to speak for Mr. MacDonald, but I know, with all the certainty that I know anything, that he will not oppose this amendment in the least, and I defy anybody to take that letter and find in it any serious opposition to the amendment.

Let me review the facts, Mr. Chairman. Many of you were not here at the inception of this discussion and may not appreciate how this question comes up.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. If we leave it to Mr. MacDonald and he leaves it, under his regulations, to the State departments or commissions, as he did last year, the matter will be handled in the same way, will it not?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman that under the language of the N.I.R.A. a State director of highways has much more authority than Mr. MacDonald, the Federal Director, and I will read the language to you and prove it. Let us read the language:

For expenditure in emergency construction on secondary and feeder roads to be agreed upon by the State highway department and the Secretary of Agriculture.

This is the language and under this language they are both on an equality, but here is the important language, in the next two lines:

Such grants shall be available for payments of the full cost of surveys, plans, improvements, and construction of secondary or feeder roads on projects which shall be submitted by the State highway departments.

Mr. MAY. That is it exactly.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The State highway department has more authority than Mr. MacDonald, and when we could not get action out of the State highway department we came to Mr. MacDonald to interpret this language, and the language is that not more than 25 percent shall be spent. An expenditure of $1 would meet that requirement. Mr. MacDonald, or one of his assistants, told my people that if we would lay down the law to the State highway department he would do as we wished. But we had no way to lay down the law to him but to array public sentiment, and we arrayed public sentiment by getting every Rural Free Delivery man and every superintendent of schools and every county commissioner, as well as everybody else in that section of the State, interested and we went up to the Governor, and while he is a Democrat, he is a good fellow, and I am not here to say anything against him. [Applause.] He told us in the privacy of his own chambers what he would do, but in the State of Ohio, as everybody who lives in that State knows, we have a highway director who is more powerful than the Governor. He has the machine and the organization; but we got an assurance from the Governor that would justify us in believing that we would get one fourth, or the full 25 percent. But how much did we get? He meant to do it—and I am not criticizing him unduly—but he could not do what he should do, because the highway director wanted to keep his machine oiled up, and we only got about $600,000 for C.W.A. and everything else. We should have gotten four million.

Now, listen to this: In Ohio there are hundreds of miles of C.W.A. work started for the benefit of the country people that could not be finished, and this money will finish those roads, and you gentlemen from Ohio know this is right. The Congressman from Ohio whose district adjoins mine knows it is right, and I may say that there is not a Democratic Congressman from Ohio who should oppose this amendment, because he knows the situation there. I do not want to make it an Ohio issue, and it is not necessary to do that. While Ohio is the greatest State in the Union, it is not necessary to make this an Ohio issue. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true—and I call attention to page 22 of the hearings—there was allocated $3,800,000 to secondary or feeder roads in Ohio?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I answer the gentleman in this way? I cannot give the exact figures, but the last time I saw the figures the State of Ohio had not used up half of its money, because of inefficiency of administration and politics, and the same thing is true in other States.

Mr. SECREST. If the gentleman will yield, I think I can answer the gentleman's question. Three million six hundred and seventy-seven thousand dollars had been allocated to secondary roads on May 5.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; that is right.

Mr. SECREST. But only $600,000 of that amount was on county or township roads, and the rest was on State feeder roads.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. They are secondary roads, nevertheless.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As I recall, in the consideration of the N.I.R.A. before our committee last year, it was the intention of our committee to broaden the definition of secondary or feeder roads so as to include roads which, under the regulations of the Bureau of Roads, had not theretofore been considered feeder roads.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes. The gentleman is exactly right, and I explained that a while ago, and I am pleased that the gentleman supports my amendment. His support will go far toward aiding its passage.

Mr. MAY. This simply shows that the definition of the term is left to the State commissioner or the State director.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; and we want to clarify that language and make it definite and certain.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; if I have any time remaining.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Does the gentleman think it is fair and just to pick out 25 percent of the roads and make a definite allocation to them and not do a thing for the large and populous cities in your State?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will answer the gentleman in this way: If I had my way, I would take 50 percent of it and use it on the main market thoroughfares and Federal roads, and the other 50 percent I would give to the secondary or feeder roads and to the country roads. That is what I would do about it. Let us get the country people out of the mud. Let us give the countryman and small-town man a chance with his team or with his hands to make a living. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want everybody to understand that this is a friendly amendment. There is no man in or out of Congress that is a greater road enthusiast than I am. I favor road improvement. From 1916 to the present I have voted for every road appropriation. I am for this bill.

But this is Federal money. I feel that it has not been equitably expended heretofore throughout the several States. Inasmuch as this is Federal money, I think we ought to earmark it.

I had prepared an amendment to require a certain amount to be expended for the improvement of all rural mail routes and star routes. If these improvements were made, then the county commissioners would have enough money to connect the roads up with connecting links. I venture the assertion that there is not a congressional district in the United States that, if the people had their way, they would not vote for this amendment, and would want their representatives in Congress to vote to have inserted in this bill more in detail how this money should be spent.

I know in my State the feeder roads have been interpreted to mean State highways. I know this money has not been expended on the farm-to-market roads.

That is what I am trying to have done in supporting this amendment to this bill. I want the money earmarked, and make it certain that more money is to be spent in the improvement of the farm-to-market roads—that they shall be graded and improved so that the farmers who live in the rural sections will be able to use them. I want it to provide that the money shall be spread more equitably throughout every county and congressional district. As a friend of road legislation and as a friend of this bill, I am in favor of the amendment.

My only fear is that the amendment is not sufficiently definite. It refers to secondary or feeder roads and is almost if not the exact language contained in section 204 of the National Recovery Act. I am afraid that if this amendment is not clarified it will be interpreted the same way by the Director of Roads. I am in favor of this amendment or any amendment that will direct that the money be expended on the rural roads. The amendment I had prepared made it mandatory to improve all roads over which the mail is carried, either rural routes or star routes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment by Mrs. McCARTHY: After the word "routes" in the amendment insert the following: "Such expenditure to be made under the supervision of the State reemployment director in cooperation with the county commissioners in the county where the money is allocated."

Mr. FULLER and Mr. WHITTINGTON made a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. FULLER. The amendment it not germane, and it is contrary to organic law. The organic law is that it shall be controlled by the highway department. I will reserve the point of order.

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order might be sustained if this was a case of matching Federal funds with State funds, but it should be recognized that there is no matching of funds under this bill. This is an outright grant, a relief measure, if you please, intended to relieve unemployment, and this bill will be of practically no benefit in my own district. According to recent headlines in the newspapers, western Kansas has had the driest 4 months in the history of the Weather Bureau established in 1883. This morning's Washington Post quotes Secretary Wallace as stating that the country is losing a million bushels of wheat a day on account of drought conditions. We already have a 60-percent loss of crops in my own district. The Federal Highway Commission recently sent me a map showing how they propose to allocate the funds that they are expecting to receive under this bill. Very few of my counties—and there are 26 of them, comprising one fourth of the entire State of Kansas—will share to any great extent in the benefits granted under this bill. What are you going to do for those hundreds of farmers in that drought-stricken area, when they have lost 60 percent of their crops and when they are shipping their stock out because of lack of water? The only way that we can get any benefit to earmark one fourth of these funds for use on farm-to-market roads and rural routes; and this amendment is germane because it is a relief measure and it is an allocation of relief funds to aid the unemployed.

It is incidental that part of these public works and relief funds are to be used for road work instead of public buildings, and that designation is immaterial. I ask the Members of this House to support this amendment if we really intend it to be an unemployment relief measure. In my own State, the highway commission will use these funds for political purposes, as they have in the past, according to the dozens of letters of protest received in my office. Most of the money they will get will be spent in the eastern part of the State where the vote is the heaviest, and the rewards will go to the political workers, rather than being allocated on the basis of need for road building or unemployment relief; in other words, trafficking in politics at the expense of suffering humanity. Under the map submitted to me by the State highway commission, my own county was not to receive one dime of these funds, and several other counties in the Sixth District of Kansas would not share in the benefits under this bill. I ask support of this amendment.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. I think this amendment should be so that each county or all of the roads are assured of their proportionate share, and it should not be left to the situation the gentlewoman describes, where a few of the counties in the eastern part of the State will get it all.

Mrs. McCARTHY. That is true.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, while I am in favor of the principle advocated by the gentlewoman's amendment, yet I maintain that it is not germane and is subject to a point of order, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment to the amendment seeks to change the organic law. The original amendment seeks only to limit how the fund shall be used, and the amendment to the amendment is clearly not germane. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mrs. KAHN: Page 2, after the last word of the previous amendment, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of any money authorized to be appropriated by this act shall be used to purchase or contract for any article other than those of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States, notwithstanding that such articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States cost more, if such excess of cost be not unreasonable.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is exactly like the limitation put on every appropriation bill applying to the major departments of the Government. It is, word for word, the limitation put on the War Department and on the Navy Department and on the other department bills. If this bill is really a bill for relief and to relieve unemployment, it seems to me that if we can extend it to lines other than road building without being detrimental to the main object of the bill it should be done. It will help thousands of workmen in other branches of labor besides construction. Regarding the point of order raised against this amendment, as this is part of every other appropriation bill and is a limitation upon the appropriation, I do not see how it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman want to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment of Mrs. KAHN.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Kahn amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the amendment is not germane to this legislation. I am not speaking to the merits.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? Does he not think it is a limitation?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is a proper place for such legislation, but it would not be here. The bill has to do with the allocation of funds among the States; not with the material that shall be used by a contractor. I suggest that it is not germane. It may be contradictory, also.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. The bill specifically provides under the amendment just passed, where the Chair overruled the point of order, that we could pass upon the question of the allocation of these funds, whether they are for primary or secondary roads.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have no objection to allocation, but the amendment has nothing to do with allocation. It has to do with the kinds of materials used.

Mr. DINGELL. The same principle is involved.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GLOVER). The Chair is ready to rule. A similar question was raised on December 9, 1930. Chairman SNELL was presiding, and it was decided on that occasion that the amendment was germane. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to detain the committee, except to say that I do not know that I am prepared to say what the effect of this amendment would be; but I do insist, Mr. Chairman, that the better course would be for the Members who desire to have the substantive law changed to present those matters to the Roads Committee. I do not know what the State highway commissions or the Director of the Bureau of Roads would say with respect to this character of legislation. Personally, I think it should be left to the States. I know we have passed acts of Congress to go as far as we could to provide for the use of domestic products in Government works, but I am not prepared to say whether the program provided by this act would be promoted by such an amendment. For that reason it is my thought that the amendment should be voted down. It should come along in the regular order, so the Committee on Roads could investigate and report. There is existing legislation requiring the use of domestic products where practicable. It strikes me that the amendment is for the benefit of the oil companies and oil magnates, and is not in the interest of highway construction. The existing law on the subject is ample and is satisfactory to all except the selfish oil interests.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the lady from California [Mrs. KAHN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. KAHN) there were ayes 48 and noes 79.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mrs. KAHN and Mr. CARTWRIGHT to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 53 and noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois: On page 2, after the word "routes" in the Fuller amendment, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided further, That any funds allocated under the provisions of section 204 A (2) of such act shall also be available for the cost of any construction that will provide safer traffic facilities or definitely eliminate existing hazards to pedestrian or vehicular traffic."

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make the funds authorized by this legislation available for the construction of facilities that will make grade crossings safer for pedestrians as well as vehicular traffic. Under the National Recovery Act, section 204, this same provision was included, but it applied only to State and Federal-aid roads. My amendment would make this money available for that kind of protection on the secondary or feeder roads. It is exactly the same language as is included in the other section of the basic law in this case, section 204 of the National Recovery Act. I have discussed this with the chairman of the committee, and I believe it is acceptable to the committee.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I am instructed by the committee to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMPSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMPSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 1, line 7, after the word "of", strike out "$400,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$200,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, if we do not get to the point where we stop this large spending of money and getting nowhere, with conditions getting worse all the time as the result of this large expenditure of money and more people on the relief rolls all the time, we will never get out of the depression.

Now, let us pass this amendment and cut down the amount of this authorization and start in the right direction.

It appears in the hearings in this case that it would take about $3,000 to put one man to work for a year on these jobs. One million three hundred and fifty-four thousand is the number that the Commissioner estimates will be employed at the peak, and I am using that figure, and I am also using the figure of $450,000,000 which is the amount of money that will be available under this bill, under the State appropriation, and under the appropriation already made by the Agriculture Department bill. That means $3,000 to put one man to work. We cannot relieve unemployment on that basis and get by with it. We might just as well realize it now as a couple of years from now when we will be so deep in the slough that we will never get out.

I hope that the House will adopt this amendment and cut this amount down.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman hold that when one man is put to work by reason of the appropriation of this money that nobody else is put to work to supply materials?

Mr. TABER. The estimate that the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads has made is that the number directly and indirectly to be employed at the peak—not the average, remember—will be 1,354,000 men. That estimate appears at page 1 of the hearings.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman mean to say that nobody else will be put to work except that number?

Mr. TABER. That is the number who will be put to work directly and indirectly according to this estimate.

Mr. KELLER. Then I challenge the estimate.

Mr. TABER. It is the testimony of the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. KAHN. Had my amendment been adopted, hundreds of thousands of other men would have been put to work because it would have opened up the industries of this country.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Let me remind the gentleman that this authorization is not for the next fiscal year only, but may cover 2 years. It is a total authorization. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, we would have a less appropriation than we had in 1932.

Mr. TABER. If we adopt this amendment and cut the amount down, we will have made a start toward holding things down.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the committee has thoroughly discussed this. The committee has presented the best bill they could work out.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORD: Page 2, line 4, after the colon, insert the following: "Provided, That the amount granted under this act to any State shall be pro rated for expenditure in the counties or similar political subdivisions of such State in accordance with the number of unemployed (as certified by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration reports) in said political subdivisions, notwithstanding any law of such State to the contrary."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment certainly is not germane for it proposes an entirely different system of allocation of the funds.

This matter has already been discussed but if the gentleman wishes to make a statement I will reserve the point of order. I think, however, it is very clear that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that the Chair overruled a point of order against a similar amendment offered earlier this afternoon.

My amendment is merely a continuation of the subject dealt with in the first section, unemployment relief. The language in my amendment does not deal with the allocation of the money by the Federal Government but only by the States after they have received it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is purely a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment is in the nature of an amendment to existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts: Page 1, line 9, after the figures "1933", insert the following: "except that where said section reads "one eighth" it shall hereafter read "one quarter."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to take up any great amount of time in the discussion of this amendment. I have talked about it at length previously in the consideration of the rule.

I hold that if this were a bill carrying the usual amount, that the allocation decided upon might be reasonable. When we raise the amount from $100,000,000 to $400,000,000 it puts the measure in the classification of an appropriation to relieve unemployment. This being the case, the large industrial centers, with their many hundreds of thousands of unemployed, should be given more consideration than they are getting. I have, therefore, offered this amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman state the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The purpose of the amendment is to double the amount allocated on the basis of population.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What census does the gentleman take as the basis of population?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I take the basis assumed in the original N.I.R.A. Act. In that act the figure carried is one eighth. By this amendment I seek to make it one quarter.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may again read the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the Clerk again read the Martin amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late; the amendment has already been discussed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The question is whether you want to give simple justice to the industrial States with their many thousands of unemployed people and raise the amount which might be allocated for their relief. I am not going to say anything more because every one in the House knows the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The provisions of the gentleman's amendment would not distribute the money to human labor as opposed to machinery. Section 206 of the N.I.R.A. did provide that the money should be expended as follows:

Provided further, That human labor shall be used upon such construction projects in lieu of machinery wherever practical and consistent with sound economy.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. My amendment does not affect that matter one way or the other.

Mr. GILCHRIST. But this is a relief measure.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, with all deference to the gentleman, there are three matters governing in the matter of distribution. The amendment is loosely drawn. It covers only the matter of population and omits area and mileage. The gentleman is trying to increase the allocations to the more populous States, but he is likely to get both his State and every other State in trouble. The wealthier and more populous States were among the first to absorb their allotments of the $400,000,000 in 1933.

Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment should be voted down.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not entitled to the floor. The one who is entitled to the floor is one who opposes the amendment, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman who preceded me opposed the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has been recognized already.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman is not entitled to recognition.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That stage has been passed.

Mr. DOWELL. It has not been passed. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi was recognized in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Illinois is now recognized in support of the amendment. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not right very often, but this time he is right.

The gentleman by his amendment aims to provide employment in the sections of the country and in the States where there is the greatest unemployment. This legislation is in that direction. We are informed that it is for the purpose of providing employment. If that is the case, we should proceed with these improvements and with the road building in the sections that will give employment to these unfortunate people for whom nothing has been done.

In the large centers we still have nearly all of our labor unemployed. We are aiding the farmers, and we are aiding the rural sections, but unfortunately the people in the large centers have not been aided to the extent that they should. We still have thousands upon thousands who have been unemployed for 2 or 3 years. They are the heads of large families and they are seeking employment. They desire to work. They are not desirous of being on the charity rolls any longer. They want to earn their own living. And why should they not be given the opportunity?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. All time has expired on this section.

Mr. SABATH. The time has not expired. And this should not be taken out of my time either.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, all time on this section has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has not expired, I am informed.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. This has been gone over and over again, and there is no use repeating what has already been said.

Mr. SABATH. It might have been gone over. The gentleman has covered a lot of things over and over again; but I am sure he has done an injustice to the people who are entitled to justice. I am only pleading for the most deserving people of our Nation.

I voted for all these appropriations—for the cotton bill and for every other bill that was brought in by you gentlemen—and I will vote for this bill; but I feel that the employment which will be created by the appropriation of the $400,000,000, and a right proportion of it, should be used in the communities where it is needed most.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not true that the unemployment distress is greater by percentage in the large and populous cities?

Mr. SABATH. There is no question about that, and the statistics will demonstrate it clearly. I again plead with you gentlemen to be fair and just to the hundreds of thousands of people that have had no chance to earn a dollar in the last few years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 31, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that general debate on this section has been exhausted.

Mr. DOWELL. May I propound a question to the gentleman?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman wait until we get to the next section?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILCHRIST: On page 2, line 8, after the word "state", strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided further, That the maximum of human labor shall be used in the construction of such construction projects in lieu of machinery wherever practicable and consistent with sound economic and public advantage."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. To further increase employment by providing for emergency construction of public highways and other related projects, there is hereby also authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of not less than $50,000,000 for allotment under the provisions of section 205 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (in addition to any sums heretofore alloted under such section), to be expended for highways, roads, trails, bridges, and related projects in national parks and forests, Indian reservations, and public lands, pursuant to the provisions of such section, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, in line 13, page 2, after the word "of", strike out the words "not less than."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Page 2, line 13, after the word "of", strike out the words "not less than."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 2, line 13, after the word "than", strike out "$50,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to reduce the appropriation for forest roads and trails and that sort of thing from $50,000,000 to $25,000,000.

The average expenditures in normal times for this particular purpose were something like $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. I do not believe it is necessary to go any further than this to take care of the things that need to be done along this line. We will spend a great amount of money and we will get nothing for it if we go on with these large expenditures for this particular purpose, and I think $25,000,000 is enough. In addition to this, I understand there will still be left about $40,000,000 of P.W.A. money in the year 1935, so that, if the amendment is adopted, there will be about $65,000,000 to spend.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I wonder if gentlemen from the East who object to so large a proportionate allotment for roads in national forests and through public lands understand either the importance or the size of these public lands or what part of the scheme in national road building they include.

The public lands of the United States embrace an area almost as large as all the States of the Atlantic seaboard. My own State of Oregon is as large as all New England, and more than half of its area is Federal land. You cannot cross from one State to another in the West without going over a part of the public domain. You cannot cross from the eastern to the western part of any of the Pacific Coast States or of any of the Rocky Mountain States without traveling for miles over a part of the public domain.

Now, in order to make a national system of highways throughout the country the Government must provide in every road-building program for roads and highways to be built in the public domain, and, obviously, the Government must build these roads at its own expense. The Western States cannot be expected to tax themselves to build roads on Government land.

In an appropriation of $400,000,000 for road construction in the several States an allotment of $50,000,000 for roads on the public domain is a very small amount indeed, and anything less than $50,000,000 for this item in a road-building program of $400,000,000 would be detrimental to the program contemplated by this bill and wholly unjust to the land-grant States where so much of the road mileage is in the public domain. I hope, for these reasons, the amendment will be voted down.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I want to speak for a minute in protest against this amendment, and I want to plead with those people who have great, rich populations and States, and when I do it I recognize, as every man and woman sitting in this House recognizes, the fact that there is no one of us but has a district with unemployed friends in that district who must be cared for; but this is not a program for congested districts. This is a program for those of us who have roads to build and national parks and trails and scenery, and it offers to those of us who are destitute in the big States, whose areas are great and whose populations are small, the kind of relief that keeps men's souls alive, the kind of relief that means real work and real wages and a sense of peace in a job that will last.

While I am talking about this I should like to say that I do not think any of us should leave and go home until we have put our names back of a bill taking care of the unemployed of the United States until we get back next January. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, strike out the period after the word "expended", insert a comma and add the following: "and the further sum of not more than $10,000,000 for allotments under the provisions of sections 202, 203, and 205 (b) of said National Industrial Recovery Act (in addition to any sums heretofore allotted under such section for the purposes hereinafter mentioned) to be expended for the construction, repair, and improvement of public highways, roads, trails, and bridges, and related projects, in Alaska, Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and to remain available until expended."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not the proper place for the amendment. This section refers to highways, roads, trails, bridges, and related projects in national parks and forests, and so forth, and has no relation to Territories. The amendment is not germane at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. There is hereby also authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000 for an emergency relief fund, which shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of Agriculture, in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, after receipt from a State or States of application therefor, in the repair or reconstruction of highways and bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways damaged or destroyed by floods, hurricanes, earthquakes, or landslides when he shall find, after investigation, that the damage to or the destruction of such highways or bridges has resulted from such unusual or extraordinary condition.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, strike out all of section 3.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any excuse for going ahead and authorizing an appropriation of $10,000,000 for emergency relief. If we are going to do something like this, we are delegating the authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to do things that ought not to be done unless Congress itself passes on each individual case.

If a case is not important enough to justify Congress in passing on it, it ought not to be included here.

We ought to take these things up from time to time if they are important.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Suppose a cyclone or tornado or earthquake wrecks a community when Congress is not in session.

Mr. TABER. You are not going to do anything with this except to have an appropriation in the Treasury for the Secretary of Agriculture to monkey with. I do not believe Congress is going to vote this kind of an appropriation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. What States are intended to be benefited by this appropriation?

Mr. TABER. They have not let us in on that; we do not know; but they are going ahead to make a blind authorization. If the proposition has not merit enough to come before Congress before it is passed on it ought not to be passed on at all.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DRIVER] this morning particularly referred to this section of the bill, stating that it was one of the best features in it.

Section 3 comprises a bill that I have introduced for the last 6 or 7 years, and which was always strangled in the Roads Committee under Republican chairmanships.

It is admitted that practically all of the States are no longer, in the event of an emergency, able to provide further money to match any Federal appropriation. This simply provides that in case of a great calamity, such as floods, hurricanes, cyclones, earthquakes, where great destruction of Federal-aid roads occurs, the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, can go there and by a lump sum immediately relieve that section.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. In the case of a great disaster such as the gentleman is speaking of, I doubt there would be very much opposition to some relief, but I do not remember of any time when we have ever appropriated or authorized an appropriation of money thinking that perhaps one might come in the future. Does the gentleman remember any such case as that?

Mr. WARREN. Of course the gentleman knows that Congress might not be in session, and the gentleman remembers that on three different occasions, if I recall correctly, the States of Vermont, Alabama, and Kentucky came to Congress after great disasters had happened in those States.

Mr. SNELL. But they were specific cases, and we knew all about them. Congress met the issue. This is an entirely different situation from that.

Mr. WARREN. But they had to wait for years or more before they could reconstruct the roads while this provides for immediate reconstruction.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman cannot find a single case where we have ever gone ahead and appropriated upon the ground that perhaps there would be a disaster some time in the future.

Mr. WARREN. If there is no disaster, not a penny of it will be used.

Mr. SNELL. What is the use of supporting that kind of legislation?

Mr. WARREN. To have it ready in case of an emergency.

Mr. SNELL. I never heard of any such argument as that on the floor of the House in the 18 years that I have been here, and no man never put up such an argument as that.

Mr. WARREN. Well, you will admit it is a good argument.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] to a condition that obtains in Idaho on the Continental Divide right this minute. Last year we were struck with teriffic floods that tore out 50 miles of the main arterial highway on the northern road east and west, and we could not make the repairs. The whole traffic between the great centers of the Pacific coast and the eastern centers, like Chicago and St. Paul, was tied up because of this emergency, and it is to meet such an emergency as this that this provision is put in the bill. I certainly hope the committee will oppose the amendment and vote it down.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. In a situation such as the gentleman speaks of, he ought to appeal to the P.W.A. That is what they have the money for now. It is to meet those emergencies and put people to work. We will make another appropriation in a few days of a large sum of money for the same purpose. In the history of this Congress I have never heard of a man asking for an appropriation in advance to meet a condition that may arise in the future.

Mr. WHITE. I assure the gentleman that this Congress is not always in session.

Mr. SNELL. It is in session a good deal of the time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Do we not appropriate money every year for the purpose of extinguishing fires in timberland throughout the country?

Mr. SNELL. That is partly true, because that occurs every year and everyone knows it; but when you are talking about a national catastrophe as somebody mentioned here——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But these fires may happen or they may not happen.

Mr. SNELL. But they always do happen. I have never heard that argument used before by anybody.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, this emergency I refer to is already in existence, and the Public Works money has been exhausted. I think this is a good provision in the bill, and I ask the committee to support it.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment because this authorization for $10,000,000 will establish a precedent to appropriate in anticipation of a need arising in the future. I have failed to observe from the statements of the gentleman from North Carolina any need or actual request for the expenditure of this amount or any portion of it at the present time. It is amazing how picayunish he can be when an appeal is made for a small appropriation to investigate certain vicious activities, where the Government loses millions and the people are mulcted out of hundreds of thousands of dollars. But here he is pleading for an authorization for an appropriation of $10,000,000 in the expectancy that something might occur whereby this sum may be utilized and this, notwithstanding that the Democratic administration will be charged by the Republicans with expending $10,000,000, though no one can tell when it might be spent or needed.

Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes the expenditure of the enormous sum of $400,000,000 for roads, $50,000,000 for roads in national parks, and it is proposed under the pending amendment to authorize an additional $10,000,000 for a contingency. According to the wording of the bill, the fifty millions and the greatest part of this four hundred millions are going to be spent in the western and coast sections of our country. As it is, we in the North have already built most of our roads and find it difficult to obtain enough money to maintain them. Oh, I realize and recognize the fact that the gentlemen from the West and those on the coast are once more looking after their own States; yes, their own districts.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Is not the gentleman from Illinois a heavy landholder in the State of California?

Mr. SABATH. I was at one time before we were struck with the Republican prosperity in 1929, 1930, 1931, and 1932. I have nothing against the gentlemen in getting everything they can for their sections of the country, and I say to them that they have done splendidly.

Mr. Chairman, though my district and the city of Chicago will not be aided or benefited to any degree, as most of this appropriation will go to the rural sections where unemployment is not as acute as in the large centers, I cannot help but congratulate these Democrats from California, Oregon, and Washington, as well as those from Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Nebraska, and Iowa, of all they have accomplished in obtaining the passage of legislation that will be so beneficial and advantageous to their sections, yet the major portions of these appropriations will come from moneys collected in Federal taxes from the people of my and other northern and eastern sections who will not participate to any great degree in the benefits resulting from this legislation. As the oldest Member of the House, I have never heretofore seen in my 28 years' service the determination and cooperation on the part of the Members of the House as that exemplified during the present Congress by the western Democratic Members. During my years of service I have served with such men as Frank Mondell, of Wyoming; Julius Kahn, of California; Philip C. Campbell, of Kansas; Henry Cooper, of Wisconsin, Charles B. Timberlake, of Colorado, Willis B. Hawley, of Oregon; and Burton L. French, of Idaho, all Republicans, who, due to their many years of service, were able to accomplish much for their districts, but in their palmiest days and while they were in power they never succeeded in securing so much beneficial legislation for their States that has been the good fortune of the Democrats from those sections and those States during this and the last session of Congress. This merely shows what determination and cooperation will accomplish, as during the two sessions of the Seventy-third Congress there has been more helpful and beneficial legislation enacted for the Western States and a greater percentage of the appropriations going to those States than ever before in the history of our Nation. The people of that section are to be congratulated upon sending to Congress such a large number of active Democrats, men of ability, who have accomplished so much for their States and who have proved of real service to their people.

Mr. Chairman, I fully appreciate that due to the great drought and the wind and dust storms that the Midwestern, Western, and Coast States suffered tremendous damages and in view of this condition, I shall again aid the Members from those sections in every possible way to obtain additional relief. I feel that their situation is much akin to that of the thousands who lost their all in the great fire in Minnesota some years ago, and I want to say to my colleague Mr. HOIDALE, of Minnesota, that I will do whatever I can at this session of Congress to obtain the passage of legislation which will repay to some extent the sufferers of that conflagration.

I do not regret, Mr. Chairman, my action in cooperating with my colleagues from the Middle, far Western, and Coast States, and to say that I will continue to support them in every possible way.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. HOEPPEL. If the gentleman from Illinois and other Members of Congress will cooperate with the western delegation and enact legislation here giving us remonetization of silver, we will not need any of your appropriations.

Mr. SABATH. I will state to the gentleman [Mr. HOEPPEL] that I have, though I have been unable to attend the meetings of the so-called "silver bloc", advocated, and will continue to work with them for the remonetization of silver. [Applause.]

Before concluding, I cannot refrain from mentioning my conscientious and ever-trying colleague from California [Mr. LEA], with whom I have stood time and again in the furtherance of measures affecting the welfare of his State, which, in the present Congress, was only made possible owing to the splendid cooperation which he had from the new Democratic Members of his Commonwealth. They, like the Members of the State of Washington, under the able leadership of Mr. HILL, chairman of the subcommittee of the powerful Ways and Means, who succeeded in securing exemptions in the revenue act that will save that section, as I am informed, close to 30 to 40 millions of dollars, have done their full part. It is indeed amazing what wonderful results cooperation and determination will achieve. Take my old friend TAYLOR of Colorado, whom no one can deny what he has done for his State, who, due to his influence in the House and the cooperation of his colleagues, and working with such leaders as LEA of California, HILL of Washington, and with the astute Democrats of Nebraska, and hand in hand with that old warhorse from Kansas, Mr. AYRES, with the new Iowa Democratic delegation, who demonstrated wonderful foresight in joining with him, obtained greater consideration and results that they surely can be proud of and can go home with their heads erect in full satisfaction of their accomplishments.

The full measure of credit includes the cooperation extended by the Members of the smaller States of Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona, and Montana, whose persistence and joint help with the membership of the other Western and Coast States brought about this wonderful record of accomplishment. They, too, can return to their constituencies, most of whom they are serving for the first term, proud in the fact that they have performed their duties well and have proved of real service in obtaining the passage of so much beneficial legislation. But in view of my cooperation with you gentlemen, aiding you in every way possible on all the many matters in which you were interested, I hope that when my colleagues and I from the large centers need your aid and cooperation that we may trust and expect to receive it. [Applause.]

In conclusion let me appeal to you gentlemen whom I have helped to the best of my ability and, in fact, obtained the aid of many others from the thickly populated urban sections to help you, that you will reciprocate in lending your support to us when the time comes in securing relief and help for the hundreds of thousands of unfortunate unemployed in our large cities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has expired.

All time has expired on this amendment and this section.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were ayes 31 and noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The limitations in the Federal Highway Act, approved November 9, 1921, as amended and supplemented, upon highway construction, reconstruction, and bridges within municipalities and upon payments per mile which may be made from Federal funds, shall hereafter not apply.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] when he addressed the House sometime ago, as I understood him, stated that the provisions in the Recovery Act are permanent law, and that this bill would come under that law. May I inquire if section 206 of the National Industrial Recovery Act will apply to the provisions of the bill we are now considering?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry, it is my thought that section 206 is applicable for this reason, among others: This bill provides for the allocation and for the expenditure of the funds as provided by section 204, and section 206 provides for the expenditure not only under section 204 but all other sections of title 2 which provides for all public works.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, for the administration of it?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Absolutely.

Mr. DOWELL. And the gentleman interprets section 206 as permanent law, and the bill we are now considering will come under it?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If we reenact section 205 in this bill, yes.

Mr. DOWELL. And will apply as far as this bill under consideration is concerned?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think so.

Mr. DOWELL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 3, line 13, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. —. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the further sum of not more than $10,000,000 for allotment under the provisions of sections 202, 203, and 205 (b) of said National Industrial Recovery Act, in addition to any sum heretofore allotted under said sections for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, to be expended for the construction, repair, and improvement of public highways, roads, trails, bridges, and related projects in Alaska, the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and to remain available until expended."

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us covers like a blanket all parts of the United States and all of its possessions and Territories, except Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Canal Zone, and the Virgin Islands. I do not know why those parts of the United States were omitted. I suppose by inadvertence. It is my duty, as Delegate from Alaska, to call your attention to the fact that citizens of the United States live in the Territory of Alaska and live in these other places, and they are just as much entitled to relief as anybody else. The difficulty is that if Congress passes this bill, and I presume it will be passed, S. 8781, which takes care of all parts of the country except Alaska, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone, the one conclusion to which the administration officials may possibly come is that Congress did not intend to make any provision for these regions unless the bill is amended.

We find by reference to section 205 (b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act the following:

The President may also allot funds made available by this act for the construction, repair, and improvement of public highways in Alaska, the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Therefore, in drawing this proposed amendment I followed the language which is used in section 205 (b), since it was evidently the intent of Congress that in the original act, the National Industrial Recovery Act, the people in Alaska and these other places should be taken care of in a reasonable manner. As a matter of fact, allotments of money have been made under the original act for roads and trails in Alaska in the amount of $1,185,000, and I was informed the other day that $1,000,000 had been allotted for Puerto Rico. Undoubtedly it is true, as a matter of law, that if Congress could make a blanket appropriation for the Public Works Administration to use as it sees fit under the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Administrator could, under the broad terms of that act, specifically section 205 (b), make allotment of funds to Alaska, Puerto Rico, and so forth. But the trouble is, when the appropriation bill comes in, I have been told by Members of this body, that every dollar of it may be earmarked.

Unless, therefore, some provision is put in this roads bill under which an allotment may be made for building roads in Alaska, the chances are we may be left out. There is no sound and substantial reason for discrimination against the citizens of the United States who happen to live in Alaska.

It was said to me by the gentleman from Mississippi, one of the members of the committee, that Alaska is taken care of under the national forests provisions of the bill as written, but it is not. Only 32,000 square miles of Alaska, so far as I recall, fall within the area of the national forests. Of course, that part of the Territory which lies within the national forests can be taken care of, but more than nine tenths of that vast Territory, an area which needs roads as badly as any part of the country, cannot be taken care of under any provision of the bill as now written, as I understand the situation.

I would be glad to answer any questions any Member cares to ask about this matter in order to show that my amendment is a fair, a righteous, and a just amendment. I call attention to the fact that instead of wording my amendment to read that a certain amount is appropriated or may be allotted, I worded it to read that not more than so much is to be allotted, thus leaving it under the control of the P.W.A. as it was before to allot $1,000,000, $500,000, or $2,000,000 or $10,000,000, for roads in these places. We are not trying to bind Congress to say that we shall have a certain amount in any event. We are willing to take our chances with the Public Works Administration, but we ask in the name of fairness, that you give us a fair break in this matter.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment. It has no place, I say with all kindness, in the pending bill.

Provision is made for highway construction in Alaska in the annual appropriation bills. I said, in the opening of my remarks this afternoon, that at present no provision is made for highway construction in the future in the United States, but provision for highway construction in Alaska has continued as heretofore.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, under the Public Works Act of 1933, paragraph 205, subsection (b), it is provided that the President may allot funds made available by this act for the repair and improvement of public highways in Alaska, the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands have never been provided for in any highway construction bill that has ever been passed by Congress, because they were always provided for otherwise. They have been provided for in the Public Works Act of 1933. I very frankly state to the Delegate from Alaska that the allocations made for that Territory were liberal. I take it the President will refer to the matter in his message. Provision will be made for a continuance of the Public Works program during the fiscal year of 1935, and I assume, further, that any funds that may be allocated to the President for expenditure will be available for all necessary needs in Alaska.

In this connection I call attention to the fact that under the Public Works Act of 1933 there was allocated to Alaska $1,662,800; that for roads and repairs to buildings in the Virgin Islands there was allotted $89,500; and $1,000,000 was allocated for roads to Puerto Rico. There was allocated for air fields and buildings in the Canal Zone $2,032,653. So we feel that all these areas were amply provided for in the Public Works Act of last year, and I take it they will be provided for in any Public Works bill that may be passed during the current session.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. DIMOND. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that this amendment is entirely unnecessary in order to secure this result?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Absolutely; and it has no place in this bill. It has never been in any similar bill.

Mr. DIMOND. The gentleman thinks that the allocation can be made out of the appropriation made for the P.W.A.?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If it is in substantially the same terms as at present; yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether this is an administration measure and whether or not this sum of money is provided for by the Budget?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The President has not transmitted his message on public works to Congress as yet.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement just made by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment, since it appears to be unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 365, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am opposed to the bill in its present form.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Roads with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 2, after the word "traffic" where the same appears as the last word of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMPSON], insert the following: "Provided further, That no part of any money authorized to be appropriated by this act shall be used to purchase or contract for any article other than those of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States, notwithstanding that such articles of the growth, production or manufacture of the United States cost more, if such excess of cost be not unreasonable."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 85, nays 207, not voting 138, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—H.R. 8781

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, more than 3,000 years ago the great prophet Isaiah spoke the following words:

A highway shall be there for the redemption of His people.

That sentiment was true then. It is doubly true today; and as we consider this splendid piece of legislation which will make available $400,000,000 for a comprehensive highway building program for the Nation, it is well to discuss the measure from a broad viewpoint and not from the standpoint of narrow sectionalism. In my State of West Virginia we shall receive a smaller amount than many other States, but upon passage of this bill there will be spent in West Virginia millions of dollars for roads which shall not only serve the larger cities of the State but smaller rural sections will benefit.

There was a time in West Virginia when we were more or less of a sectional people, one part of the State feeling its problems were foreign to the other regions. A man was said to come from the northern or eastern panhandles or live south of the Kanawha River. But today, because of the splendid road system which has brought West Virginia out of the mud, opened up new markets, and brought our various sections closer together, we are a united people, and a citizen who lives in our Commonwealth is simply a West Virginian. White ribboned with excellent roads, our people have become neighbors even though miles upon miles separate their own firesides.

In a discussion of this measure on the floor of the House of Representatives, I have regretted to hear opponents of the provisions remark that the great industrial States should have the most roads, and that sections not populated so densely should have little. This to my mind is not the right type of logic to use at this time, because all sections of America will benefit directly or indirectly from the use of this money for a wide-spread road-building program.

America gets its money's worth when funds of the Federal Government are used for highway construction. In a time when our Nation should receive back something substantial for its expenditures we will have under this bill roads which will be permanent to a marked degree and which will serve for years and years to come. In the national forests of West Virginia thousands of dollars will be also provided under provisions of this legislation which will make more accessible to tourists from other States a vast wonderland which today is just coming into its own.

I was glad to support the amendment to the bill which makes it mandatory that 25 percent of the money be used on country-feeder roads. It is well to have great trunk lines, but we must remember to look after the welfare of the farming sections that they can have a year-round outlet to the markets for their products. Under this amendment this is taken care of as it rightly should be, for we must bring to the man at the forks of the roads his share of these needed improvements which make for a happier people.

This legislation aids in taking care of the unemployed of our Nation. It is estimated that 85 percent of each road dollar expended goes into labor of some sort. It aims to cure a condition, and does it well because the results will not be temporary, but will remain to redeem and further the best interests of a progressive people.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have actively supported this bill and gladly joined with other Members from the Western States in supporting the amendment which provides that 25 percent of the $400,000,000 shall be allotted to feeder or rural roads—from home-to-market roads and school-bus roads, which will insure that the country districts will be benefited as well as the cities and towns. The $50,000,000 for roads in national parks, forests, and Indian reservations will provide funds for these worthy projects in my district.

Mr. Speaker, I have joined with our western Members in sponsoring the allotment of $10,000,000 for Federal-aid highways and bridges damaged by floods and other unnatural causes. Ever since the disastrous floods in the State of Washington last December I have sought aid and flood-control relief for southwest Washington. For 30 years the Federal Government has refused to assume any responsibility for the recurrent floods in our State, but we succeeded in obtaining substantial sums from the Civil Works Administration for restoration and repairs in the flooded area of southwest Washington and which has provided employment for thousands of citizens. My bills for preliminary examinations for flood control of the Columbia, Cowlitz, Lewis, and Chehalis Rivers and their tributaries will result in a thorough investigation and survey of conditions by the United States Army engineers and bring permanent relief and protective measures against future floods.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, we have before us for consideration today H.R. 8781, a bill introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT], Chairman of the Committee on Roads.

There is no bill that has been before this Congress in which the people as a whole, of the United States, are more interested than they are in the subject of Federal aid to the States in building good roads. This bill carries an authorization of $460,000,000 for all of the States, and when distribution to each State is made it will give them wonderful relief in building public highways.

There is nothing that has added so much to the development of the United States as the building of public highways. Federal responsibility in cooperating with the States in building the roads is no new issue. The first Federal aid road was built while Thomas Jefferson was President, in 1806. Many of the leading highways in the United States have been completed and they are wonderful revenue producers in producing money now to extend Federal aid assistance. Many of the States have built their concrete roads with State and Federal aid and are depending upon revenue from the sales of gasoline to redeem the obligation they have made for the purpose of building these highways. Practically every State in the Union now has a tax on gasoline and a tax on cars which produces a very large revenue. As soon as the bonded indebtedness of the various States is paid off with this tax, then a road maintenance fund can be retained and a part of this tax if continued, can be used for other purposes, such as that of running the general State governments, supporting schools, and so forth.

The authorization for Federal aid has been rightfully increased every year for the last few years. For instance, in 1916 there was only $5,000,000 appropriated for the Federal aid of the States. Three years ago an appropriation of $80,000,000 was made in addition to the regular Federal aid of $125,000,000 to aid in the employment of more men on the highway work. Last year we had an appropriation of $400,000,000.

It is my opinion, and I think it is well founded, that the Federal Government should abandon the collection of taxes against gasoline and oil and let the States utilize that as a means of getting money to pay off the indebtedness they have incurred on the States, and which will soon be done if all of the money recovered from a tax of this kind is given to the States.

The bill now being considered is not only for the purpose of building highways, but is also for the purpose of giving employment to the unemployed. The United States has spent much money in the last 2 or 3 years to relieve the unemployed, and rightfully so, but it is certainly the duty of Congress in this bill to earmark as much of this money as is possible to projects which will give the greatest amount of employment to the unemployed and to be invested in public improvement where we will get a dollar's worth of improvement for each dollar expended for labor.

Money put into the building of public highways or in public buildings where it will save the Government the immense amounts it is paying out for rent is money wisely spent.

It was the intent of Congress when they passed the bill last year for public-road works that 25 percent of it should be expended in the construction of farm-to-market and lateral post roads, but under the construction placed upon it by the highway departments in the various States very little of it was used for that purpose. In this bill we are providing and earmarking 25 percent of it to go for that purpose. An amendment was adopted to the bill on the floor of the House which reads as follows:

Provided, That not less than 25 percent of the allotment of this appropriation shall be applied to secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, and rural free-delivery-mail roads, and public-school-bus routes.

This will insure that if this bill passes the Senate, and we have every reason to believe it will, that 25 percent of this money allotted back to the States will be allotted to the various counties in the States and worked out by the county judges under the set-up they now have for working roads.

The Constitution of the United States provides for the building of post roads. That is the character of roads that this bill and amendment seeks to build. This is the first provision of law that specifically indicates 25 percent of the money allotted to the States be used for this purpose.

I introduced a bill in Congress 2 years ago asking Federal aid for the building of these lateral post roads which is authorized by the Constitution of the United States.

I am glad, in this amendment to this bill today, to realize that we have put that principle into actual law, and an enlargement of the building of post roads and lateral roads from the farm to the market each year will be the greatest aid that could possibly come from the expenditure of public funds, and we hope to see this increased from now on from year to year until we are expending large sums for the completion of this emergency work.

I am indeed glad to have the honor of presiding as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union during the consideration of this bill. This bill is not an appropriation but an authorization for appropriation, and whatever sum that we get depends upon what is appropriated by the Committee on Appropriations. We are glad the policy of that committee is to follow the will of the Congress in appropriating and using public funds where it is made known by Congress that it should be used.

I hope in the public works bill that is to follow this week that in every instance that public funds will be so earmarked and designated that it cannot be said that any part of the funds appropriated and used by the Government was not justly used.

WILD-LIFE CONSERVATION AND ITS RELATION TO THE FARM PROGRAM

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered over the radio by Hon. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, of the Seventh District of Virginia, on wild-life conservation and its relation to the farm program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address today by Hon. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, of the Seventh District of Virginia, on Wild-Life Conservation and Its Relation to the Farm Program:

Representing, as I do, an agricultural district that includes the rich and fertile Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, I have naturally taken a keen interest in the plans of the present administration to improve the condition of our farmers. It was a happy day for the farmers when our President placed Hon. Henry A. Wallace in charge of their pressing problems. I admire his ability, his knowledge of farm conditions, his sincerity of purpose, and his intellectual honesty. He has not been able to turn water into wine because the day of miracles has passed. His refusal to endorse radical and unsound monetary policies is to be commended. The time when normal conditions are restored to agriculture is less important than the fact that such conditions when established shall be on a sound and permanent basis.

The decline of the farmer in the economic scale commenced in 1923. Throughout the succeeding years his tax burden increased, his mortgaged indebtedness increased, and at the same time the parity of farm commodities was decreasing. In other words, the farmer was the unhappy victim in a game where both ends were being played against the middle, and by the fall of 1932 the plight of millions of farmers was most distressing.

The Federal Government is now engaged in a terrific struggle to change these conditions. Already it has expended approximately $1,000,000,000 in the effort, and the floodgates of the Treasury are still open for further expenditures for farm relief. The national farm income in 1933 was increased approximately $1,000,000,000, and it is hoped that 1934 will show an additional increase of a similar amount. Parity prices of farm commodities in the spring of 1933 rapidly increased but later to be largely offset by other commodity prices as a result of the operations of the N.R.A. On April 15, 1934, the net gain of the farmer in parity prices was about 2 percent—small, it is true; but encouraging by reason of the fact that it was a gain and not a further loss. We still have to deal with unconsumable surpluses. A gradual business recovery is enlarging the domestic market. If the Senate will unite with the House in conferring upon the President the power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements, new export markets could be won for American farm products. A better regulation of the distribution of milk will help the dairy farmers, the biggest farm industry in the United States and one of the hardest hit. Recent Chicago quotations on heavy steers seemed to indicate that the surplus of heavy steers has been disposed of. The drought in the spring wheat area, while a major disaster to the wheat growers of that area, will, greatly curtail the 1934 production and solve the problem of the wheat surplus.

The present operations of the A.A.A. contemplate primarily temporary adjustments. The important thing, as I have indicated, is an adjustment on a permanent basis that will give to the farmer a fair return for his labor, with a maximum of personal freedom and liberty. Strict regimentation of the farmer is not an American principle, and, in my opinion, we should not seek permanent recovery on such a basis.

With such a thought in mind and desiring to contribute to the welfare of the farmer in a sound and purely American way, I introduced in the House at the special session a resolution to create a House committee to study the various phases of wild-life conservation. On January 29, 1934, the House adopted this resolution, and the Speaker appointed a committee of 15 active and well-posted conservationists. Since that time this committee has been holding regular hearings, taking up one at a time the various departments engaged in conservation work. These include the Department of Agriculture, that is administering through its Forest Service 163,000,000 acres of Federal lands, and through its Bureau of Biological Survey the migratory-bird situation; the Department of Commerce which, through its Bureau of Fisheries, has jurisdiction of commercial and game fish and the sealeries industry; the Department of the Interior, in which we find the National Park Service, the Reclamation Service, erosion and flood control; and certain other departments which touch conservation in a minor way.

Our committee has already discovered that millions of Federal funds, both from regular appropriations and from emergency appropriations, are being expended in conservation work of one kind or another. We find no proper coordination of these activities; we find no definite purpose on the part of some Federal agencies to make these activities contribute to the fullest extent to farm relief.

One Federal agency has in mind a plan to buy farm land and locate city people on it. This will not help the farmer, and it is doubtful if it will help the city man so transplanted. Another agency contemplates a plan to shift farmers from one type of land to another. The practical value of such a scheme is very questionable. What will be more pleasing to the average farmer and more helpful in a permanent way will be a plan to enable him to make a more adequate living right where he is now located.

No relief that could be provided by the Government will offset the effects of the present drought to the spring-wheat farmers. Recent studies have shown that the subterranean water table in North Dakota has fallen 59 feet; in Nebraska between 34 and 37 feet. Erosion experts working in Iowa claim that in one section of that State 106 tons of soil per acre have been washed off farm land per year. No one knows all the causes of drought, but we do know some of the contributing factors. It has been stated that during the past 15 or 20 years 75,000,000 acres of land in the United States have been drained.

We definitely know that 17,000,000 acres of marshes and water areas in those sections where migratory waterfowl summer and raise their young have been drained, and possibly as many additional acres have dried up during the past 4 years of drought. We know that each year millions of acres of timberland have been burned over, destroying the forest bed of humus that previously acted as a sponge to hold rainfall. Our conservation program seeks to help the farmer to get better rainfall through the restoration of these natural reservoirs.

Our conservation program likewise seeks to assist the farmer in producing for him a wild-life income from submarginal areas which no longer can be profitably farmed. Iowa, for instance, has found that by game management on such areas, the game population was increased 300 percent, and that land that was producing 25 cents per acre for agricultural purposes was made to produce $2.50 per acre for game purposes. I wish I had the time to explain to you more in detail the game management program in Iowa that can be duplicated in every State.

Our conservation program likewise contemplates the purchase of millions of acres of submarginal land to be devoted to the production of fish and game and from which the present occupants will not be moved but given employment in connection with the game management. We figure that those residing in these game-managed areas would be given a 20-acre garden plot on which to raise their own food, but nothing for the market, and that they could be given employment for 150 days a year at a rate of not less than 30 cents per hour.

These submarginal lands would include marsh areas for migratory birds and mountain and other upland areas for other types of game birds and animals. It is my understanding that a considerable fund has been or shortly will be made available to the Biological Survey for its part in that program out of a $25,000,000 fund under the control of the Federal Emergency Corporation. Our committee hopes that the entire $25,000,000 fund will be used for that purpose.

Our committee believes that an abundant supply of wild life will mean millions of dollars spent in rural sections by those who get out of doors. We believe that an increase in insectivorous birds will be of material benefit to the farmer. In the United States we have 1,420 species or subspecies of birds, but some of these species are almost extinct, and the ranks of many have been badly depleted. Of the species of migratory birds, for instance, our present supply is estimated to be only 25 percent of what it was 25 years ago.

One of the problems of the farmer is to make farm life more attractive to the boys and girls. A greater abundance of fish and game will help to do this.

The conservation of the 163 million acres of national forests, the proper utilization of the 173 million acres of the public domain, the development of national parks and monuments that will be stimulating to outside travel, the prevention of soil erosion, the utilization for fish and game crops of marsh and submarginal areas, the preservation of our birds and large and small mammals for both aesthetic and recreational opportunities, constitute a national conservation program that must of necessity be intermittently connected with any proper farm program.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 375

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 375 is as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven Members of the House of Representatives, preferably members of the Committee on Military Affairs, for the purpose of conducting an investigation of (1) the type, character, and extent of military defenses and their condition of obsolescence, if any, within the Pacific Coast States, to wit: California, Oregon, Washington, and the Territory of Alaska; (2) the type, character, extent, and condition of obsolescence, if any, of munitions, supplies, and their storage facilities in conjunction with all such Pacific coast defenses, the methods and means of communications between said defenses with the view of studying the availability of such munitions, supplies, war supplies, ordnance, and other necessary articles and things of war in case of defense emergency and essential to our proper national defense so far as our Pacific coast is concerned, and the extent, type, character, and obsolescence of mobile defenses, and means of rendering mobile such defenses; (3) the extent, numbers, and efficiency of the personnel, both officers and enlisted men, of the Regular Army or other military establishments, who have charge of and custody of and are assigned to such military defenses, supply stations, and munition stores; (4) the extent, numbers, and the condition of training and efficiency of the Regular Army personnel, both officers and enlisted men, and of the National Guard establishments of said Pacific Coast States, and the Territory of Alaska and of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and such other supplementary military forces and their efficiency as exist in said Pacific Coast States and Territory and the extent to which such military forces and training facilities may be coordinated in case of emergency in war of defense; (5) and to inquire into such other matters pertaining to the problem of national defense as it now exists in said Pacific Coast States and the Territory of Alaska; and be it further

Resolved, That said special committee, or such subcommittee thereof, shall make as thorough, exhaustive, and complete investigation as practicable in reference to the matters and things hereinbefore set forth, and as soon as practicable to report to the House of Representatives its findings in the premises and to submit with such report its recommendations for the necessary remedial legislation and such other recommendation as it may find fit and proper in the premises.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions or recesses of the present Congress, to employ such experts, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths and affirmations, to take testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable.

Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes shall be applicable to any person summoned as a witness under the authority of this resolution in the same manner as such provisions are applicable to any person summoned as a witness in the case of an inquiry before a committee of either House.

Mr. Speaker, on May 4 I introduced a resolution (H.Res. 375) to provide for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the military defenses and the condition thereof on the Pacific coast.

Needless to say, the purpose desired to be accomplished, if this resolution should be passed and such special committee appointed, is of great importance to the welfare of this country. Our honest attempt for the last 12 years to accomplish disarmament by example has been utterly fruitless and futile, and we are witnessing the spectacle of world powers during this period progressively entrenching and strengthening themselves in the arts of war and armament. Events in the last year have prompted me to respectfully request the House to pass my resolution in order that adequate information and report could be supplied to the next session of Congress on the subject of national defense, particularly along the Pacific Coast States and Alaska. My views on this subject are shared by civic organizations all up and down the Pacific coast, and I believe I am articulating a growing feeling on the part of the citizens of this country residing on the Pacific slopes that their defenses are not at present adequate. In passing, permit me to state that by order of the President all of our fleet are now located in the Atlantic waters. Even though I do not agree with the removal of the fleet at this time, it bears out this fact, that a fleet of a country is not primarily a defensive weapon, but in case of warfare its primary duty is to proceed out to sea under secret orders to perform its function of offensive warfare, and while in times of peace a country's fleet might ride quietly in a protected harbor, and while it might appear on the surface that that harbor and its facilities are well defended, nevertheless witness the fact of our entire fleet in Atlantic waters and really nothing to protect our important harbors and arteries, and termini of the maritime trade in the great Pacific.

I do not recall when a special committee of Congress investigated and inspected the defenses of our country; but I do know that, if at all, it was so many years ago that in the interim Pacific coast ports have assumed great importance in maritime trade. Los Angeles Harbor perhaps exports more oil than any seaport in the world, and there are clustered on the hills that surround Los Angeles Harbor many hundreds of huge storage tanks filled with many millions of barrels of oil. This supply has always been available for commerce and trade and for the fuel necessities of our own fleet. There is an old fort on the south crest of the hills overlooking this harbor with several mortars and naval-type disappearing rifles, supposedly to defend these great facilities and this great storage of fuel oil as well as other property. The same can be said of the harbor at San Diego, through which pass volumes of trade and traffic to the Orient and southerly through the Canal into the Atlantic seaports. The same might be said of San Francisco's marvelous work of nature, the Golden Gate Harbor, and Puget Sound ports in the State of Washington and ports in Oregon, and the ports of lesser importance dotted in that great stretch of seacoast from the Canadian border to the Mexican border in the south.

It would seem to me that at this juncture of rapid events of international import, and more particularly the Japanese declaration of the hands-off policy of world powers so far as China is concerned, this resolution is important. I do not like to play the role of one of those who say, "I told you so", but that which I anticipated when I twice before spoke in this House to protest the removal of the Pacific Fleet has exactly occurred. I could not predict then just what the Japanese Imperial Government would do when our Fleet was out of Pacific waters, but I could anticipate something, and that something came in the form of this so-called "declaration of the Monroe Doctrine over the Japanese eastern neighbors."

To the so-called "silverites" of Congress, may I suggest what tangible values could follow from the adoption of the policy of the remonetization of silver if those great silver territories which we regard as purchasers of our surplus products of field and factory are denied the right to use their silver to purchase from us. To the silverite this item should present a very serious situation, because among the experiences of this depression we discovered that the so-called "gold-currency nations" scattered on the Continent cannot become heavy purchasers of American products and that the whole scheme and intent of liberalizing the law respecting remonetization of silver depends emphatically upon the open-door policy of China and its contiguous territory. But the Japanese declaration, carried to its extremity, would sever any hope of that beneficial result.

There is no intention, if this resolution should pass, that the special committee should investigate the condition of our defenses on the Pacific coast and Alaska from the point of view of a prosecutor. It should not be our intention to in any way permit this committee to find fault with any of the various departments of the military branch of our service, or to investigate in a hypercritical manner or to dig up mud or cast slurs on the past conduct of the administrators of the affairs of the military service. I intend that this committee should review the situation more from the standpoint of a survey and, in the spirit of fairness, report to this Congress its findings and suggest constructive measures for the future. It might be well said that the Army knows of its deficiencies and by way of its annual reports has called Congress' attention to the inadequacy of our defenses not only on the Pacific coast but everywhere in continental and territorial United States. But permit me to suggest that experience teaches that a department of the Government might come on bended knee to Congress and its committees to supply the needed funds for national defense, but the merits of these requests are regarded as coming from departments of the Government and are treated lightly.

I am firmly convinced that if a group of laymen from the House see and inspect for themselves, calling into conference of course proper military authorities, that this committee would come back to Congress and win over the support of their colleagues who are not familiar with the problem.

Proper public sentiment would be developed through the activities of this committee so as to compel a decent and protracted consideration of the wants of national defense. Every good citizen is today demanding national defense. What kind of national defense they do not, of course, know. The press of the country has been extremely critical of the military departments for their seeming lack of interest. But I say to you gentlemen of the House that the real responsibility must be laid at the door of Congress, for to the Congress the Constitution has given the exclusive jurisdiction of providing for the national defense; and since seeing is believing, I plead with you to support whole-heartedly my resolution so that in the years that may follow—and, if trouble ensues—at least we, as Members of the Seventy-third Congress, sworn to enforce and uphold the Constitution, may have done our official duty in this respect.

AMENDMENT OF GRAIN FUTURES ACT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHASE] may have until Monday night to file minority views on the bill (H.R. 9471) to amend the Grain Futures Act to prevent and remove obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grains and other commodities by regulating transactions therein on commodity future exchanges, by providing means for limiting short selling and speculation in such commodities on such exchanges, by licensing commission merchants dealing in such commodities for future delivery on such exchanges, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

REVISION OF AIR-MAIL LAWS

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3170) to revise the air-mail laws, with House amendments, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MEAD, ROMJUE, DOBBINS, KELLY of Pennsylvania, and FOSS.

THE STRAWBERRY INDUSTRY IN WHITE COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to insert therein a short newspaper article touching the agricultural situation in Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks on the above-named subject, I include a news item appearing in the issue of the Arkansas Democrat of May 9, 1934, as follows:

RECORD SINGLE-DAY BERRY SHIPMENT

The Missouri Pacific lines have moved 316 carloads of strawberries from the White County district so far this season, rail officials said Wednesday, and are preparing to make a record-breaking movement the first of next week.

Five special trains drawing 112 cars of berries last Monday set a record for a single day's shipment from the district, which extends from Cabot to Bradford. Eighty carloads were shipped Tuesday. The Missouri Pacific officials say their line will handle a total of 1,500 cars for the season, the harvest netting the growers more than a million dollars.

The cold packing of berries, a new development in the marketing system, will be started Monday at Searcy, and it is expected that 5,000 barrels of strawberries will be packed for shipment to St. Louis, where they will be frozen.

The news article is self-explanatory. It needs no comment from me, but I feel a pride in the wonderful progress that has been made in this great industry in Arkansas and in my home county. Her people are finding success in diversified farming, and their experience leads me to believe that the independence of the American farmer depends to a great extent upon his ability to diversify. No State in our country is more favorably situated for this purpose than is Arkansas.

MINNESOTA DAY

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Minnesota Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Speaker, tonight the Minnesota Society of Washington meets in this city to commemorate an event of 76 years ago, when on May 11, 1858, Minnesota was by act of Congress admitted to the Union of States. The North Star State then joined the constellation and another star was added to our flag.

The first Senator from Minnesota, James Shields, had one of the most interesting political careers in American history.

He was a Democrat, the only Democrat that has ever been elected to the Senate from Minnesota in its entire history of 76 years.

Shields was born in Ireland and, as a young man, came to Illinois. His first important office was that of judge of supreme court of that State. He served as a brigadier general in the Mexican War. At the Battle of Cerro Gordo he was shot through the lungs, the bullet passing out at his back. His recovery from what was considered a mortal wound was one of the marvels of medical history. In 1849 he was elected United States Senator from Illinois. After serving 6 years he harkened to the call of the open plains in the West and was, on the day after Minnesota's admission to the Union, elected Senator from my State. That was his second election to the Senate. He served as a general in the Civil War with great distinction and shortly thereafter took up his abode in the State of Missouri. Here, for a third time—each time from a different State—he was again sent to the United States Senate. Probably no other man in American history, outside of the distinguished sons who have served as President, has had a career more varied and distinguished than that of Minnesota's first and only Democratic Senator. A statue of Senator Shields is in Statuary Hall in this building.

Minnesota started out in 1858 with two congressional districts. She is now represented by nine Congressmen in this House.

All of these first Members of Congress were Democrats, but not since the senatorial toga fell from the shoulders of Senator Shields has any Democrat ever been elected to the Senate. That situation, however, did not result from failure on the part of Senator Shields to creditably represent our State.

But I do not intend to speak of the political history of Minnesota. Since the passing of Shields and the coming of Lincoln, not only has much water passed over the dam, but many a dam has become outworn and obsolete.

Mr. Speaker, may I briefly, on this eventful day in the history of our great State, say a few words about Minnesota, the pearl of the Middle West, that not only the Members of this Congress, but all America should know:

Bounded upon the north by the clear, sparkling waters of lakes and rivers that divide us from the Dominion of Canada, Minnesota is pierced from the east by the arrow-shaped arm of Lake Superior, giving us a matchless harbor at the city of Duluth, the head of navigation. The Mississippi River, the father of waters, has its origin in the cool, refreshing waters of Lake Itasca in Itasca Park, one of the 10,000 lakes that have made Minnesota as famous as once was Milwaukee.

The purpose of this talk is to extend to all the Members of this body a most friendly and cordial invitation to visit our great and wonderful outdoor paradise. Not only personally as the only Democrat from Minnesota but acting unofficially in behalf of a thousand summer resorts, hundreds of sporty golf links, tens of thousands of fishes that have never been caught, and men, women, and children from every nook and cranny of the State, I want to impress upon you the thought that at no place do men, tired and weary from cares and conflicting emotions, find a more peaceful haven of rest and recreation than is to be found in the fir-scented, health-restoring atmosphere of this unspoiled nature land of the North. Here you will find your appetite restored to a point that will remind you of your school days, and your sleep will be as sound and restful as that of innocent childhood. Not only physical, but mental vigor as well, will convince you that Ponce de Leon did not discover the only fountain of youth.

Entering the State from any direction you glide into Minnesota and through Minnesota over thousands of miles of scenic highways, passing through changing scenes that make every moment a thrill. Every hilltop, every rise in the land as you speed along brings to view opening vistas of green pastures, miles upon miles of golden grain waving in the gentle breeze, beautifully wooded hills and fertile valleys studded with hundreds of clear, peace-inspiring lakes that glisten like diamonds in the midsummer sun.

You will see multitudes of beavers busy at their everlasting tasks, working long hours, and at a speed that would make a Congressman look like a loafer. Tens of thousands of deer fill our northern forests, while birds of every variety and every hue abound and delight the lover of wild life. The joyous notes of a myriad of songbirds mingle with the quacking chatter of wild ducks to greet the rising sun, while at eventide is heard the weird call of the loon and that of the lonely moose signaling to his mate.

If you would only come to visit us once, we could thereafter entertain no hope of having you stay away.

But considering the prospects that some of us will be looking for a new place of abode after November, I must say just a few words about the greatness of Minnesota from a material standpoint.

Nature and nature's God have been good to the North Star State. In the bosom of her northern hills are found the greatest iron deposits in the world, with an annual output of nearly fifty millions of tons of ore. Whether you ride in a princely Pierce or a plebeian Ford, you are protected and held aloft by steel that comes from the great iron ranges of northern Minnesota.

We have the most fertile soil to be found out doors. We produce pumpkins large enough to float an elephant upon the open sea. We produce cobs of corn large enough to choke any Texas or Alabama razorback that ever lived. We produce potatoes so large and heavy that the ordinary dining table has to be supplied with reinforced legs. We raise more potatoes and less hell than any other State in the Union. We make more butter than any State. Land O'Lakes butter is found on the best tables of every land, and so is bread from the world-famous flour produced in Minnesota. We have earned and we intend to retain the title "The Bread and Butter State."

Now, picture to yourself a State richly endowed with all the blessings that a benevolent Providence could possibly shower upon any people—a State that leads all others in the great staples of life I have mentioned—a State in which the soil groans under the weight of heavy crops; a State in which you can enjoy your breakfast in the gilded and luxurious dining rooms of the great twin cities—Minneapolis and St. Paul—eat your lunch at Duluth, and prepare your bed at night at the lakeside in a forest where the pleasant odors from majestic cedars will ease you off into the realms of dreamland; just picture to yourself this and then stay away if you have the heart to do so.

I am happy to have this opportunity today to extend this invitation to you upon this anniversary of Minnesota's birth, because it will probably be my last and only opportunity to extend a similar invitation from this floor.

Should the fates favor me, I may 1 year from today have the privilege of extending a similar invitation from the seat occupied so gracefully by Senator Shields 76 years ago.

HENRY A. BARNHART

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extent my remarks in the RECORD upon the life and public services of Henry Barnhart, former Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, the recent death on March 26, 1934, of Hon. Henry A. Barnhart, of Rochester, Ind., former Representative in Congress for the old Thirteenth Indiana District for 12 years, including the strenuous and trying World War period, has brought a sense of profound sorrow to all who knew him. As one who now represents a large part of his old district, I wish to pay him a tribute of friendship and high respect. He was my counselor and friend.

The record of his life was one of noteworthy service to his fellow man. Many of the older Members of the House still have the warmest recollections of Mr. Barnhart.

He was born at Twelve Mile, Ind., September 11, 1858, son of the Reverend Jacob and Mary Fisher Barnhart.

His first public service was as a teacher in the public schools.

In 1884 he was elected Fulton County surveyor and the following year acquired the Rochester Sentinel, of which journal he was owner and editor for 40 years. He was made a member of the Indiana Democratic State committee in 1892, and the next year was named by Governor Matthews as a member of the board of the Indiana State Prison. He was appointed to similar duties by two succeeding governors.

First elected to Congress in 1908, he served for six terms. For half of that time he was Chairman of the Committee on Printing. He also served on the important Committees on Banking and Currency, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and Public Buildings and Grounds.

Service on the latter committee brought him more than ordinary satisfaction, as he had a keen appreciation of the beauties of architecture. Through his work on that committee he had a part in the work which produced in Washington and elsewhere some of the finest structures known.

Mr. Barnhart derived his greatest pride, through his service on the Public Buildings Committee, from the magnificent Lincoln Memorial which graces, as no other structure could, the river end of that attractive park and monument section of Washington traditionally known as the "Mall." He loved to direct visitors to that stately structure commemorating the immortal Civil War President. Its massiveness, its simple grandeur, always was an inspiration to Mr. BARNHART, and he reflected it eloquently in his description of it to others.

Congressman Barhart was punctual and constant in his attendance at meetings of House committees to which he was assigned. He was always interested in their work, and gave freely of his energy in the performance of the tasks they marked out.

When in Washington he was a regular attendant at the Calvary Baptist Church, which was the denomination of his own church home in Rochester, Ind.

Socially he was delightful as a guest and as a host. His sparkling conversation, his mastery of dialect, and his inimitable story telling made him a welcome addition to any group. These attributes, together with his companionable disposition, accounted for much of his popularity.

Another trait recognized by those who knew him well was the steadfastness of his friendship with his neighbors and associates. In the rush of his congressional work he never forgot old friends, and he found much joy in a heavy personal correspondence with them. He was famous as an after-dinner speaker, and his services were in great demand.

In business also his was a busy life. At an early date he was secretary and manager for the board of directors in the management of the Rochester waterworks system. He was instrumental in organizing the Rochester telephone system and was its president and general manager from 1895 to the date of his death. Banking, education, and civic work occupied much of his time.

In both the newspaper and telephone fields, Mr. Barnhart was a leader. He was president of the National Independent Telephone Association and of the Indiana State Telephone Association, also president of the Indiana Democratic State Editorial Association and the Northern Indiana Nonpartisan Editorial Association. He was for many years president of his local organization of the American Red Cross and was appointed to many State and national organizations on behalf of various charitable, health, and public-welfare movements. Still another aspect of this able and versatile citizen's interests was farming, he being much interested in thoroughbred cattle.

The news of his passing after a long and full life saddened many men of prominence in the life of the Nation. Tribute was paid by the Vice President of the United States, Hon. John N. Garner, in the following words:

I had known Henry A. Barnhart for 25 years. To know him was to love him. Many men in Congress come and go without being remembered, but none of us who served with Henry Barnhart has ever forgotten him. He may be gone from us, but the memory of him will live.

He was also the colleague and close friend of Hon. Cordell Hull, now Secretary of State, who expressed similar sentiments of tribute and sorrow:

As my colleague Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW has eloquently stated:

Mr. Barnhart was made of the best quality of Hoosier homespun. His greatness was elemental and composed of many virtues, outstanding among which were honesty, sincerity, and friendship of such quality that the older it grows the tighter it binds. It seemed so fitting that he should be always happy, because he made everybody around him happy.

Henry Barnhart was proof that it is possible to succeed in public life and uphold clean politics—

Said the editor of the Marion Leader-Tribune:

He refused to have anything to do with corrupt practices either in his public or private life, and the people honored him repeatedly. He was a man they knew they could trust. He was a pioneer in the movement to take State institutions out of politics. When political leaders came to him with talk of the spoils that awaited them in the prisons, the welfare, and educational institutions if the party should succeed at the polls, they met with rebuff. He would have none of it.

There is solace in the knowledge that Mr. Barnhart's career was replete with deeds, commendable deeds, of which those who mourn, may ever be proud—

Said the News-Sentinel, of Rochester, Ind., his home city:

Reared in the humblest of rural surroundings, under the tutelage of what now would be termed "homespun Christian parentage." Mr. Barnhart early in life established a well-defined demarcation between right and wrong, and from these simple but powerful classifications of all human deeds he stood and fought indomitably for what he deemed was just. He was a fearless exponent for every worth-while movement for the benefit of his community. His outstanding personality, together with his desire to be a sincere friend of those in all walks of life, finally embarked him on a political career, under the Democratic banner, which gained the plaudits of even many of adverse political faith. During his six terms in the United States legislative chambers, he served his constituents, district, State, and Nation, in such an unbiased, businesslike manner that the word "politician", in a professional sense, was never connected with the name of Congressman Barnhart.

Perhaps in this comment on the passing of a citizen and friend, who has left an indelible mark of honesty, efficiency, and helpfulness which will ever be remembered in this community, one of the finest tribute to Henry A. Barnhart may be said in these few words: He was a lover of his fellow man, of nature, of wholesome humor, of his home, his family, and church.

Beyond life's last barrier, Mr. Speaker, there are no parties, and I was pleased to receive from his political antagonist and mine, Hon. Andrew J. Hickey, this fine tribute to Congressman Barnhart:

Mr. Barnhart served the Thirteenth Indiana District as a Representative in Congress for 12 years. His service was outstanding. While he was a strong partisan, he never permitted partisanship to enter into the many and perplexing demands upon him by his constituents. His rule of conduct in all such matters was service. "What can I do most to serve my constituents?" This was always uppermost in his mind.

Mr. Barnhart will be greatly missed in the many fields he occupied, as publisher, business executive, and public-spirited citizen.

The career of this distinguished man carries a high inspiration to all of us. The memory of this good citizen will remain bright for many years to come as an example of high ideals being realized in public office, and it is there that we need them most.

After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well.

A life well lived is well spent and death to such a man is only another name for peace. This is true whether one is in private or public life. But one in public life, just because the office gives prominence to the name, is under a peculiar obligation to the Republic. His standards, good or bad, tend to influence the lives, not only of his own generation, but of the boys and girls who follow him. Character molds character, and patriotism begets patriots. It is here that one achieves earth's immortality. It is here that the coming generation seizes the baton from the runner who is spent.

Henry Barnhart's race is run. But the race goes on in the lives of those who learned from him that public office is a public trust.

I cannot sum up this good life better than to repeat the words of the Spartan oath given by age to youth more than 23 centuries ago:

We will never bring disgrace to this, our city, by any act of dishonesty or cowardice, nor ever desert our suffering comrades in the ranks. We will fight for our ideals and sacred things of the city, both alone and with many. We will revere and obey the city's laws and do our best to incite a like respect in those above us who are prone to annul them and set them at naught. We will strive unceasingly to quicken the sense of civic duty. Thus in all these ways we will transmit this city not less but far greater and more beautiful than it was transmitted to us.

RAILROAD PENSION LEGISLATION

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, the other day I announced here that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and myself, representing the two sides on the railroad pension legislation, had gotten together on a bill. We were together in spirit, but not in fact, but today we both filed bills which had already passed the committee in the Senate and had been recommended, and those bills are Nos. 9596 and 9597, the first one by Mr. CROSSER and the second by myself.

BUREAU OF FISHERIES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I understand that it is intended by Executive order to transfer the Bureau of Fisheries from the Department of Commerce to the Department of the Interior. I consider this to be an unfortunate and unwise move, because the Bureau of Fisheries properly belongs within the Department of Commerce. The Department of the Interior is mainly concerned with internal matters, particularly with the conservation of our natural resources; only in a very limited sense does fisheries come within the purview of that Department. Fisheries has to do with commerce and industry, and concerns in the main, activities beyond the confines of continental United States. I sincerely trust that the Members of the House who are interested in this matter on the east coast, along the Gulf, and the west coast, will realize the inadvisability of transferring the Bureau of Fisheries from the Department of Commerce to the Department of the Interior, and take action to present their views upon this question to the proper officials.

S. 3459. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War in the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 998); and

S. 3261. An act to permit the stepchildren of certain officers and employees of the United States to be admitted to the public schools of the District of Columbia without payment of tuition (Rept. No. 999).

A bill (S. 3601) for the relief of the estate of James H. Sutherland; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3602) granting a pension to Pearl Helms; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT—INDEMNITY BONDS FOR NATIONAL BANKS

Mr. NEELY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2915) requiring national banks to obtain indemnity bonds from State-qualified bonding companies, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAYS AND RELATED PROJECTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

POTASH RESOURCES

Mr. HATCH submitted a resolution (S.Res. 239), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to submit to the Senate, at his early convenience, a report based on information already available or readily procurable covering:

(a) The extent to which the United States now depends upon imports of potash salts, muriate of potash, sulphate of potash, and sulphate of potash magnesia to meet national requirements; and

(b) Whether and the extent to which it is now possible to supply from the natural deposits of the United States all of the aforesaid potash compounds to meet the national requirements, agricultural, chemical, and pharmaceutical; and

(c) What experiments, explorations, investigations, and resources are possible and necessary to make the United States self-supporting in its potash requirements; and

(d) What policies and/or regulations governing the conservation of natural potash deposits on the public domain or elsewhere in the United States are being enforced or are in contemplation for promulgation and enforcement.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN TREATIES

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, day before yesterday the Senate passed a bill which I ask to have reconsidered. It is Senate bill 2980, to modify the effect of certain Chippewa Indian treaties on areas in Minnesota. I have consulted the leaders on both sides of the Chamber, and I find that there is no objection to having the bill reconsidered for the purpose of offering an amendment to it.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby Senate bill 2980 was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I now send to the desk an amendment to the bill, which I ask to have stated.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator that he let the bill remain on the calendar for the day.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well. I ask to have the amendment printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD's amendment is, on page 2, line 1, after the word "treaties" and the colon, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in that portion in the said State of Minnesota affected by this act the Indian liquor laws shall continue to apply to the sale, gift, barter, exchange, etc., of liquors to ward Indians of the classes set forth in the act of January 30, 1897 (29 Stat.L. 506), and to the manufacture or sale of liquors on individual Indian allotments or other individual Indian-owned lands while the title to same is held in trust by the United States or while the same shall remain inalienable by the Indian without the consent of some governmental officer.

PIONEER NATIONAL MONUMENT, KENTUCKY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there has been organized in Kentucky the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission to provide for a proper celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone. The commission desires to purchase certain tracts of land in four or five places associated with Boone's activities in Kentucky, and to present them to the Government. There is on the calendar a bill authorizing the President to accept that donation without any expense on the part of the United States. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3443) to provide for the creation of the Pioneer National Monument in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas no provision has been made to preserve some of the great shrines of pioneer history that played their part in the drama of the American Revolution, both in resistance to the efforts of the British and their Indian allies to wipe out the American colonists west of the Alleghenies and thus close in on the colonists along the Atlantic seaboard and in waging a counter offensive that resulted in the conquest and acquisition of the Old Northwest; and

Whereas four of these shrines in Kentucky represent in continuity a counterpart of the American Revolution east of the Alleghenies, to wit: (1) Boonesborough, where the first fort "in the West" was erected, the first highway to "the West, the Wilderness Road", terminated, the first colonization was effected, and the first legislature met; (2) Boones Station, whence Daniel Boone, as lieutenant colonel of the Fayette County Militia, rushed troops to the assistance of various other besieged stations as well as joined in the retaliatory campaigns under Gen. George Rogers Clark into the Old Northwest, and where he buried his son and nephew, who fell at the Battle of Blue Licks; (3) Bryans Station, where the women of the fort sallied forth under the rifles of some 600 Indians to procure water for the besieged pioneers on August 18, 1782, contributing in large measure to the successful defense of the fort; and (4) Blue Licks Battlefield, scene of the accredited "Last Battle of the Revolution", August 19, 1782, which aroused all of the western colonists to unitedly launch a devastating campaign into the Ohio country, under the leadership of Gen. George Rogers Clark, that effectually stopped further invasion of Kentucky by the British and Indians and was the forerunner of the final conquest of the entire Northwest Territory for the United States: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept donated lands, without cost to the United States, of an area appropriate for the proper commemoration of the valor and sacrifices of the pioneers at the sites of Fort Boonesborough, Boones Station, Bryans Station, and Blue Licks Battlefield in the State of Kentucky, comprising noncontiguous tracts to be united by a memorial highway, all in its entirety to be dedicated to the pioneers of "the West", and established and set apart as the Pioneer National Monument for the preservation of the historical structures and remains thereon and for the benefit and enjoyment of the people.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to designate a commission, that shall serve without salary, to recommend the areas to be preserved for inclusion in the Pioneer National Monument.

SEC. 3. That the said commission shall be authorized to use the franking privilege of the United States mails for the purpose of carrying on correspondence relating to, and in furtherance of, said work.

The preamble was agreed to.

ANTIDUMPING LAWS BY GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have here a dispatch with a London date line in reference to the attitude of Great Britain in her dispute with Japan on trade matters, resulting from the announcement of Mr. Runciman, head of the British Board of Trade, as to the new policy of Great Britain. It is stated in the dispatch:

Japan today found the gates to British colonies barred to two thirds of her former sales of cotton textiles there as a result of Runciman's edict, sounded before a surprised Commons yesterday.

Quick steps will be taken to revise the duties upward in the homeland on silk and other Japanese products, and then the Dominions will be asked to do likewise.

The Government anticipates full Dominion cooperation.

I ask that the dispatch may be inserted in full in the RECORD. I call attention to it because it indicates that Britain is entering upon a policy to end dumping by additional protective legislation rather than by tariff bargaining.

There being no objection, the dispatch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star, May 8, 1934]

NEW LAWS TO END DUMPING PLANNED BY GREAT BRITAIN—SENTIMENT GROWS FOR PROTECTION AGAINST LOW-PRICED GOODS

LONDON, May 8.—New antidumping laws, it was indicated today, will be added to Great Britain's ultra protectionist policy—a policy which has led her into declaring an open trade war on Japan.

News of the new development came today fast upon the heels of declarations by Walter Runciman, board of trade head, and Dominions Secretary J. H. Thomas that Britain is prepared to fight with all the means at her command to improve the Empire's trade.

PROTECTIONIST SENTIMENT GROWS

It was revealed that there is a growing sentiment in the House of Commons for laws to protect home manufacturers and producers against the competition of low-priced goods here and in the colonies and dominions.

Japan today found the gates to British colonies barred to two thirds of her former sales of cotton textiles there as a result of Runciman's edict, sounded before a surprised Commons yesterday.

Quick steps will be taken to revise the duties upward in the homeland on silk and other Japanese products, and then the dominions will be asked to do likewise.

FULL COOPERATION EXPECTED

The Government anticipates full dominion cooperation, it was said in high circles today, because of Britain's willingness to extend Empire trade.

Thomas, who entered into the debate following the Runciman announcement of moves to halt Japanese competition, declared every effort will be made to intensify the exchange of products among the Empire's dominions and colonies.

Besides import quotas on cotton and rayon goods from Japan, which colonies and protectorates will be asked to introduce, Runciman disclosed the Government is considering placing quotas against other commodities.

It was revealed that Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, already had asked the imports advisory committee for a detailed report on silk duties.

WASHINGTON AIRPORT

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, some days ago I introduced a bill to provide for a national airport in the Capital City of the Nation. I now ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a short editorial from the Washington Post, a short editorial from the Washington Star, and two brief articles in relation to the subject.

There being no objection, the editorials and articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post]

APATHY OVER THE AIRPORT

Further delay in the construction of an airport for Washington is forecast by the apathy of both Congress and the District Commissioners. Congress is content to investigate the subject and squabble over proposed sites. The Commissioners have indicated their disapproval of a bill to develop an airport at Gravelly Point because other improvements are considered more urgent.

A considerable sum will be needed in the next few years for construction of schools, hospitals, fire and police stations, penal institutions, the Municipal Center, and the proposed sewage-disposal plant. No one who is familiar with the urgent needs of many District institutions would be inclined to impede these plans. Yet the airport project cannot be treated as if it were merely a desirable improvement for some future period.

Dozens of aviators have testified to the hazards resulting from the continued use of Washington Airport in its present condition. It is a menace to motorists as well as to aviators and their passengers. From this viewpoint, if from no other, the Commissioners ought to give the project further attention. This is not strictly a local undertaking, however. Construction of a permanent air terminal here must be regarded as part of the general plan of developing the Nation's Capital. Obviously the planning of an airport that is of national significance ought not to be delayed merely because local funds are needed for strictly municipal improvements.

It may be assumed that the District will be required to pay part of the cost of the proposed airport. But under the bill in question payment of the District's share would begin 10 years hence. It would be far better to obligate District funds for essential improvements of this kind than to have them accumulate in surpluses which encourage Congress to reduce its allowance to the Capital City.

[From the Washington Evening Star]

THE GIBSON AIRPORT BILL

A delegation of citizens has won from the Commissioners a promise of "careful consideration" of their recent adverse report on the Gibson bill to develop an airport at Gravelly Point. The Commissioners' original objection to this measure was based on the priority of other pressing local needs, for which no funds are now available, and the additional fact that they cannot predict what the financial condition of the District will be 10 years hence, when the District would begin repaying advances for construction of the airport.

While the Commissioners are perfectly correct in pointing to other municipal needs that must be met, there is also merit in the contention of the citizens' delegation that the Gibson bill establishes a convenient method of financing the development. The Star erroneously indicated in these columns recently that the entire expense of this seminational development would be thrown on the local community. That is not the case, as the bill provides for Federal appropriations at the rate of $750,000 a year until the total estimated cost of $2,500,000 is met, and at the end of 10 years the District would repay half the cost, spreading the repayment over 5 years.

The District is now handicapped by its inability to plan in advance for future improvements, or even to finance the needs which are immediate, because of the unsatisfactory system of fiscal relationship with the National Government. The commitments for future expenditures under the Gibson bill are, however, relatively small, and the division of expense, as proposed, is an equitable one.

COMMERCE, POSTAL OFFICIALS CONCERNED OVER AIRPORT HAZARD—VIDAL AND BRANCH CITE DANGER IN LOCATION OF MILITARY ROAD; URGE IMMEDIATE RELIEF

Ranking officials of the Commerce and Post Office Departments today expressed grave concern over the crowded and unsafe conditions prevalent at Washington's airline terminal and urged immediate relief from the critical situation by emergency legislation in Congress.

Eugene L. Vidal, Director of Aeronautics, Commerce Department, declared an emergency to exist at Washington Airport, brought on by the imminent advent of two new air lines and the seasonal increase of air traffic at the field.

"The Department has been concerned about conditions there for some time", Vidal said, "and now it appears the situation is to become worse.

"The evils will have to be corrected, or we will be forced to take steps to restrict the use of the field."

ROAD HAZARDOUS

Vidal pointed to the existence of Military Road, running through the middle of the landing area, as the primary obstacle to favorable regard of the airport. Only a congressional act can do away with the highway.

Maj. Rudolph Schroeder, Chief of the Air Line Inspection Service, Commerce Department, supported his superior's views.

In the Post Office Department, Second Assistant Postmaster General Harllee Branch, charged with the administration of the air mail, spoke strongly of the "inadequacy of the Capital's airline terminal."

"We are cognizant of the hazards surrounding the operation of aircraft from the Washington Airport", he said. "There is an obvious danger in the presence of Military Road with its heavy vehicular traffic bisecting the main runway.

MEAD PLEDGES AID

"Steps certainly should be taken immediately toward the elimination of this hazard and the general improvement of the airport. I have landed there, and I know how it is."

Branch said the Post Office Department was also interested in seeing an improvement in airplane and airline office-housing facilities at Washington Airport.

Echoes of the growing sentiment in favor of immediate elimination of the airport hazard were heard from Capitol Hill, where Representative JAMES MEAD (Democrat, New York), Chairman of the House Post Office Committee, announced he would throw his support and the support of his committee to whatever adequate emergency airport legislation might be introduced.

[From the Daily News, Wednesday, May 9, 1934]

AIRPORT IMPROVEMENT VITAL IN VIEW OF TRAFFIC INCREASE—WASHINGTON AIRPORT FACES CRISIS WITH ADDITION OF NEW SERVICES; IMMEDIATE PUBLIC ACTION NECESSARY

By Bob Ball

The affairs of Washington Airport have reached a crisis. Promised the greatest air-traffic flow in history, Washington faces the prospect of throwing up its hands in despair and saying to the Post Office Department and the air lines: Thanks, but we can't handle it. Give it to some other city.

For years this city has skimped along with one of the smallest, dirtiest, and most poorly equipped metropolitan air terminals in the country.

And as the volume of air traffic has increased from year to year, louder have become the pleas for improvement from pilots, passengers, air-line heads, and air-minded citizens.

But never have the city fathers lifted a finger to relieve the situation nor the Federal Government cooperated to the best of its ability.

Nor has there ever been unanimity among the seekers of relief. Bill after bill has been introduced into congressional committees, only to languish and die, while airport proponents fought over technicalities and quibbled over details.

But today the situation is acute.

With 3 transport lines already operating into Washington from 4 points on the compass, 2 new lines soon are to be added by the Post Office Department.

By July 1 lines will be operating direct to New York, Detroit, Chicago, Fort Worth, New Orleans, and Miami. There will be a minimum of 42 daily arrivals and departures upon Washington Airport. And probably more.

There will be as many as 10 arrivals and departures in 1 hour. Safety will be at a premium.

HOUSING PROBLEM

Every inch of available office space in the administration building already is occupied, with one line forced to do business behind a tiny counter out in the waiting room.

And shortly space will have to be found for two new air transport companies and a field post office.

Already the passenger waiting room is hopelessly inadequate for afternoon rush-period crowds. It will be worse next month.

Something has got to be done and done immediately. Quibbling must cease.

SOLUTION

There are several possibilities for immediate solution to the problem—and it must be realized that this is an emergency and must be dealt with accordingly.

Most reasonable would be for the Federal Government, through one of its departments, to lease Washington Airport for a period of 5 years, close Military Road by War Department order, and secure P.W.A. funds for improvement to the landing area and enlargement of the administration building.

This program could be placed into effect immediately and material improvement noted within 2 weeks.

Or, by congressional authorization, the District could carry out the same program. This method would require more time.

DISPUTE

Washington Airport is privately owned. Its owners have made many minor improvements in recent years, but any extensive development has been blocked by a disputed title to the land and the existence of the Federal road bisecting the two landing areas.

Only public action will accomplish the desired result.

Citizens' groups and other associations of the District, in their support of the proposed Gravelly Point airport development, have opposed the temporary improvement of Washington Airport.

But a minimum of 5 years must elapse before an airport possibly could be constructed at Gravelly Point, conceding that such a project is feasible—and the development of commercial aviation in the District would be seriously retarded in the interim.

NEVERMORE!—EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an editorial entitled "Nevermore!" appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of Saturday, May 12, 1934.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of May 12, 1934]

NEVERMORE!

The news permitted to leak out of the White House that something drastic is to be done to N.R.A. will hardly amaze the American public. For weeks it has been plain that this vast plan to regiment all industry was in serious trouble. Most of its 425 codes were simply not functioning. Public opposition was mounting steadily in every section of the country.

The statement that a major operation is now to be performed and that the codes for all service trades are to be jettisoned comes late, not soon. Such a decision would, in fact, do hardly more than ratify a rejection already resolved upon and largely effected by the general public. The jailing of tailor Maged in Jersey City for a nickel undercharge was a small episode in itself. But it brought home to the Nation as nothing else could the truth about N.R.A.—in particular, its viciously un-American interference with the freedom of the individual.

It remains to be seen just what a "service trade" is and just how far the administration is prepared to admit the appalling blunders that have been committed in the name of the blue eagle. It was in July, 10 months ago, that this ill-fated bird was hatched. No such emblem was needed for the first limited and sensible steps taken under the Recovery Act. The project as then announced did not go beyond the voluntary organization of sick industries like textiles, oil, and coal. The vicious blunder came with the announcement of the blanket code and the mad effort that followed to codify all industry.

It is not pleasant to look back through these 10 months and reflect upon the waste effort, the huge expense to which American industry has been put by this mistake. No one can pretend to estimate the extent to which recovery has been retarded by these futile motions, these foolish restraints. But the cost has unmistakably been great.

Nor is it easy to forgive the spirit of arrogance with which this herding of the American people was undertaken. When the newspapers of the country felt obliged to assert their constitutional right of free speech they were opposed and insulted. Any industry which attempted to assert its views was liable to be threatened and bullied. The radio, controlled by the administration through its licensing power, was made the spokesman of the new deal and largely restricted to Government propaganda. Let us hope that the administration has learned its lesson and that such a mad, futile effort will never be made again.

The truth is unmistakable now that N.R.A., as thus expanded, did not, and could not work in a free America. For the enforcement of such price fixing and such wage and hour regulations a bureaucratic army of spies would have been necessary compared to which the army of prohibition agents would be as a squad. It would have been necessary to multiply the courts and the jails indefinitely and to find a Siberia to which to send the conscientious offenders. And, after such a process of enforcement, America, as it was founded and preserved through a century and a half, would have been dead.

Fortunately for the historic American eagle there is still a good deal of life left in the old bird. The dark bird which was scheduled to supplant him and which first flapped its wings last summer always had an alien look. It seemed more Russian than American, and so it has proved to be. His doom was certain. May the system of voluntary codes be preserved in those industries for which they are suited and which want them! May the effort to tell every American what he may charge and how long he can work and what he shall be paid be sent back to the land from which it came!

THE DARROW REPORT—EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON POST

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an editorial entitled "The Darrow Report", appearing in the Washington Post of Saturday, May 12, 1934.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, of May 12, 1934]

THE DARROW REPORT

It is fairly safe to assume that the Darrow report, if it had been published promptly, in its original form, would never have aroused the excitement created by its failure to appear. Unconfirmed rumors that the findings are to be suppressed or toned down have aroused senatorial critics of the N.R.A. and have elicited outcries against censorship. As a matter of fact, the contents of the report, whatever they may be, seem much less important than the method of handling it.

Mr. Darrow's ultraradical views are so well known that few people would be shocked by any hostile opinions that he may have endorsed in the much-discussed document. Unless he was made chairman of the national review board on the theory that the best way to disarm a hostile critic is to take him into the fold, the President must have been prepared for a report that would not follow conventional lines.

The aversion of the present administration to outside criticism, even when offered in a friendly spirit, is well known. It is especially conspicuous in view of the experimental character of the emergency legislation and the professed desire of Government officials to profit by constructive suggestions. In this case, inside criticism has been invited, and there is no excuse for a refusal to deal with it openly and let the public judge whether it is justified. It is a sign of weakness and poor political strategy to suppress criticism, regardless of whether it may be justifiable.

Unless the mystery that surrounds the Darrow report is cleared up speedily, therefore, the public will conclude that there is a good deal to hide, and the report may have an influence out of all proportion to its real significance.

THE SILVER ISSUE—ARTICLE BY ROBERT H. HEMPHILL

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article appearing in the Washington Herald of this day entitled "The Silver Issue", by Robert H. Hemphill.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of Saturday, May 12, 1934]

THE SILVER ISSUE

By Robert H. Hemphill, Financial Authority

A report from the United States Monetary Commission in 1877 says in part:

"As the volume of money shrinks the prices fall.

"When money is decreasing in volume prices have no bottom except a receding one, and they are inexorably ruled by the volume of money.

"In the whole history of the world every great and general fall in prices has been preceded by a decrease in the volume of money."

"At the Christian era the metallic money of the Roman Empire amounted to $1,800,000,000. At the end of the fifteenth century it had shrunk to $200,000,000.

"During this period a most extraordinary and baleful change took place in the history of the world. The people were reduced by poverty to the most degraded condition of serfdom and misery. The disintegration of society was almost complete.

"The conditions of life were so hard that individual selfishness was the only instinct consistent with self-preservation.

"All public spirit, all generous emotions, all noble aspirations of men shriveled and disappeared as the volume of money shrunk and prices fell.

"Without money civilization could not have had a beginning; with a diminishing supply it must languish, and unless relieved, finally perish."

Since 1929 we have had here in the United States, to a limited extent, a repetition of the historic dark ages which all real students of financial history ascribe to the progressive contraction of the money in circulation and the consequent parallel cessation of the creation and exchange of wealth, with its increasing poverty.

The patriots in Congress who are struggling to increase the supply of money in circulation, who refuse to accept dictation of the administration, are struggling to prevent in these United States a repetition of the pathetic picture described by the Monetary Commission.

It is high time the thoughtful and courageous agriculturists, merchants, and industrialists of this country come awake and inquire into just what is going on behind the scenes in Washington.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 8781) to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER obtained the floor.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to offer an amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey for that purpose.

Mr. KEAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the amendment read, or does he merely desire it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the amendment has been printed. I do not believe the Senator cares to have it read.

Mr. KEAN. I will make a statement about it. I have here a comparison of the United States Securities Act with the British Companies Act. The comparison is only about 20 pages long. Shall I go over it?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator may do whatever he wishes. I do not care. I am ready to vote on the amendment. Let the Senator present his amendment and we will vote on it.

Mr. KEAN. Perhaps I had better withdraw my amendment and offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Florida. Would that be more satisfactory?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will leave that entirely to the Senator from New Jersey. It would not be properly a substitute for my amendment, but I leave that to the Senator.

Mr. KEAN. I do not want unnecessarily to take up any time, but I do want to get the amendment properly before the Senate. I think it is a very important amendment to the people of the United States, and I am very anxious to have it considered.

Mr. FLETCHER. We will pursue the course suggested. I will offer my amendment and the Senator may then offer his amendment as a substitute for mine.

Mr. KEAN. That will be satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Florida who yielded to the Senator from New Jersey to offer an amendment. The Senator from New Jersey offered the amendment. Does he now withdraw it?

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw my amendment at the request of the Senator from Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his amendment. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The amendment was printed nearly 2 weeks ago and has been on the desks of Senators fully that long. The amendment which I am now offering is the same as printed except that I have made one slight change. Perhaps the clerk had better read the entire amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, before the clerk reads the amendment may I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that, as I recollect, we are by unanimous consent proceeding under a 15-minute limitation upon debate upon the bill and upon any amendment. I am quite certain those of us who consented to that arrangement had no idea at the time that this important amendment was to be offered. I think the general impression was, and I certainly am not blaming anybody for it, that the two amendments to the Securities Act would not be offered. That impression persisted in my mind until late yesterday when I did what I perhaps ought to have done in the first place. I went to the chairman of the committee who had prepared the amendment and asked him about it.

It was late yesterday when we learned definitely that the particular amendments were to be offered to the Securities Act. I have for 2 or 3 hours this morning been trying to find out what one of the amendments is intended to accomplish. I say to the Senate that it will be impossible for any Senator, within a period of 15 minutes or 30 minutes, or even an hour, in my judgment, to explain the amendment to the Senate. We have not had the advantage of any report from the committee. We have not had a word of explanation except that which we are now to hear from the Senator from Florida. I think the Senate ought to consent that the agreement into which we entered some time day before yesterday limiting debate should be set aside. This is a very important amendment and it will take a good deal of time to consider it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I inform the Senator from Delaware that I should object to any such arrangement? We have been a whole week considering the bill. The amendments of the Senator from Florida, to which the Senator from Delaware refers, have been pending since the 26th of April, more than 2 weeks.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, how anyone can say he did not suppose I was going to offer the amendments is beyond my comprehension. I have insisted on offering them. I offered them early in the consideration of the bill, but the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] suggested that we ought to amend the bill itself before we took up title II to amend the Securities Act. I yielded to that suggestion because I thought he was right about it. Therefore, I have given way to all amendments that were offered to the bill itself. I have been patiently waiting until we reached these two amendments, but I never have indicated or even thought that the amendments were not to be presented. I have been insisting upon presenting them all the while. They have been here for 2 weeks, and Senators have certainly had an opportunity to study them. It is absurd to come here at the last minute and say there has not been time to consider them.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the agreement with respect to 15-minute limitation on debate shall not apply to the chairman of the committee who has offered the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. Does the Senator from Florida desire the amendment read?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the amendment had better be read.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I call attention simply to a matter of title? The amendment is entitled "Title II." There is a title II now in existence in the Securities Act. It is a title which has never been put in operation, but nevertheless exists.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment has reference to title II of the bill now before the Senate, and not title II of the Securities Act.

Mr. JOHNSON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought the amendment had reference to title II of the Securities Act.

Mr. FLETCHER. No. I ask that my amendment may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 57, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

SECTION 201. (a) That paragraph (1) of section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"The term 'security' means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, or, in general, any interest or instrument commonly known as a 'security', or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing."

(b) Paragraph (4) of such section 2 is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The term 'issuer' means every person who issues or proposes to issue any security; except that with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors (or persons performing similar functions) or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term 'issuer' means the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which such securities are issued; and except that with respect to equipment-trust certificates or like securities, the term 'issuer' means the person by whom the equipment or property is or is to be used; and except that with respect to fractional undivided interests in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, the term 'issuer' means the owner of any such right or of any interest in such right (whether whole or fractional) who creates fractional interests therein for the purpose of public offering."

(c) Paragraph (10) of such section 2 is amended to read as follows:

"(10) The term 'prospectus' means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication, written or by radio, which offers any security for sale; except that (a) a communication shall not be deemed a prospectus if it is proved that prior to or at the same time with such communication a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 was sent or given to the person to whom the communication was made, by the person making such communication or his principal, and (b) a notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication in respect of a security shall not be deemed to be a prospectus if it states from whom a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 may be obtained and, in addition, does no more than identify the security, state the price thereof, and state by whom orders will be executed."

SEC. 202. (a) Paragraph (2) of section 3 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State of the United States, or by any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or by any public instrumentality of one or more States or Territories, or by any person controlled or supervised by and acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States, or any certificate of deposit for any of the foregoing, or any security issued or guaranteed by any national bank, or by any banking institution organized under the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, the business of which is substantially confined to banking and is supervised by the State or Territorial banking commission or similar official; or any security issued by or representing an interest in or a direct obligation of a Federal Reserve bank";

(b) Paragraph (4) of such section 3 (a) is amended by striking out "corporation" and inserting in lieu thereof "person."

(c) Such section 3 (a) is further amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by inserting immediately after such paragraph (8) the following new paragraphs:

"(9) Any security issued by a person where the issue of which it is a part is exchanged by it with its own security holders exclusively and where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting such exchange;

"(10) Any security which is issued in exchange for one or more bona fide outstanding securities, claims or property interests, or partly in such exchange and partly for cash, where the conditions of such issuance are subject to the supervision of any court, or of any official or agency of the United States authorized to exercise such supervision, or of any State banking or insurance commission or similar authority;

"(11) Any security which is a part of an issue sold only to persons resident within a single State or Territory, where the issuer of such security is a person resident and doing business within, or, if a corporation, incorporated by and doing business within, such State or Territory."

SEC. 203. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 4 of such act is amended (1) by striking out "not with or through an underwriter and"; and (2) by striking out "last" and inserting in lieu thereof "first."

(b) Paragraph (3) of such section 4 is hereby repealed.

SEC. 204. Subsection (c) of section 5 of such act is hereby repealed.

SEC. 205. Paragraph (1) of section 10 (b) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) When a prospectus is used more than 13 months after the effective date of the registration statement, the information in the statements contained therein shall be as of a date not more than 12 months prior to such use, so far as such information is known to the user of such prospectus or can be furnished by such user without unreasonable effort or expense."

SEC. 206. (a) Section 11 (a) of such act is amended by adding, after the last line thereof, the following new sentence: "If such person acquired the security after the issuer has made generally available to its security holders an earning statement covering a period of at least 12 months beginning after the effective date of the registration statement, then the right of recovery under this subsection shall be conditioned on proof that such person acquired the security relying upon such untrue statement in the registration statement or relying upon the registration statement and not knowing of such omission, but such reliance may be established without proof of the reading of the registration statement by such person."

(b) Clauses (C) and (D) of paragraph (3) of section 11 (b) of such act are amended to read as follows: "(C) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made on the authority of an expert (other than himself) or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert (other than himself), such part was made by an expert selected after reasonable investigation and with reasonable ground for belief in his ability for such purpose, and he had no reasonable ground to believe and did not believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were untrue or that there was an omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, or that such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent the statement of the expert or was not a fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation of the expert; and (D) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, he had no reasonable ground to believe and did not believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were untrue, or that there was an omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, or that such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent the statement made by the official person or was not a fair copy of or extract from the public official document."

(c) Subsection (c) of such section 11 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) In determining, for the purpose of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section, what constitutes reasonable investigation and reasonable ground for belief, the standard of reasonableness shall be that required of a prudent man in the management of his own property."

(d) Subsection (e) of such section 11 is amended to read as follows:

"(e) The suit authorized under subsection (a) may be to recover such damages as shall represent the difference between the amount paid for the security (not exceeding the price at which the security was offered to the public) and (1) the value thereof as of the time such suit was brought, or (2) the price at which such security shall have been disposed of in the market before suit, or (3) the price at which such security shall have been disposed of after suit but before judgment if such damages shall be less than the damages representing the difference between the amount paid for the security (not exceeding the price at which the security was offered to the public) and the value thereof as of the time such suit was brought: Provided, That if the defendant proves that any portion or all of such damages represents other than the depreciation in value of such security resulting from such part of the registration statement, with respect to which his liability is asserted, not being true or omitting to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, such portion of or all such damages shall not be recoverable. In no event shall any underwriter (unless such underwriter shall have received for acting as an underwriter some benefit, directly or indirectly, greater than underwriters similarly situated with reference to the issuer, or other underwriters) be liable in any suit or as a consequence of suits authorized under subsection (a) for damages in excess of the total price at which the securities underwritten by him were offered to the public. In any suit under this or any other section of this title the court may, in its discretion, require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit, including reasonable attorney's fees, and if judgment shall be rendered against a party litigant, upon the motion of the other party litigant, such costs may be assessed in favor of such party litigant (whether or not such undertaking has been required) if the court believes the suit or the defense to have been without merit, in an amount sufficient to reimburse him for the reasonable expenses incurred by him in connection with such suit, such costs to be taxed in the manner usually provided for taxing of costs in the court in which the suit was heard."

SEC. 207. Section 13 of such act is amended (a) by striking out "2 years" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1 year"; (b) by striking out "10 years" and inserting in lieu thereof "5 years"; and (c) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "or under section 12 (2) more than 5 years after the sale."

SEC. 208. Section 15 of such act is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "unless the act for which such controlled person is alleged to be liable under section 11 or 12 was not performed at the direction of the controlling person nor to enable such controlling person to evade liability under said sections."

SEC. 209. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 19 of such act is amended by striking out the word "accounting" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "terms deemed by the Commission to be accounting, technical."

(b) Subsection (a) of such section 19 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Acts done or omitted in good faith in compliance with the rules and regulations of the Commission authorized by this title shall be deemed, for the purpose of determining any and all liability under this title, to be in compliance with its provisions, notwithstanding the fact that such rules and regulations may, after such act or omission, be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to have been made by the Commission in excess of, or contrary to, the authority conferred upon it by the provisions of this title."

SEC. 210. Upon the expiration of 90 days after the date upon which a majority of the members of the Federal Securities Exchange Commission appointed under section 4 of title I of this act have qualified and taken office, all powers, duties, and functions of the Federal Trade Commission under the Securities Act of 1933 shall be transferred to such Commission, together with all property, books, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations used by or available to the Federal Trade Commission for carrying out its functions under the Securities Act of 1933.

On page 1, after line 2, insert:

"TITLE I—REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES"

In sections 2 to 30, both inclusive, of the bill, except in section 7 (d), strike out the word "act" wherever it appears and insert in lieu thereof the word "title."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it will be observed after listening to the reading of this amendment that its purpose is to clarify certain provisions of the present Securities Act to relieve it of some ambiguities and to liberalize it. The effort has been to meet objections and criticisms and complaints which have come to the committee that the present act is too drastic, and is interfering with business. We have tried to meet those objections by this amendment; and, so far as I know, no objection has been raised to the amendment.

I have conferred with a number of Senators, and, so far as I know, the amendment has met with their universal approval. I have heard no objection to it. At any rate, Mr. President, I have not only had the amendment printed, but it has been on the desks of Senators, and I have talked with them about it. There never has been any other purpose than to present the amendment at the proper time.

Last Monday I had inserted in the RECORD a memorandum explanatory of the amendment, and it has been in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ever since then. I now ask that the clerk read—because he has a better voice than I have—the memorandum which I send to the desk, which will explain the provisions of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Without objection, the memorandum will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

MEMORANDUM EXPLANATORY OF SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS TO THE SECURITIES ACT

Amendment to section 2 (1): The purpose of this amendment is to make it clear that certificates of deposit, fractional oil royalties, and similar interests are included within the definition of a security and thus subject to the Securities Act. Some doubt exists whether they are so included under the present language of the act.

Amendment to section 2 (4): The purposes of this amendment are (1) to eliminate a guarantor from the definition of an issuer and (2) to define the issuer of fractional undivided interests in oil, gas, or other mineral rights. The words "or persons" have also been deleted from the definition of an issuer of certificates of deposit, etc. The singular will include the plural where necessary, and the express use of the plural word has caused some doubts about the commission's interpretation that a committee, trust, or other entity, and not the individual member, is the issuer intended by the definition. Putting the status of an issuer of the guaranteed security upon the guarantor raises serious practical difficulties in connection with the filing of registration statements. The act will adequately cover guarantors and the furnishing of information concerning them without this clause. The amendment respecting fractional undivided interests in oil, gas, or other mineral rights is necessary in connection with the amendment to section 2 (1).

Amendment to section 2 (10): The purposes of this amendment are (1) to make clear beyond any doubt the interpretation of the commission that literature accompanying a prospectus as well as literature sent subsequent to the sending of a prospectus shall not be required to conform to the prospectus requirements of section 10 of the act, and (2) to remove from a person required to furnish a prospectus the absolute duty to see that the prospectus is received by the person to whom it is sent. It seems sufficient to require proof of the actual sending of a prospectus without making the sender take all risks of nondelivery.

Amendment to section 3 (a) (2): The purposes of this amendment are: (1) to put the District of Columbia upon a parity with the States with reference to the exemption of bank stocks issued by banks organized under the laws of the District of Columbia; (2) to exempt municipal bondholders' protective committes; and (3) to extend the scope of the public instrumentality exemption to expanding activities in which governments are indulging. The exemption of municipal bondholders' protective committees is dictated purely by considerations of expediency. These committees have generally had a good record in the past. There is far from the urge present in these cases as contrasted with industrial and real-estate reorganizations for committee members to take responsibility for the sake of profit, so that as a practical matter there is hesitation on the part of committee members to assume even a slight responsibility. The extension of the public instrumentality exemption is dictated by conservative decisions of courts which have refused to regard as "essential governmental functions" such activities as the furnishing of light, transportation, power, and even water.

Amendment to section 3 (a) (4): The purpose of this amendment is to correct an obvious error in the original act which limited this exemption simply to corporate organizations when its extension to unincorporated associations is equally defensible in practice and in theory.

Amendment adding sections 3 (a) (9), (10), and (11): This amendment has several purposes. The primary purpose of the amendment is to make clear that the exemptions accorded by the present sections 4 (3) and 5 (c) of the act extend beyond the particular transactions therein covered, to the security itself. Considerable confusion has existed on this point, and the amendment is merely a confirmation of interpretations of the sections by the Commission. The new section 3 (a) (9) incorporates the first clause of the existing section 4 (3), and makes clear, in accordance with the interpretation of the Commission, that in order that the exemption may be available the entire issue must be exchanged exclusively with existing security holders. This paragraph also effects a change which makes clear that the type of commission or other remuneration the payment of which will remove the exemption is that paid for soliciting an exchange. This conforms to the interpretation of the Commission. The new section 3 (a) (10) incorporates the second clause of the existing section 4 (3) and substantially extends the present provisions in order to cover various forms of readjustments of the rights of holders of outstanding securities, claims, and property interests where the holders will be protected by court supervision of the conditions of the issuance of their new securities. Also, such readjustments under the supervision of officials and agencies of the United States and under the supervision of State banking, insurance, and similar officials are brought within the exemption. Thus, the amended section will afford an exemption to securities issued in connection with a readjustment of outstanding real estate bond issues, and the exemption will also cover securities issued under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board, and similar Federal officials, as well as State banking and insurance officials. By the requirement that securities, claims, and property interests must be bona fide outstanding, the new section will provide protection against resort to the exemption for the purpose of evading the registration requirements of the act. The new section 3 (a) (11) incorporates the existing section 5 (c) of the act and further makes clear that the exemption is not limited to the use of the mails. Thus, a person who comes within the purpose of the exemption but happens to use a newspaper for the circulation of his advertising literature, which newspaper is transmitted in interstate commerce, does not thereby lose the benefits of the exemption.

Amendment to section 4 (1): The purposes of this amendment are (1) to remove the phrase "not with or through an underwriter" in the second clause of the section; and (2) to correct an error in the third clause of the section, making it clear that the original date of the public offering is the date from which the year is to be calculated during which a dealer is bound to supply his customers with a prospectus. The Commission has recognized by its interpretations that a "public offering" is necessary for "distribution." Therefore, there can be no underwriter within the meaning of the act in the absence of a public offering and the phrase eliminated in the second clause is really superfluous.

Repeal of sections 4 (3) and 5 (c): These are in accordance with the amendment provided by the new sections 3 (a) (9) (10) and (11).

Amendment to section 10 (b) (1): The purpose of this amendment is to place only a reasonable instead of an absolute duty upon the user of a prospectus 13 months after its issuance of keeping the information therein up to date. It was originally conceived that users of prospectuses could protect themselves herein by contract with the issuer, but it appears only too likely that users of the prospectus will not have the forethought, and therefore will be left in a situation where they cannot of their own accord conform with the requirements of the act.

Amendment to section 11 (b) (3): This amendment restates the existing section. It seems that the section as written, though meaning the same thing, has had an unfortunate psychological effect.

Amendment to section 11 (c): This amendment has the same purpose as the preceding amendment. The term "fiduciary relationship" has been terrifyingly portrayed. The amendment substitutes for that language the accepted common-law definition of the duty of a fiduciary.

Amendment to section 11 (e): This amendment is the most important of all. It has three purposes: (1) it permits the defendant in an action under section 11 to reduce the damages so that he will not be liable for damages which he proves had no relation to his misconduct; (2) it provides that an underwriter who does not receive any preferential treatment is permitted to limit his total liability for all suites brought under section 11 to the extent of the public offering price of the securities which he underwrote; and (3) it provides, as a defense against blackmail suits as well as a defense against purely contentious litigation on the part of the defendant, that a court can require a bond for costs and can assess costs against either the plaintiff or the defendant, where the court is convinced either that the plaintiff's suit had no merit or that the defendant's defense had no merit. The suggested amendment seems equitable.

Amendment to section 13: The purpose of this amendment is to reduce the periods of limitations on actions to one half of those at present provided by the section; and also to correct an apparently inadvertent omission by making the 5- (formerly 10-) year period of limitation on actions expressly applicable to section 12 (2).

Amendment to section 15: The purpose of this amendment is to restrict the scope of the section so as more accurately to carry out its real purpose. The mere existence of control is not made a basis for liability unless that control is effectively exercised to bring about the action upon which liability is based.

Amendment to section 19 (a): The purpose of this amendment is to permit the regulations of the Commission, under the powers conferred upon it, adequately to protect persons who rely upon them in good faith. The powers of the Commission are also extended to include the defining of technical as well as trade terms.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, and I hope the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I now offer my amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Florida, and should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, has this amendment been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. KEAN. No; it has not been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has been printed for the benefit of Senators for some days?

Mr. KEAN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator willing to have the further reading of the amendment dispensed with and let it be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator wishes to make a motion to that effect, I shall agree to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the further reading of the amendment will be dispensed with, and the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KEAN's amendment entire is as follows:

TITLE II

PART I

PROSPECTUS

SECTION 1. (1) A prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company or in relation to an intended company shall be dated, and that date shall, unless the contrary is proved, be taken as the date of publication of the prospectus.

(2) A copy of every such prospectus, signed by every person who is named therein as a director or proposed director of the company, or by his agent authorized in writing, shall be delivered to the commission for registration on or before the date of its publication, and no such prospectus shall be issued until a copy thereof has been so delivered for registration.

(3) The commission shall not register any prospectus unless it is dated, and the copy thereof signed, in manner required by this section.

(4) Every prospectus shall state on the face of it that a copy has been delivered for registration as required by this section.

(5) If a prospectus is issued without a copy thereof being so delivered, the company, and every person who is knowingly a party to the issue of the prospectus, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $25 for every day from the date of the issue of the prospectus until a copy thereof is so delivered.

SEC. 2. (1) Every prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company, or by or on behalf of any person who is or has been engaged or interested in the formation of the company, must state the matters specified in part I of the schedule of this act and set out the reports specified in part II of the schedule, and the said parts I and II shall have effect subject to the provisions contained in part III of the schedule.

(2) A condition requiring or binding an applicant for shares in bonds or debentures of a company to waive compliance with any requirement of this section, or purporting to affect him with notice of any contract, document, or matter not specifically referred to in the prospectus, shall be void.

(3) It shall not be lawful to issue any form of application for shares in bonds or debentures of a company unless the form is issued with a prospectus which complies with the requirements of this section: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply if it is shown that the form of application was issued either (a) in connection with a bona fide invitation to a person to enter into an underwriting agreement with respect to the shares or debentures; or (b) in relation to shares, bonds, or debentures which were not offered to the public.

If any person acts in contravention of the provisions of this subsection, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $2,500.

(4) In the event of noncompliance with or contravention of any of the requirements of this section, a director or other person responsible for the prospectus shall not incur any liability by reason of the noncompliance or contravention, if (a) as regards any matter not disclosed, he proves that he was not cognizant thereof; or (b) he proves that the noncompliance or contravention arose from an honest mistake of fact on his part; or (c) the noncompliance or contravention was in respect of matters which in the opinion of the court dealing with the case were immaterial or was otherwise such as ought, in the opinion of that court, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, reasonably to be excused: Provided, That in the event of failure to include in a prospectus a statement with respect to the matters specified in paragraph 15 of part I of the schedule to this act, no director or other person shall incur any liability in respect of the failure unless it be proved that he had knowledge of the matters not disclosed.

(5) This section shall not apply to the issue to existing members, bond holders, or debenture holders of a company of a prospectus or form of application relating to shares in bonds or debentures of the company, whether an applicant for shares, bonds, or debentures will or will not have the right to renounce in favor of other persons, but, subject as aforesaid, this section shall apply to a prospectus or a form of application whether issued on or with reference to the formation of a company or subsequently.

(6) Nothing in this section shall limit or diminish any liability which any person may incur under the general law or this act apart from this section.

SEC. 3. (1) A company limited by shares or a company limited by guaranty and having a share capital shall not, previous to the statutory meeting, vary the terms of a contract referred to in the prospectus, or statement in lieu of prospectus, except subject to the approval of the statutory meeting.

(2) This section shall not apply to a private company.

SEC. 4. (1) Where a prospectus invites persons to subscribe for shares in bonds or debentures of a company—

(a) every person who is a director of the company at the time of the issue of the prospectus;

(b) every person who has authorized himself to be named and is named in the prospectus as a director or as having agreed to become a director either immediately or after an interval of time;

(c) every person being a promoter of the company; and

(d) every person who has authorized the issue of the prospectus, shall be liable to pay compensation to all persons who subscribe for any shares, bonds, or debentures on the faith of the prospectus for the loss or damage they may have sustained by reason of any untrue statement therein, or in any report or memorandum appearing on the face thereof, or by reference incorporated therein or issued therewith, unless it is proved—

(i) that having consented to become a director of the company he withdrew his consent before the issue of the prospectus, and that it was issued without his authority or consent; or

(ii) that the prospectus was issued without his knowledge or consent and that on becoming aware of its issue he forthwith gave reasonable public notice that it was issued without his knowledge or consent; or

(iii) that, after the issue of the prospectus and before allotment thereunder, he, on becoming aware of any untrue statement therein, withdrew his consent thereto, and gave reasonable public notice of the withdrawal, and of the reason therefor; or

(iv) that—

(a) as regards every untrue statement not purporting to be made on the authority of an expert or of a public official document or statement, he had reasonable ground to believe, and did up to the time of the allotment of the shares or debentures, as the case may be, believe that the statement was true; and

(b) as regards every untrue statement purporting to be a statement by an expert or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert, it fairly represented the statement, or was a correct and fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation; and

(c) as regards every untrue statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, it was a correct and fair representation of the statement or copy of or extract from the document:

Provided, That a person shall be liable to pay compensation as aforesaid if it is proved that he had no reasonable ground to believe that the person making any such statement, report, or valuation as is mentioned in paragraph (iv) (b) of this subsection was competent to make it.

(2) Where the prospectus contains the name of a person as a director of the company, or as having agreed to become a director thereof, and he has not consented to become a director, or has withdrawn his consent before the issue of the prospectus, and has not authorized or consented to the issue thereof, the directors of the company, except any without whose knowledge or consent the prospectus was issued, and any other person who authorized the issue thereof, shall be liable to indemnify the person named as aforesaid against all damages, costs, and expenses to which he may be made liable by reason of his name having been inserted in the prospectus, or in defending himself against any action or legal proceedings brought against him in respect thereof.

(3) Every person who, by reason of his being a director or named as a director or as having agreed to become a director, or of his having authorized the issue of the prospectus, becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution, as in cases of contract, from any other person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become so liable was, and that other person was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

(4) For the purposes of this section—

The expression "promoter" means a promoter who was a party to the preparation of the prospectus, or of the portion thereof containing the untrue statement, but does not include any person by reason of his acting in a professional capacity for persons engaged in procuring the formation of the company:

The expression "expert" includes engineer, valuer, accountant, and any other person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him.

SEC. 5. (1) Where a company allots or agrees to allot any shares in bonds or debentures of the company with a view to all or any of those shares, bonds, or debentures being offered for sale to the public, any document by which the offer for sale to the public is made shall for all purposes be deemed to be a prospectus issued by the company, and all enactments and rules of law as to the contents of prospectuses and to liability in respect of statements in and omissions from prospectuses, or otherwise relating to prospectuses, shall apply and have effect accordingly, as if the shares, bonds, or debentures had been offered to the public for subscription and as if persons accepting the offer in respect of any shares, bonds, or debentures were subscriber for those shares, bonds, or debentures, but without prejudice to the liability, if any, of the persons by whom the offer is made, in respect of misstatements contained in the document or otherwise in respect thereof.

(2) For the purposes of this act, it shall, unless the contrary is proved, be evidence that an allotment of, or an agreement to allot, shares, bonds, or debentures was made with a view to the shares, bonds, or debentures being offered for sale to the public if it is shown (a) that an offer of the shares, bonds, or debentures or of any of them for sale to the public was made within 6 months after the allotment or agreement to allot; or (b) that at the date when the offer was made the whole consideration to be received by the company in respect of the shares, bonds, or debentures had not been so received.

(3) Section 1 of this act as applied by this section shall have effect as though the persons making the offer were persons named in a prospectus as directors of a company, and section 2 of this act as applied by this section shall have effect as if it required a prospectus to state in addition to the matters required by that section to be stated in a prospectus (a) the net amount of the consideration received or to be received by the company in respect of the shares, bonds, or debentures to which the offer relates; and (b) the place and time at which the contract under which the said shares, bonds, or debentures have been or are to be allotted may be inspected.

(4) Where a person making an offer to which this section relates is a company or a firm, it shall be sufficient if the document aforesaid is signed on behalf of the company or firm by two directors of the company or not less than half of the partners, as the case may be, and any such director or partner may sign by his agent authorized in writing.

ALLOTMENT

SEC. 6. (1) No allotment shall be made of any share capital of a company offered to the public for subscription unless the amount stated in the prospectus as the minimum amount which, in the opinion of the directors, must be raised by the issue of share capital in order to provide for the matters specified in paragraph 5 in part I of the schedule to this act has been subscribed, and the sum payable on application for the amount so stated has been paid to and received by the company.

For the purposes of this subsection, a sum shall be deemed to have been paid to and received by the company if a check for that sum has been received in good faith by the company and the directors of the company have no reason for suspecting that the check will not be paid.

(2) The amount so stated in the prospectus shall be reckoned exclusively of any amount payable otherwise than in cash and is in this act referred to as "the minimum subscription."

(3) The amount payable on application on each share shall not be less than 5 percent of the nominal amount of the share.

(4) If the conditions aforesaid have not been complied with on the expiration of 40 days after the first issue of the prospectus, all money received from applicants for shares shall be forthwith repaid to them without interest, and, if any such money is not so repaid within 48 days after the issue of the prospectus, the directors of the company shall be jointly and severally liable to repay that money with interest at the rate of 5 percent per annum from the expiration of the forty-eighth day: Provided, That a director shall not be liable if he proves that the default in the repayment of the money was not due to any misconduct or negligence on his part.

(5) Any condition requiring or binding any applicant for shares to waive compliance with any requirement of this section shall be void.

(6) This section, except subsection (3) thereof, shall not apply to any allotment of shares subsequent to the first allotment of shares offered to the public for subscription.

SEC. 7. (1) A company having a share capital which does not issue a prospectus on or with reference to its formation, or which has issued such a prospectus but has not proceeded to allot any of the shares offered to the public for subscription, shall not allot any of its shares, bonds, or debentures unless at least 3 days before the first allotment of either shares, bonds, or debentures there has been delivered to the Commission for registration a statement in lieu of prospectus, signed by every person who is named therein as a director or a proposed director of the company or by his agent authorizing in writing, in the form and containing the particulars set out in the schedule to this act.

(2) This section shall not apply to a private company.

(3) If a company acts in contravention of this section, the company and every director of the company who knowingly authorizes or permits the contravention shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $500.

SEC. 8. (1) An allotment made by a company to an applicant in contravention of the provisions of the two last foregoing sections of this act shall be voidable at the instance of the applicant within 1 month after the holding of the statutory meeting of the company and not later, or, in any case where the company is not required to hold a statutory meeting, or where the allotment is made after the holding of the statutory meeting, within 1 month after the date of the allotment, and not later, and shall be so voidable notwithstanding that the company is in course of being wound up.

(2) If any director of a company knowingly contravenes, or permits or authorizes the contravention of, any of the provisions of the said sections with respect to allotment, he shall be liable to compensate the company and the allottee, respectively, for any loss, damages, or costs which the company or the allottee may have sustained or incurred thereby: Provided, That proceedings to recover any such loss, damages, or costs shall not be commenced after the expiration of 2 years from the date of the allotment.

SEC. 9. (1) Whenever a company limited by shares or a company limited by guaranty and having a share capital makes any allotment of its shares, the company shall within 1 month thereafter deliver to the commission for registration (a) a return of the allotments, stating the number and nominal amount of the shares comprised in the allotment; the names, addresses, and descriptions of the allottees; and the amount, if any, paid or due and payable on each share; and (b) in the case of shares allotted as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, a contract in writing constituting the title of the allottee to the allotment, together with any contract of sale, or for services or other consideration in respect of which that allotment was made, and a return stating the number and nominal amount of shares so allotted, the extent to which they are to be treated as paid up, and the consideration for which they have been allotted.

(2) Where such a contract as above mentioned is not reduced to writing, the company shall within 1 month after the allotment deliver to the commission for registration the prescribed particulars of the contract.

(3) If default is made in complying with this section, every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company, who is knowingly a party to the default, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $250 for every day during which the default continues: Provided, That, in case of default in delivering to the Commission within 1 month after the allotment any document required to be delivered by this section, the company, or any person liable for the default, may apply to the court for relief, and the court, if satisfied that the omission to deliver the document was accidental or due to inadvertence, or that it is just and equitable to grant relief, may make an order extending the time for the delivery of the document for such period as the court may think proper.

COMMISSIONS AND DISCOUNTS

SEC. 10. (1) It shall be lawful for a company to pay a commission to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, whether absolutely or conditionally, for any shares in the company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, whether absolute or conditional, for any shares in the company if—

(a) The payment of the commission is authorized by the articles; and

(b) The commission paid or agreed to be paid does not exceed 10 percent of the price at which the shares are issued or the amount or rate authorized by the articles, whichever is the less; and

(d) the number of shares which persons have agreed for a commission to subscribe absolutely is disclosed in manner aforesaid.

(2) Save as aforesaid, no company shall apply any of its shares or capital money either directly or indirectly in payment of any commission, discount, or allowance to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, whether absolutely or conditionally, for any shares of the company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, whether absolute or conditional, for any shares in the company, whether the shares or money be so applied by being added to the purchase money of any property acquired by the company or to the contract price of any work to be executed for the company, or the money be paid out of the nominal purchase money or contract price, or otherwise.

(3) Nothing in this section shall affect the power of any company to pay such brokerage as it has heretofore been lawful for a company to pay.

(4) A vendor to, promoter of, or other person who receives payment in money or shares from, a company shall have and shall be deemed always to have had power to apply any part of the money or shares so received in payment of any commission, the payment of which, if made directly by the company, would have been legal under this section.

(5) If default is made in complying with the provisions of this section relating to the delivery to the commission of the statement in the prescribed form, the company and every officer of the company who is in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $125.

SEC. 11. (1) Where a company has paid any sums by way of commission in respect of any shares or debentures, or allowed any sums by way of discount in respect of any bonds or debentures, the total amount so paid or allowed, or so much thereof as has not been written off, shall be stated in every balance sheet of the company until the whole amount thereof has been written off.

(2) If default is made in complying with this section, the company and every officer of the company who is in default shall be liable to a default fine.

SEC. 12. of fully paid shares in the company to be held by or for the benefit of employees of the company, including any director holding a salaried employment or office in the company; (c) the making by a company of loans to persons, other than directors, bona fide in the employment of the company with a view to enabling those persons to purchase fully paid shares in the company to be held by themselves by way of beneficial ownership.

(2) The aggregate amount of any outstanding loans made under the authority of provisos (b) and (c) to subsection (1) of this section shall be shown as a separate item in every balance sheet of the company.

(3) If a company acts in contravention of this section, the company and every officer of the company who is in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $500.

ISSUE OF REDEEMABLE PREFERENCE SHARES AND SHARES AT DISCOUNT

SEC. 13. (1) Subject to the provisions of this section, a company limited by shares may, if so authorized by its articles, issue preference shares which are, or at the option of the company are to be liable, to be redeemed: Provided, That—

(a) no such shares shall be redeemed except out of profits of the company which would otherwise be available for dividend or out of the proceeds of a fresh issue of shares made for the purposes of the redemption;

(b) no such shares shall be redeemed unless they are fully paid;

(c) where any such shares are redeemed otherwise than out of the proceeds of a fresh issue, there shall out of profits which would otherwise have been available for dividend be transferred to a reserve fund, to be called "the capital redemption reserve fund", a sum equal to the amount applied in redeeming the shares, and the provisions of this act relating to the reduction of the share capital of a company shall, except as provided in this section, apply as if the capital redemption reserve fund were paid-up share capital of the company;

(d) where any such shares are redeemed out of the proceeds of a fresh issue, the premium, if any, payable on redemption, must have been provided for out of the profits of the company before the shares are redeemed.

(2) There shall be included in every balance sheet of a company which has issued redeemable preference shares a statement specifying what part of the issued capital of the company consists of such shares and the date on or before which those shares are, or are to be liable, to be redeemed.

If a company fails to comply with the provisions of this subsection, the company and every officer of the company who is in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $500.

(3) Subject to the provisions of this section, the redemption of preference shares thereunder may be effected on such terms and in such manner as may be provided by the articles of the company.

(4) Where in pursuance of this section a company has redeemed or is about to redeem any preference shares, it shall have power to issue shares up to the nominal amount of the shares redeemed or to be redeemed as if those shares had never been issued, and accordingly the share capital of the company shall not for the purposes of any enactments relating to stamp duty be deemed to be increased by the issue of shares in pursuance of this subsection: Provided, That where new shares are issued before the redemption of the old shares, the new shares shall not, so far as relates to stamp duty, be deemed to have been issued in pursuance of this subsection unless the old shares are redeemed within 1 month after the issue of the new shares.

(5) Where new shares have been issued in pursuance of the last foregoing subsection, the capital redemption reserve fund may, notwithstanding anything in this section, be applied by the company, up to an amount equal to the nominal amount of the shares so issued, in paying up unissued shares of the company to be issued to members of the company as fully paid bonus shares.

SEC. 14. (1) Subject as provided in this section, it shall be lawful for a company to issue at a discount shares in the company of a class already issued: Provided, That (a) the issue of the shares at a discount must be authorized by resolution passed in general meeting of the company, and must be sanctioned by the State under which the company is chartered; (b) the resolution must specify the maximum rate of discount at which the shares are to be issued; (c) not less than 1 year must at the date of the issue have elapsed since the date on which the company was entitled to commence business; and (d) the shares to be issued at a discount must be issued within 1 month after the date on which the issue is sanctioned by the State or within such extended time as the State may allow.

(3) Every prospectus relating to the issue of the shares and every balance sheet issued by the company subsequently to the issue of the shares must contain particulars of the discount allowed on the issue of the shares or of so much of that discount as has not been written off at the date of the issue of the document in question.

If default is made in complying with this subsection, the company and every officer of the company who is in default shall be liable to a default fine.

(3) Where any document by which any shares in bonds or debentures of a company incorporated outside the United States are offered for sale to the public would, if the company concerned had been a company within the meaning of this act, have been deemed by virtue of section 38 of this act to be a prospectus issued by the company, that document shall be deemed to be, for the purposes of this section, a prospectus issued by the company.

(4) An offer of shares, bonds, or debentures for subscription or sale to any person whose ordinary business or part of whose ordinary business it is to buy or sell shares, bonds, or debentures, whether as principal or agent, shall not be deemed an offer to the public for the purposes of this section.

PROVISIONS APPLYING TO PARTS I AND II OF SCHEDULE

1. The provisions of this schedule with respect to the memorandum and the qualification, remuneration, and interest of directors; the names, descriptions, and addresses of directors or proposed directors; and the amount or estimated amount of the preliminary expenses, shall not apply in the case of a prospectus issued more than 2 years after the date at which the company is entitled to commence business.

2. Every person shall for the purposes of this schedule be deemed to be a vendor who has entered into any contract, absolute or conditional, for the sale or purchase, or for any option of purchase, of any property to be acquired by the company, in any case where—

(a) The purchase money is not fully paid at the date of the issue of the prospectus;

(b) the purchase money is to be paid or satisfied wholly or in part out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus;

(c) the contract depends for its validity or fulfillment on the result of that issue.

3. Where any property to be acquired by the company is to be taken on lease, this schedule shall have effect as if the expression "vendor" included the lessor, and the expression "purchase money" included the consideration for the lease, and the expression "subpurchaser" included a sublessee.

4. For the purposes of paragraph 8 of part I of this schedule where the vendors or any of them are a firm, the members of the firm shall not be treated as separate vendors.

5. If in the case of a company which has been carrying on business, or of a business which has been carried on for less than 3 years, the accounts of the company or business have only been made up in respect of 2 years or 1 year, part II of this schedule shall have effect as if references to 2 years or 1 year, as the case may be, were substituted for references to 3 years.

6. The expression "financial year" in part II of this schedule means the year in respect of which the accounts of the company or of the business, as the case may be, are made up, and where by reason of any alteration of the date on which the financial year of the company or business terminates the accounts of the company or business have been made up for a period greater or less than a year, that greater or less period shall for the purpose of the said part of this schedule be deemed to be a financial year.

The Securities Act of 1933 is repealed.

Mr. KEAN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks a comparison of the United States Securities Act of 1933 with the British companies act of 1929.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMPARISON OF THE UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933 WITH THE BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929

Since the approval by the President of the Securities Act of 1933 on May 27, 1933, much has been published concerning that act. A great many of these publications have criticized the act and compared it generally with the British companies act of 1929. However, there has been, apparently, no effort made to set up in parallel columns the comparable provisions of the two acts. Such a parallel comparison has been attempted in this memorandum with the hope that it may be helpful to those who wish to familiarize themselves with the similarities and differences between the acts in question.

In considering these acts it should be noted that the United States act deals solely with securities and the offering and sale thereof, its central idea being the protection of investors through the imposition upon sellers of responsibility for full disclosure, while the British act deals comprehensively with companies, their organization, operation, etc. Consequently only relatively few of the provisions of the British act are comparable to the United States act. The particular provisions of the British act which deal with matters relating to the issue of securities and are, therefore, comparable to the United States act, are largely included in the following-named sections of the British act, to wit: Sections 34 to 38, inclusive, sections 354 to 356, inclusive, section 380, and the fourth schedule.

In considering the following parallel column comparison of the two acts, the following general differences, among others, will be apparent:

(1) The United States act covers original and subsequent transactions in securities; the British act deals chiefly with the original offer of securities to the public and not to subsequent transaction in those securities.

(2) Under the United States act the Federal Trade Commission has broad powers as to requiring the filing of additional information, making investigations of companies whose securities are registered or sought to be registered, and as to suspending the effectiveness of a registration statement; the registrar under the British act merely acts in a ministerial capacity as respects a prospectus; there are no "rules and regulations" nor bureaucracy as the act itself sets forth all the matters required for full disclosure and leaves nothing to the discretion of executive officers.

(3) Under the United States act there is a 20-day "waiting period" between the filing of the registration statement and the time the security can be offered; under the British act the security can be offered as soon as the prospectus is filed.

(4) Under the United States act a greater number of persons are subjected to civil liability than under the British act; for example, experts (accountants, appraisers, attorneys, etc.) are not liable under the British act.

(5) The United States act gives the right of recovery not only to the original purchasers of securities but to all others who may subsequently purchase such securities; under the British act the right of recovery is limited to the original purchasers and consequently there can be no "pyramiding" of damages.

(6) Under the United States act the same civil liabilities (with the same defenses) are created for the omission to "state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statement therein not misleading" as for "an untrue statement of a material fact" in the registration statement; under the British act civil liability is imposed only for untrue statements, although by court decisions this has been construed to include partial statements and some omissions.

(7) Under the United States act one suing for damages need not show that he relied on the statements contained in the registration statement nor that the damages resulted from an error or omission in that statement but need only show the error or omission; under the British act the person suing must prove that he relied on the prospectus and also that the damages resulted from an untrue statement therein contained.

(8) Under the United States act directors, in order to escape liability, must show not only that they had reasonable grounds to believe and did believe the statement to have been true but also that they had made a "reasonable investigation", and the standard of reasonableness is the highest— i.e., that of a fiduciary; under the British act the directors need only show they had reasonable grounds to believe the statements to be true (and if the statement is that of an "expert" the person suing must show that the directors had no reasonable ground to believe the expert "competent").

In the following comparison the provisions of the British act have been separated and rearranged so as to place them insofar as possible opposite comparable provisions of the United States act and, in so doing, the continuity of the British act has necessarily been destroyed. Therefore, in order that the reader may, if he so desires, consider the provisions of the British act as a whole and so that citations in the comments may be more readily followed and understood, it has seemed advisable to set out in full the above-referred-to provisions of the British act. These provisions appear following the parallel column comparison.

COMPARISON OF THE UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933 WITH PROVISIONS OF THE BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929 DEALING WITH SIMILAR MATTERS, WITH COMMENTS

NOTE.—The provisions of the United States act appear in regular sequence and the British act is rearranged so as to place opposite each United States provision the British provision most nearly corresponding thereto (so far as this can be done and leave the British act understandable). The exact language of the British provisions is given with citation.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933	BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929	COMMENTS
TITLE I SHORT TITLE
SECTION 1. This title may be cited as the "Securities Act of 1933."	This act may be cited as the Companies act, 1929 (sec. 385).
Definitions
SEC. 2. When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires—	380. (1) In this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meanings hereby assigned to them (that is to say):
(1) The term "security" means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment, contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of interest in property, tangible or intangible, or, in general, any instrument commonly known as a "security", or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing.	"Share" means share in the share capital of a company, and includes stock, except where a distinction between stock and shares is expressed or implied. "Debenture" includes debenture stock, bonds, and any other securities of a company, whether constituting a charge on the assets of the company or not.	It should be noted that the British act only applies to "shares" and "debentures" of a "company", whereas the United States act applies to securities by whomever issued (with certain exceptions).
	"Company" means a company formed and registered under this act or an existing company. "Existing company" means a company formed and registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, the Companies Act, 1862, or the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, but does not include a company registered under the said enactments in Northern Ireland or the Irish Free State.	"The context otherwise requires" in certain portions of the British act that the word "company" be extended to mean a corporation organized outside of Great Britain, and the provisions as to prospectus and liability apply to such corporations offering securities in Great Britain. (See secs. 354, 355.)
(2) The term "person" means an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a trust, any unincorporated organization, or a government or political subdivision thereof. As used in this paragraph the term "trust" shall include only a trust where the interest or interests of the beneficiary or beneficiaries are evidenced by a security.
(3) The term "sale", "sell", "offer to sell", or "offer for sale" shall include every contract of sale or disposition of, attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy, a security or interest in a security, for value; except that such terms shall not include preliminary negotiations or agreements between an issuer and any underwriter, any security given or delivered with, or as a bonus on account of, any purchase of securities or any other thing, shall be conclusively presumed to constitute a part of the subject of such purchase and to have been sold for value. The issue or transfer of a right or privilege, when originally issued or transferred with a security, giving the holder of such security the right to convert such security into another security of the same issuer or of another person, or giving a right to subscribe to another security of the same issuer or of another person, which right cannot be exercised until some future date, shall not be deemed to be a sale of such other security; but the issue or transfer of such other security upon the exercise of such right of conversion or subscription shall be deemed a sale of such other security.		It should be noted that the British act applies principally to the original offer or sale to the public.
(4) The term "issuer" means every person who issues or proposes to issue any security or who guarantees a security either as to principal or income; except that with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors (or persons performing similar functions) or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term "issuer" means the person or persons performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which such securities are issued, and except that with respect to equipment-trust certificates or like securities, the term "issuer" means the person by whom the equipment or property is or is to be used.

(5) The term "Commission" means the Federal Trade Commission.

(6) The term "Territory" means Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, and the insular possessions of the United States.

(7) The term "interstate commerce" means trade or commerce in securities or any transportation or communication relating thereto among the several States or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State or other Territory, or between any foreign country and any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or within the District of Columbia.

(8) The term "registration statement" means the statement provided for in section 6, and includes any amendment thereto and any report, document, or memorandum accompanying such statement or incorporated therein by reference.

(9) The term "write" or "written" shall include printed, lithographed, or any means of graphic communication.

(10) The term "prospectus" means any prospectus, notice, circular advertisement, letter, or communication, written or by radio, which offers any security for sale; except that (a) a communication shall not be deemed a prospectus if it is proved that prior to such communication a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 was received, by the person to whom the communication was made, from the person making such communication or his principal, and (b) a notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication in respect of a security shall not be deemed to be a prospectus if it states from whom a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 may be obtained and, in addition, does no more than identify the security, state the price thereof, and state by whom orders will be executed.

(11) The term "underwriter" means any person who has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or sells for an issuer in connection with, the distribution of any security, or participates or has a direct or indirect participation in any such undertaking, or participates or has a participation in the direct or indirect underwriting of any such undertaking; but such term shall not include a person whose interest is limited to a commission from an underwriter or dealer not in excess of the usual and customary distributors' or sellers' commission. As used in this paragraph the term "issuer" shall include, in addition to an issuer, any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer.

(12) The term "dealer" means any person who engages either for all or part of his time, directly or indirectly, as agent, broker, or principal in the business of offering, buying, selling, or otherwise dealing or trading in securities issued by another person.

Exempted securities

SEC. 3. (a) Except as hereinafter expressly provided, the provisions of this title shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities:

(1) Any security which, prior to or within 60 days after the enacting of this title, has been sold or disposed of by the issuer or bona fide offered to the public, but his exemption shall not apply to any new offering of any such security by an issuer or underwriter subsequent to such 60 days;

BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—CON.

"The registrar of companies" or, when used in relation to registration of companies, "the registrar", means the registrar or other officer performing under this act the duty of registration of companies in England or Scotland, or in the stannaries, as the case requires.

"Prospectus" means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, or other invitation, offering to the public for subscription or purchase any shares or debentures of a company.

COMMENTS—CON.

It shall be noted that the British act requires the "prospectus" to be filed, so that the "registration statement" under the United States act and the "prospectus" under the British act are comparable for most purposes.

The United States act applies (disregarding the exceptions) to all transactions in all securities, whereas the British act applies to the original offer of securities of companies to the public; however, under the United States act certain securities are exempted, and this exemption, therefore, exempts all transactions in that security.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933—con.

(2) Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State of the United States, or by any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or by any public instrumentality of one or more States or Territories exercising an essential governmental function, or by any corporation created and controlled or supervised by and acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States, or by any national bank, or by any banking institution organized under the laws of any state or Territory, the business of which is substantially confined to banking and is supervised by the State or Territorial banking commission or similar official; or any security issued by or representing an interest in or a direct obligation of a Federal Reserve bank;

(3) Any note, draft, bill of exchange, or banker's acceptance which arises out of a current transaction or the proceeds of which have been or are to be used for current transactions, and which has a maturity at the time of issuance of not exceeding 9 months, exclusive of days of grace, or any renewal thereof the maturity of which is likewise limited;

(4) Any security issued by a corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, educational, benevolent, fraternal, charitable, or reformatory purposes and not for pecuniary profit, and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any person, private stockholder, or individual;

(5) Any security issued by a building-and-loan association, homestead association, savings-and-loan association, or similar institution, substantially all of the business of which is confined to the making of loans to members (but the foregoing exemption shall not apply with respect to any such security where the issuer takes from the total amount paid or deposited by the purchaser, by way of any fee, cash value or other device whatsoever, either upon termination of the investment at maturity or before maturity, an aggregate amount in excess of 3 percent of the face value of such security), or any security issued by a farmers' cooperative association as defined in paragraphs (12), (13), and (14) of section 103 of the Revenue Act of 1932;

(6) Any security issued by a common carrier which is subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended;

(7) Certificates issued by a receiver or by a trustee in bankruptcy, with the approval of the court;

(8) Any insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract or optional annuity contract, issued by a corporation subject to the supervision of the insurance commissioner, bank commissioner, or any agency or officer performing like functions, of any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia.

(b) The Commission may from time to time by its rules and regulations, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed therein, add any class of securities to the securities exempted as provided in this section, if it finds that the enforcement of this title with respect to such securities is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors by reason of the small amount involved or the limited character of the public offering; but no issue of securities shall be exempted under this subsection where the aggregate amount at which such issue is offered to the public exceeds $100,000.

Exempted transactions

SEC. 4. The provisions of section 5 shall not apply to any of the following transactions:

BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—con.

COMMENTS—con.

In addition to exempting certain securities from almost all provisions of the act, the United States act exempts certain transactions in connection with any security from the provisions of section 5. It should be noted that this exemption is limited to section 5, and that the other portions of the act apply to these transactions. See particularly sections 12 A (2) and 17 of the United States act. Although a transaction in a security may be exempted by this section 4, nevertheless subsequent transactions in the security may be covered by section 5, the exemption going to the transaction only and not to the security or future transactions.

(1) Transactions by any person other than an issuer, underwriter, or dealer; transactions by an issuer not with or through an underwriter and not involving any public offering; or transactions by a dealer (including an underwriter no longer acting as an underwriter in respect of the security involved in such transaction), except transactions within 1 year after the last date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public by the issuer or by or through an underwriter (excluding in the computation of such year any time during which a stop order issued under section 8 is in effect as to the security), and except transactions as to securities constituting the whole or a part of an unsold allotment to or subscription by such dealer as a participant in the distribution of such securities by the issuer or by or through an underwriter.	Provided that this subsection shall not apply if it is shown that the form of application was issued either— (a) in connection with a bona fide invitation to a person to enter into an underwriting agreement with respect to the shares or debentures; or (b) in relation to shares or debentures which were not offered to the public (sec. 35 (3)).	"This subsection" referred to in this proviso in the British act is the subsection making it unlawful "to issue any form of application for shares in or debentures of a company unless the form is issued with a prospectus which complies with the requirements" as to information, etc., to be contained in a prospectus (sec. 35).
	38. (1) Where a company allots or agrees to allot any shares in or debentures of the company with a view to all or any of those shares or debentures being offered for sale to the public, any document by which the offer for sale to the public is made shall for all purposes be deemed to be a prospectus issued by the company, and all enactments and rules of law as to the contents of prospectuses and to liability in respect of statements in and omissions from prospectuses, or otherwise relating to prospectuses, shall apply and have effect accordingly, as if the shares or debentures had been offered to the public for subscription and as if persons accepting the offer in respect of any shares or debentures were subscribers for those shares or debentures, but without prejudice to the liability, if any, of the persons by whom the offer is made, in respect of misstatements contained in the document or otherwise in respect thereof.	Although the British act as shown above provides an exemption as to dealing with underwriters, the offer to the public (by the underwriters or others) is deemed a prospectus and is subject to the pertinent provisions of the act.
	(2) For the purposes of this act, it shall, unless the contrary is proved, be evidence that an allotment of, or an agreement to allot, shares or debentures was made with a view to the shares or debentures being offered for sale to the public if it is shown— (a) That an offer of the shares or debentures or of any of them for sale to the public was made within 6 months after the allotment or agreement to allot; or (b) That at the date when the offer was made the whole consideration to be received by the company in respect of the shares or debentures had not been so received (sec. 38).
(2) Broker's transactions, executed upon customers' orders on any exchange or in the open or counter market, but not the solicitation of such orders.	Provided that the provisions of this subsection shall not apply— (a) Where the shares to which the offer relates are shares which are quoted on, or in respect of which permission to deal has been granted by, any recognized stock exchange in Great Britain and the offer so states and specifies the stock exchange; or (sec. 356 (2)).	This proviso in the British act is contained in the subsection which otherwise requires any written offer to the public or a member of the public (with certain other exceptions) to be accompanied by a writing containing certain information. (See sec. 356.)
(3) The issuance of a security of a person exchanged by it with its existing security holders exclusively, where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly in connection with such exchange; or the issuance of securities to the existing security holders or other existing creditors of a corporation in the process of a bona fide reorganization of such corporation under the supervision of any court, either in exchange for the securities of such security holders or claims of such creditors or partly for cash and partly in exchange for the securities or claims of such security holders or creditors.	(5) This section shall not apply to the issue to existing members or debenture holders of a company of a prospectus or form of application relating to shares in or debentures of the company, whether an applicant for shares or debentures will or will not have the right to renounce in favor of other persons, but subject as aforesaid, this section shall apply to a prospectus or a form of application whether issued on or with reference to the formation of a company or subsequently (sec. 35 (5)).	This exception in the British act applies to the entire section 35. In addition to the requirements shown in the next preceding comment, section 35 contains provisions relating to civil liability, etc., none of which apply to offers to existing stockholders or debenture holders.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933—CON.	BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—CON.	COMMENTS—CON.
Prohibitions relating to interstate commerce and the mails SEC. 5. (a) Unless a registration statement is in effect as to a security, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly— (1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to sell or offer to buy such security through the use or medium of any prospectus or otherwise; or (2) to carry or cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce, by any means or instruments of transportation, any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale. (b) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly— (1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to carry or transmit any prospectus relating to any security registered under this title, unless such prospectus meets the requirements of section 10; or (2) to carry or to cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale, unless accompanied or preceded by a prospectus that meets the requirements of section 10. (c) The provisions of this section relating to the use of the mails shall not apply to the sale of any security where the issue of which it is a part is sold only to persons resident within a single State or Territory, where the issuer of such securities is a person resident and doing business within, or, if a corporation, incorporated by and doing business within, such State or Territory.	(3) It shall not be lawful to issue any form of application for shares in or debentures of a company unless the form is issued with a prospectus which complies with the requirements of this section (sec. 35 (3)).	The United States act makes it unlawful to make any interstate sale or offer of sale of any security covered by the act unless a registration statement is in effect and further, prohibits the use of any prospectus that does not meet the requirements of section 10, and requires a security to be accompanied by or preceded by such a prospectus. The United States act covers many more transactions than the British act. Section 35 of the British act makes it unlawful to make an original offer to subscribe for securities unless the offer is accompanied by a prospectus which has been filed pursuant to the act.
	(2) Subject as hereinafter provided in this subsection, it shall not be lawful to make an offer in writing to any member of the public (not being a person whose ordinary business or part of whose ordinary business it is to buy or sell shares, whether as principal or agent) of any shares for purchase, unless the offer is accompanied by a statement in writing (which must be signed by the person making the offer and dated) containing such particulars as are required by this section to be included therein and otherwise complying with the requirements of this section, or, in the case of shares in a company incorporated outside of Great Britain, either by such a statement as aforesaid, or by such a prospectus as complies with this part of this act (sec. 356 (2)). Provided that the provisions of this subsection shall not apply— (a) where the shares to which the offer relates are shares which are quoted on, or in respect of which permission to deal has been granted by, any recognized stock exchange in Great Britain and the offer so states and specifies the stock exchange; or (b) where the shares to which the offer relates are shares which a company has allotted or agreed to allot with a view to their being offered for sale to the public; or (c) where the offer was made only to persons with whom the person making the offer has been in the habit of doing regular business in the purchase or sale of shares (sec. 356 (2)).	This subsection of the British act requires any offer of shares (other than as excepted as shown below) to be made in writing, but the exceptions are very broad. The exemptions from the requirements under the British act that an offer must be in writing (sec. 356 (2)) cover all securities quoted on or dealt in on stock exchanges in Great Britain, or securities allotted for sale to the public (see sec. 38), or where the offer was made to regular customers.
Registration of securities and signing of registration statement SEC. 6. (a) Any security may be registered with the Commission under the terms and conditions hereinafter provided by filing a registration statement in triplicate, at least one of which shall be signed by each issuer, its principal executive officer or officers, its principal financial officer, its comptroller or principal accounting officer, and the majority of its board of directors or persons performing similar functions (or, if there is no board of directors or persons performing similar functions, by the majority of the persons or board having the power of management of the issuer), and in case the issuer is a foreign or Territorial person by its duly authorized representative in the United States; except that when such registration statement relates to a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, it need be signed only by the underwriter of such security. Signatures of all such persons when written on the said registration statements shall be presumed to have been so written by authority of the person whose signature is so affixed and the burden of proof, in the event such authority shall be denied, shall be upon the party denying the same. The affixing of any signature without the authority of the purported signer shall constitute a violation of this title. A registration statement shall be deemed effective only as to the securities specified therein as proposed to be offered.	(2) A copy of every such prospectus, signed by every person who is named therein as a director or proposed director of the company, or by his agent authorized in writing, shall be delivered to the registrar of companies for registration on or before the date of its publication, and no such prospectus shall be issued until a copy thereof has been so delivered for registration (sec. 34 (2)). (3) The registrar shall not register any prospectus unless it is dated, and the copy thereof signed, in manner required by this section (sec. 34 (3)).
	(3) Section 34 of this act as applied by this section shall have effect as though the persons making the offer were persons named in a prospectus as directors of a company * * * (sec. 38 (3)). (4) Where a person making an offer to which this section relates is a company or	Section 38 of the British act relates to the instances "where a company allots or agrees to allot any shares in or debentures of the company with a view to all or any of those shares or debentures being offered for sale to the public" (for example, sold to a dealer for resale to the public) and pro-

	a firm, it shall be sufficient if the document aforesaid be signed on behalf of the company or firm by two directors of the company or not less than half of the partners, as the case may be, and any such director or partner may sign by his agent authorized in writing (sec. 38 (4)).	vides that the offer for sale to the public by such person (i.e., dealer) shall be deemed a prospectus. The dealer is required in such instance to sign the prospectus.
(b) At the time of filing a registration statement the applicants shall pay to the Commission a fee of 0.01 of 1 percent of the maximum aggregate price at which such securities are proposed to be offered, but in no case shall such fee be less than $25. (c) The filing with the Commission of a registration statement, or of an amendment to a registration statement, shall be deemed to have taken place upon the receipt thereof, but the filing of a registration statement shall not be deemed to have taken place unless it is accompanied by a United States postal money order or a certified bank check or cash for the amount of the fee required under subsection (b). (d) The information contained in or filed with any registration statement shall be made available to the public under such regulations as the Commission may prescribe, and copies thereof, photostatic or otherwise, shall be furnished to every applicant at such reasonable charge as the Commission may prescribe. (e) No registration statement may be filed within the first 40 days following the enactment of this act.
Information required in registered statement SEC. 7. The registration statement, when relating to a security other than a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the information, and be accompanied by the documents, specified in schedule A, and when relating to a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the information, and be accompanied by the documents, specified in schedule B; except that the Commission may by rules or regulations provide that any such information or document need not be included in respect of any class of issuers or securities if it finds that the requirement of such information or document is inapplicable to such class and that disclosure fully adequate for the protection of investors is otherwise required to be included within the registration statement. If any accountant, engineer, or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him, is named as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement, or is named as having prepared or certified a report or valuation for use in connection with the registration statement, the written consent of such person shall be filed with the registration statement. If any such person is named as having prepared or certified a report or valuation (other than a public official document or statement) which is used in connection with the registration statement, but is not named as having prepared or certified such report or valuation for use in connection with the registration statement, the written consent of such person shall be filed with the registration statement unless the Commission dispenses with such filing as impracticable or as involving undue hardship on the person filing the registration statement. Any such registration statement shall contain such other information, and be accompanied by such other documents, as the Commission may by rules or regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.	35. (1) Every prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company, or by or on behalf of any person who is or has been engaged or interested in the formation of the company, must state the matters specified in part I of the fourth schedule to this act and set out the reports specified in part II of that schedule, and the said parts I and II shall have effect subject to the provisions contained in part III of the said schedule (sec. 35). (4) Every prospectus shall state on the face of it that a copy has been delivered for registration as required by this section (sec. 34).
